REPORTS OF THE LAW OFFICERS OF THE CROWN: 1890.

BORNEO.

No. 1.

The Attorney-General to Foreign Office.—(Received August 13.)

[In answer to the following reference, the Attorney-General reports as below:—]

Foreign Office, August 12, 1890.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour to submit to you herewith, by direction of the Marquis of Salisbury, the papers noted in the margin,* relating to a question which has for a long time been pending between Her Majesty's Government and that of the Netherlands in regard to the boundary-line to be drawn between the Dutch possessions in Borneo and the territory of the British North Borneo Company.

It will not be necessary to trouble you with the early correspondence on this question, but only to give you a brief sketch of the present position of the case.

At a conference recently held at this Office between the Delegates of the two Governments to consider the exact position of the boundary, the principle of a "compromise" was agreed upon, whereby the point of departure of the boundary on the eastern coast of the island was fixed at a place call Broershoek, in parallel 4° 10′.

It will be observed from the Memorandum communicated to Lord Salisbury on the 2nd April last by the Netherland Minister at this Court that his Government propose to agree to accept the principle of the above "compromise," on the understanding that Her Majesty's Government undertake to agree, at the same time, to the delimitation of the boundary-lines which separate the Dutch possessions in Borneo from the States of Brunei and Sarawak, respectively, as far as Tandjong-Datoe on the western coast.

In the year 1888 Agreements were signed between Her Majesty's Government, the Sultan of Brunei, the Rajah of Sarawak, and the British North Borneo Company, respectively, for the establishment of a British Protectorate over those States. (See Parliamentary Paper "Borneo No. 1, 1888.")

The Netherland Government subsequently desired to be informed as to what Her Majesty's Government considered to be the boundaries of the States of Brunei and Sarawak, which had recently been taken under British protection.

The Acting British Consul-General at Brunei was accordingly instructed to inquire of the Sultan of Brunei what he considered to be the boundary-line between his territory and the Dutch possessions. In reply, the Sultan frankly admitted (Mr. Hamilton, No. 6, of the 5th November, 1889), that he knew nothing whatever about the matter; and, on the same question being put by Mr. Hamilton to Rajah Brooke, the Rajah said that the inland boundary of Sarawak was determined by the watershed of the rivers; that is to say, that the country drained by the rivers running to the east coast of Borneo belonged to the Dutch, and, similarly, that on the west coast belonged to Sarawak.

In sending this definition of the boundary home, Mr. Hamilton, however, stated that the exact boundary had never been determined, because no one knew how the surface drainage runs; although he added that at one or two places the exact boundary had been adjusted by an amicable agreement.

The above information was not communicated to the Netherland Government.

The Netherland Government now inquire, in their Memorandum of the 2nd April, whether Her Majesty's Government are prepared to accept the lines of boundary which separate those States from the Dutch possessions in Borneo as defined in the Dutch official Map.

It has been shown that no attempt has ever been made on the part of the Rulers of those States to mark the boundaries between their possessions and those of the Dutch; and fruitless delay would manifestly be occasioned if further inquiries were now to be made on the spot as to the actual boundaries in question.

Under these circumstances, Her Majesty's Government are prepared to accept the definition of the boundary as claimed by the Netherland Government, subject to any modifications which may hereafter be agreed upon.

But, as it would appear to be doubtful whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in accepting such a definition of the boundaries on behalf of the States concerned without having previously obtained the consent of the Rulers of those States, Lord Salisbury would be glad to be favoured with your opinion and observations on this point.

The draft of the reply which it is proposed to return to Count Bylandt's Memorandum is submitted herewith for your concurrence.

I have, &c.
(Signed) P. W. CURRIE.

BORNEO COMPANY: DELIMITATION OF BOUNDARY.

Dear Sir Philip Currie, House of Commons, August 13, 1890.

Delimitation of boundary between Dutch possessions in Borneo and territories of Sultan of Brunei, Rajah of Sarawak, and British North Borneo Company, respectively.

AS a messenger has called for the papers received this morning on this matter, with a request that they may be sent back "done or undone," I have thought it best to look at them at once, to see if I can answer the question off-hand. The Solicitor-General is absent, so you must take this as my opinion only; but if any of the territory proposed to be given to the Dutch under the boundary compromise is in fact part of the possessions of Brunei or Sarawak, Her Majesty's Government would not be justified in accepting such a definition, so as to bind the Rulers of those States without their consent.

I gather from the papers that there is considerable doubt about the boundaries between Brunei and Sarawak respectively and the Dutch territory, but it seems to me that it would not be proper for Her Majesty's Government to attempt to bind the Rulers of these countries, by virtue of the Protectorate, to that which may be a cession of territory, without their consent.

Of course, Her Majesty's Government could agree, so far as they are concerned, but that, I apprehend, is not what is required. Failing consent of the Rulers, some reservation should be inserted in the formal Agreement.

In view of the uncertainty as to the boundary, and the statements contained in Consul-General's letter of the 5th November, it is, I think, scarcely necessary to alter the draft reply to Count Bylandt, but the point should not be overlooked in preparing the formal Agreement, in the event of any difficulty arising with the Rulers. If, however, it is thought desirable to reserve the question on the face of the reply, some words might be added to the effect that the reply is sent on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, and not on that of the Rulers. Personally, I should doubt the prudence of making any such addition.

Kindly excuse the haste with which I have been compelled to write.

In the event of any further reference, kindly direct a copy of this letter to be sent with the papers, as I have no copy.

I am, &c.
(Signed) RICHARD E. WEBSTER.

Annex.

Draft of Letter to Count Bylandt.

M. le Ministre, Foreign Office, August , 1890.

ON the 2nd April last I had the honour to receive from you a Memorandum containing certain proposals which the Netherland Government have made with a view to the settlement of the questions in regard to the lines of boundary between the Dutch possessions in Borneo and the territories of the Sultan of Brunei, the Rajah of Sarawak, and the British North Borneo Company, respectively.

The Netherland Government propose in effect:—

Boundary proposed by Netherland Government.

1. That the principle of a "compromise" agreed upon between the Delegates at the recent Conference as to the boundary between the Dutch possessions and the British North Borneo Company being accepted by the Netherland Government, and Broershoek in parallel 4° 10′ being fixed as the starting point of the boundary on the eastern coast, Her Majesty's Government should undertake to agree, at the same time, to the delimitation of the boundary-lines which separate the Dutch possessions in Borneo from the States of Brunei and Sarawak, respectively, as far as Tandjong-Datoe on the western coast. So far, however, as the territory of the British North Borneo Company is concerned, it is proposed that the line of watershed of the Rivers Simengaris and Soedong, as marked on a tracing which accompanied the Memorandum in question, should divide the Netherland possessions from those of the Company, leaving the exact boundary-line to be traced hereafter on the spot by a Mixed Commission;

2. That the Island of Sibittik should remain to the Netherlands;

3. That the navigation of all rivers flowing into the sea between Batoe-Tinagat and the River Siboekoe should be free, except for transport of war material; and

4. That, in the event of Broershoek being fixed as the point of departure of the boundary on the coast, the population of Boelongan should be allowed to collect jungle produce for fifteen years, free from tax or duty.

Counter-proposals and suggestions of British North Borneo Company, which are concurred in by H. M.'s Govt.

These proposals having been submitted to the Court of Directors of the British North Borneo Company for their observations, I have the honour to inform you that the Company have now made the following suggestions and counter-proposals, which are concurred in by Her Majesty's Government:—

1. They are prepared to accept Broershoek, the point on the coast where the parallel of 4° 10′ north latitude meets the sea, and to give up their claim to any territory on the coast south of this point, provided that the Netherland Government agree to surrender their claim to any territory to the north of that parallel, including Batoe-Tinagat, and any places which they may have occupied on the Tavao River, and that the other portions of the proposed arrangement are satisfactorily settled.

They object to accept the line of watershed of the Rivers Simengaris and Soedong as their boundary, for the following reasons:—First, because the mountain ranges are utterly unknown, no one having ever attempted to fix any of them, either geodetically or astronomically; and, secondly, because the tracing annexed to your Memorandum is made from an unofficial Map, and not from an actual survey.

They therefore propose to follow the principle adopted in tracing similar boundaries in unknown and unexplored countries—in New Guinea, for instance,—namely, by accepting a parallel of latitude; and they suggest that the boundary-line should run along the parallel of 4° 10′ north latitude until it reached the mountain range which separates the Netherland possessions from those of Brunei. This, the Company consider, would be equally fair to both parties, inasmuch as it is absolutely a matter of conjecture where the rivers rise which empty themselves into the sea to the north or south of Broershoek at 4° 10′ north latitude.

Should the Netherland Government accept this line of boundary, Her Majesty's Government would be prepared to recognize the dividing lines, already marked on the Dutch official Map,* as those which separate the Dutch possessions from the States of Brunei and Sarawak, respectively, leaving any differences which might possibly hereafter arise with regard to the actual position of any particular locality to be settled by mutual agreement between the British and Netherland Governments.

2. The British North Borneo Company are very anxious that the Island of Sibittik should be recognized as being within the boundary of their possessions, or that the boundary-line should run along the parallel of 4° 10′ eastward as well as westward from Broershoek, so as to divide the island equally between themselves and the Netherland Government. But Her Majesty's Government are desirous to arrive at a speedy settlement of this long-vexed question, and they would therefore not press this point on behalf of the Company, provided that the Netherland Government would be prepared to lease the northern part of the island to the Company in perpetuity for a nominal rental, and would undertake to leave the Company in quiet and peaceable possession of it.

3. They are willing to agree that the navigation of all the rivers between Batoe-Tinagat and the Siboekoe River should be free, except for transport of war material, on the understanding that the Netherland Government give a similar undertaking; and

4. They are prepared to agree that the population of Boelongan should be allowed to collect jungle produce for fifteen years, free from any tax or duty.

On hearing from you that the counter-proposals herein made are accepted by the Netherland Government, I shall have the honour to submit, for your approval, a draft Agreement, in order that the result of the negotiations which have passed on the subject between our respective Governments may be formally recorded.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 4th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to submit to us the accompanying draft of an Order in Council, to be known as "The Brunei Order in Council, 1890," which had been prepared by Mr. Wright, under instructions from the Foreign Office, to provide for the exercise of Her Majesty's extra-territorial jurisdiction within the dominions and territories of the Sultan of Brunei.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to inclose letters from the Home Office, Colonial Office, India Office, and the Treasury;* and that he was to request that we would take the draft Order into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether it might properly be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval, and with any general observations which we might have to offer.

No. 3.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received February 15.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, February 11, 1890.

Proposed new Naturalization Law.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. Sanderson's letter of the 15th November last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch (No. 21, Treaty, of the 12th October, 1889) which had been received from Her Majesty's Minister at Rio de Janeiro with reference to the project for a new Law on naturalization, which it was believed that the Brazilian Government intended to present to the Chambers during the next Session, commencing on the 20th November.

Foreigners after two years' residence to be considered Brazilians unless they make declaration to contrary effect within six months of passing of Law.

That Mr. Wyndham inclosed an extract from the Brazilian newspaper "O. Paiz" of the 21st September last, giving the text of the proposed Law, which, as would be seen, provided (amongst other things) that foreigners residing in the Empire for the period of two consecutive years, and who within six months therefrom, and after the promulgation of the Law, did not declare their desire to retain their nationality, should, for all legal purposes, be considered Brazilian subjects as if they had been born in Brazil.

That the terms of the proposed Law were of a somewhat unusual nature, and appeared likely to place British subjects residing in Brazil in a more unfavourable position than they then occupied.

As to a protest by H. M.'s Govt.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was therefore to request that we would take the projected Bill into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government was, from the point of view of international right, either called upon to make, or justified in making, any protest against such a Law, and, if so, to what particular point or points the protest should be especially directed.

Decree of Provisional Govt.

We have also the honour to acknowledge the receipt of a note from Sir Thomas Sanderson, dated the 6th January last, inclosing a despatch (No. 23, Treaty, of the 9th December, 1889) from Her Majesty's Minister at Rio de Janeiro, transmitting a copy and translation of a Decree of the Provisional Government of Brazil respecting naturalization.

We were further honoured with a letter from Sir Thomas Sanderson, dated the 18th January last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us some further papers which had been received from Her Majesty's Minister at Rio de Janeiro with reference to the new Brazilian Naturalization Law.

That it would be observed that since the reference of the 15th November was made to us, the Law in question had passed, apparently without any modifications of an essential character, from the form of a project or Bill into that of a substantive enactment or Decree which was promulgated by the Provisional Government of the Brazilian Republic on the 15th December last.

That that Government had, since the date of the publication of the project of the Naturalization Law, de facto, replaced the Government of His Majesty the then Emperor of Brazil under which that project was evolved. That this Provisional Government might be said to have been tacitly acquiesced in by the population at large, but that it had not yet been accepted as a Constitutional Government by the expressed popular vote of the Brazilian nation, nor had it received any formal recognition from the Governments of the Great European Powers, including that of Great Britain.

As to recognition of Provisional Govt., and consequent recognition or otherwise of their Decree by H. M.'s Govt.

That it appeared, therefore, open to doubt whether Her Majesty's Government were bound, under present circumstances at any rate, to recognize any Decree emanating from such a source, or to regard it, in so far as it purported to affect the subjects of Her Majesty, as otherwise than the arbitrary act of an Administration clothed merely with self-assumed and temporary powers, and consequently as a measure possessing no permanent authority nor binding force.

That, on that question, however, your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion. But that there were, apart from that point, other considerations of importance which arose in connection with the actual wording of the Decree itself, and that to those Sir T. Sanderson was also to direct our attention.

That the rules laid down in Articles 1 and 2 of that Decree appeared to constitute an innovation upon the principle ordinarily recognized as applicable to changes of nationality, viz., that a foreigner resident abroad was to be considered as retaining his original national status until he himself took steps to change it, and that it was thought that these Articles might call for some observations on the part of Her Majesty's Government. That it would be observed that they put upon a foreigner resident in Brazil the onus of declaring that he wished to retain the nationality with which he entered that country, or in the alternative of becoming by mere efflux of time, unaccompanied by any expression of intention, or other direct action on his part, a Brazilian citizen.

That apart from the objection on general grounds which had already been pointed out to such a provision, it seemed open to grave doubt whether British subjects so becoming naturalized in Brazil by the mere operation of the Decree in question could be considered to have become "voluntarily naturalized in a foreign State" within the meaning and intent of section 6 of "The Naturalization Act, 1870."

That if such British subjects could not, having regard to the circumstances attendant upon their alleged naturalization, properly be regarded as having been voluntarily naturalized in Brazil in contemplation of the English Statute now governing that question, it might be incumbent upon Her Majesty's Government also to protest, on that special ground, against the application to British subjects of a Decree which, if its validity were recognized, might not merely confer Brazilian nationality upon them against their will, but might, as a consequence, also deprive them while in Brazil of the right, which they would otherwise enjoy, of being protected in that country as elsewhere by Her Majesty's Government as subjects of the Queen.

That it had also been suggested that some distinction in that regard might possibly be drawn and urged upon the attention of whatever Government might be ultimately recognized in Brazil, between British subjects who might establish themselves in that country subsequently to the promulgation of that Decree, and who might therefore be taken to have done so with notice, either actual or constructive, of its provisions, and British subjects who had already become resident therein prior to the Decree, and under a Naturalization Law more usual, as well as more favourable to them, in its provisions.

That a protest based either upon the general or special grounds indicated above would embrace the case of all British subjects alike, whether resident in Brazil for their own private purposes or in an official capacity.

Special case of H.M.'s Consuls in Brazil.

But that if, on the other hand (assuming that the Decree was to be regarded as the act of a competent authority), it should be considered that Her Majesty's Government were not legally justified in basing any protest, in so far as British subjects in general were affected thereby, upon the mere wording of its provisions, it was still thought that Her Majesty's Government should require some definite assurance that no attempt would be made to apply it to the case of British subjects in the Consular Service of Her Majesty, whose residence in Brazil, although not covered by diplomatic privilege, was in furtherance of a public duty and not in pursuit of private interests.

That a Memorandum dealing with various precedents bearing on some of the points above indicated had been prepared and was inclosed for our assistance.

That Sir T. Sanderson was to request that we would take the Decree of the 15th December, 1889, and the other papers transmitted therewith, into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the various questions raised in his letter, as well as with any general observations which we might desire to add upon its subject.

We have taken all the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

No ground for protest agst. proposed Law.

That, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government was not called upon, from the point of view of international right, to protest against the proposed Law of the 21st September, 1889.

The Decree of the 26th November, 1889, is not open to objection.

Cannot object to Decree on ground that Govt. is provisional.

With regard to the Decree of the Provisional Government, 1889, no objection can, in our opinion, be properly founded on the fact that the Government is provisional, it being, as we understand, in effective, unresisted, and peaceful possession of power.

To protest against shortness of period within which declaration must be made.

We think, however, that the proper course is for Her Majesty's Government to take note of the provisional character of the Government as recited in the Decree, and, further, to protest against the terms of the Decree upon the ground of the shortness of the period (six months from the 15th December, 1889) within which the foreigner must make the proposed declaration, and that the Decree proposes to change the status of foreigners already resident who fail to make a declaration within that period, whether they have notice of the terms of the Decree or not.

Liberty of future action and right to protect Bh. subjects.

Her Majesty's Government should reserve to themselves liberty of future action, and also reserve their right to protect any persons whose rights of British nationality are unduly prejudiced by the Decree or its operation.

Position of Consuls.

No special objection can, in our opinion, be founded on the position of Consuls.

Persons, after notice and opportunity, abstaining from making declaration to be held as having become voluntarily naturalized in Brazil.

In our opinion a person who, with notice of the Law and an opportunity of making the declaration therein mentioned, abstains from making such declaration, would be properly held to have voluntarily become naturalized in Brazil within section 6 of the Act of 1870, and to have thereby lost his status as a British subject.

Brazilian Law on Naturalization.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the further papers noted in the accompanying list, which related to the new Brazilian Law on Naturalization.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to inform us that on the receipt of our Report of the 11th February last your Lordship caused instructions founded upon it to be sent to Mr. Wyndham, Her Majesty's Minister at Rio de Janeiro (to Mr. Wyndham, 26th February, 1890), but that in consequence of a note received from the Italian Ambassador at this Court (from Count Tornielli, 3rd March, 1890) intimating a desire on the part of the Italian Government that the Representatives in Brazil of Great Britain and Italy should act in concert in the matter, Mr. Wyndham was subsequently desired by telegraph to delay acting upon his instructions until he received further directions (to Mr. Wyndham, 7th March, 1890).

That copies of the instructions to Mr. Wyndham were sent on the 10th March to Her Majesty's Representatives to the Great Powers and Belgium (10th March, 1890).

That they were informed that, at the request of the Italian Ambassador, Mr. Wyndham had been desired to delay acting upon his instructions, and that they were instructed to inquire whether the Governments to which they were accredited intended to address any communication to the Brazilian Government on the subject of the Decree.

Note proposed to be addressed to Govt. of Brazil by European Powers.

That on the 15th March the Italian Ambassador (from Count Tornielli, 15th March, 1890) forwarded a copy of a draft note which the Italian Government proposed should be addressed to the Government of Brazil by the European Powers. That a copy of that draft note was sent to Her Majesty's Representatives on the 22nd March.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to inclose despatches from Her Majesty's Ambassadors at Paris, Berlin, St. Petersburgh, Vienna, and Madrid which showed that, with the exception of Russia, who was not directly interested in the matter, the Great Powers were in the main disposed to agree in the views contained in the note prepared by the Italian Government.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to add that Portugal, which was probably as much interested in the matter as any of the European Powers, had also been invited by Italy to join the Great Powers in a collective representation, and that, under those circumstances, it had been thought well to instruct Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon to communicate a copy of the despatch to Mr. Wyndham of the 26th February to the Portuguese Government, and to inquire whether they intended to address any representation to the Brazilian Government on the subject of the Decree (to Mr. Pètre, 15th April, 1890).

That as, however, some time might probably elapse before a definite reply could be received from the Portuguese Government, and that as replies had now been obtained from all the other Powers concerned, your Lordship was anxious, without further delay, to be favoured with our views upon the terms of the Memorandum proposed by the Italian Government.

That it would be observed that the last paragraph of that Memorandum appeared to be couched in somewhat uncompromising terms, and that it was thought possible that the Brazilian Government might feel some difficulty in guiding their action in accordance with a criticism thus expressed.

That, at the same time, Her Majesty's Government were anxious, in so far as they properly could, to concur in language which had already obtained general acceptance on the part of the other Powers interested, and were desirous not to weaken the effect of the proposed identic representation by expressing any reservations upon its terms unless we should consider that course either necessary or prudent from a legal point of view.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to add that the Italian Ambassador was pressing for an expression of the views of Her Majesty's Government in order that instructions might at once be sent to the Italian Representative at Rio.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was therefore to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion on the questions more particularly raised therein, as well as with any general observations which we might have to offer on the Memorandum prepared by the Italian Government.

We were also honoured with a note from Sir Thomas Sanderson, dated the 18th instant, inclosing a further despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris (from Lord Lytton, 15th April, 1890) in regard to the new Decree.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

H. M.'s Govt. may properly join in note proposed by Italian Govt.

That, in our opinion, the note proposed by the Italian Government places the protest on somewhat higher grounds, and goes rather beyond that which, if the note had been framed by Her Majesty's Government, we should have suggested; but there is nothing in it inconsistent with the grounds upon which a protest should be based, as stated in our Report of the 11th February, 1890, and, in view of the importance of concerted action, Her Majesty's Government may, in our opinion, properly join therein.

Complaint of Nitrate Railways Company against Chilean Government for infraction of Concessions granted by Peruvian Government.

That it would be seen that the Company was an English Company with a large capital; that it had purchased the benefit of three Concessions of railways granted by the Peruvian Government in 1868, 1869, and 1871, with certain limitations; that there were various Decrees of the Chilean Government, which acquired the province within which the railways were situated after the war with Peru, recognizing the rights of the Company, but that the Chilean Government had now declared the third Concession void, and invited tenders for the construction of competing lines.

That a statement by the Nitrate Railways Company as to the Concessions under which the lines were built, and with respect to the question which had arisen with the Government of Chile regarding the third Concession, was inclosed for our information.

That the Company had appealed to the Law Courts of Chile, and that the Supreme Court of Chile had decided that the question was one for the Courts to determine.

That notwithstanding that, the Government refused the intervention of the Courts.

That the Company had obtained legal opinions, of which copies were annexed, in support of their contention, and now asked that Her Majesty's Government should make a strong representation to the Chilean Government to the effect that their action was a breach of faith.

That the matter pressed somewhat as the tenders for the competing railways, against which the Company protested as an infraction of their Concessions, were invited on the 1st March, but that, before taking the action desired by the Company, your Lordship would be glad to be favoured, at our earliest possible convenience, with our opinion as to whether, under the circumstances, Her Majesty's Government would be justified in so doing; and, if so, on what grounds a remonstrance might most advantageously be based.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

To protest against infraction of Concession; legality of which to be determined by Chilean Tribunals.

That, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government would be justified in protesting against the proposed infraction of the exclusive privilege granted by the Concession of 1871, on the ground that there has been no breach by the Company of any obligation imposed upon it by the transfer of the Concessions approved and recognized by the Peruvian and Chilean Governments; and that if any such infraction were alleged the Company is entitled to have the question of the legality of the forfeiture of the Concession determined in due course of law by the Chilean Tribunals.

Documents respecting wreck of the "Tycoon," lodged at Valparaiso Consulate, wanted by Mr. F. Hill for production at trial.

That Mr. Hill, who represented himself to be acting for Captain Rickaby, the late master, and for Mr. S. C. Love, the owner, of the sailing-ship "Tycoon," which, having put into Valparaiso through stress of weather, was subsequently condemned and sold there, had lodged with the underwriters in England a claim on behalf of his clients.

That the settlement was said to be delayed because the set of papers which the master brought home with him had been either lost or mislaid by the underwriters to whom it had been intrusted for purposes of reference by the solicitor to the owner and master.

That the owner of the vessel had obtained payment on one of the policies on the ship, but that in the present instance the underwriters had made an offer in way of settlement which the owner considered so unsatisfactory as to induce him to bring an action against them upon the insurance policy

That documents similar to those which were not forthcoming were lodged at the British Consulate at Valparaiso, and that they had now been sent to the Foreign Office in order that they might be produced at the trial, if necessary, by one of the staff of the Librarian's Department under a subpœna duces tecum.

That Mr. Hill represented that, in order to bring his clients' case properly before the Court, it was necessary for counsel to be furnished with a copy of the documents, as questions in the action would turn on their construction, viz., whether the ship was a total loss or a constructive total loss, and whether the owner should not have had her repaired instead of being condemned by the surveyors.

That copies of various Reports which had from time to time been furnished by previous Law Officers upon applications of a somewhat analogous kind were inclosed, but that it would be observed that in none of those cases were the circumstances identical with those in the present instance.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the correspondence into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether, under the circumstances, Mr. Hill should be allowed to inspect the papers in question which were now in the Foreign Office, and whether he should be permitted to take or be supplied with copies of such of them as he might consider, after such inspection, material for the purpose of instructing counsel or otherwise in the conduct of the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Mr. Hill may inspect and have copies.

That it is not, in our opinion, desirable that, as a rule, the Foreign Office should furnish documents to private litigants, but, under the special circumstances of the case, we think that Mr. Hill may properly be allowed to inspect and have copies of the papers in question.

Questions between Chilean Govt. and Nitrate Railways Company.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, which related to the questions pending between the Chilean Government and the Nitrate Railways Company.

That Sir T. V. Lister was to invite our attention to the copy of the Report already received from us on the matter, which was dated the 10th February last.

That since the date of that Report further representations on the subject had been received from Mr. Budd and Colonel North, who represented the interests of the Nitrate Railways Company, and also from Mr. Gibbs, who, representing adverse interests, contended that the Nitrate Railways Company were not entitled to the support of Her Majesty's Government.

That we should see that, on the receipt of our Report above referred to, Mr. Kennedy, Her Majesty's Minister in Chile, was directed to protest against the proposed infraction by the Chilean Government of the exclusive privilege granted by the Concession to Messrs. Montero Brothers in 1871; and that on the 15th February Mr. Kennedy reported the action he had taken in conformity with his instructions.

That the views of the several parties interested were given in the papers marked (E), (G), (H), (K), (L), (O), (R), (W), (X).

That on the 21st March Mr. Kennedy reported that the Chilean Government regretted that diplomatic intervention had been sought in support of the claims of the Nitrate Company.

That on the 23rd ultimo he was instructed by telegraph to reserve the rights of the Company, which it was understood from his telegram of the 21st were being set aside by the publication in the official Chilean Gazette of an acceptance of a tender for the construction of a new railway unreservedly.

That on the 1st instant Mr. Kennedy sent home the purport of the Chilean reply to the representation he had addressed to them on the 15th February. That the Memorandum therein referred to had not yet reached the Foreign Office, but that it was founded, as reported by Mr. Kennedy on the 24th February, on the instructions sent to him by your Lordship on the 12th of that month.

That Article 15 of the Concession alluded to would be found at p. 53 of the paper marked (B). That its terms were as follows:—

"The applicants or the Company which they may organize shall have the right to transfer, wholly or in part, their rights to the road from La Noria to the frontier of Bolivia, with permission of the Government expressed in a public document. If the transfer should be made in favour of foreigners, they shall be subject to the laws of the country, without the power of having recourse to any diplomatic intervention."

That it would be seen that the contention of the Chilean Government briefly was that under the terms of that Article, and in view of the fact that the forfeiture of the privileges conferred upon the Company was declared in conformity with the laws of the Republic, there was no locus standi for diplomatic intervention on behalf of the transferees.

That Sir T. V. Lister was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to what answer, having regard to all the circumstances, should now be returned to the Chilean note. That your Lordship would, at the same time, be glad to be favoured with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have also the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a telegram from the Company's representative at Santiago, showing that the Chilean Government had now advertised for tenders for two more lines of railway in the districts covered by the Company's Concessions, which, if completed, would have the most serious effect on the traffic of the Company's lines. That an explanatory Map was also inclosed, on which the position of the proposed railways was roughly indicated in pencil.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would have the goodness to take the papers inclosed in his letter into our consideration, together with those already submitted to us on the subject.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Case is one of considerable difficulty.

That the further papers in this case raise a question of considerable difficulty.

In the last paragraph but one of the Memorandum of Mr. Budd, dated the 4th February, 1890, it was stated that although the Supreme Court of Chile had decided that the question between the Government and the Railway Company was for the decision of the Chilean Tribunals, the Government, on the advice of the Council of State, was paying no regard whatever to the decision, and that the Company's representative was satisfied that the Chilean Government were aware of the illegality of their acts.

Illegality of acts of Chilean Govt.

In the further papers, and particularly in the representations of Messrs. Gibbs and Co., it is alleged that the Council of State have the right of reviewing and, if they think fit, overruling the decision of the Supreme Court.

H. M.'s Govt. justified in enforcing upon Chilean Govt. the claims of Nitrate Railways Co.

If Her Majesty's Government are advised that by the Constitution of Chile this right of review and reversal by the Council of State exists, the ground of protest indicated in our Report of the 10th February, 1890, would, to a great extent, be removed; but as in that case the protection contemplated by clauses 16 of the first Concession, 12 of the second Concession, and 15 of the third Concession, would practically be inoperative, we think that Her Majesty's Government will be justified in taking any measures which to them may seem appropriate for maintaining the protest of the 13th February, 1890, and enforcing upon the Chilean Government the claims of the Nitrate Railways Company. The right of diplomatic intervention belongs to the Government, and not to the individual.

Royal Courts of Justice, February 7, 1890.

My Lord,

Jurisdiction of Bishops of China, Japan, and Corea; as to alteration of limits of.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 7th December last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to a suggestion made by his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury that the Province of Shing King, in Manchuria, should be included in the district over which the newly consecrated Bishop of Corea, Bishop Corfe, would have ecclesiastical supervision.

That the Act 5 Vict., cap. 6, empowered the Archbishop of Canterbury, or the Archbishop of York, for the time being, to consecrate British subjects, or the subjects or citizens of any foreign kingdom or State, to be Bishops in any foreign country.

That section 2 of the same Act enacted that spiritual jurisdiction might be exercised by such Bishops so consecrated within such limits as might from time to time be assigned for that purpose in such foreign countries; and that section 3 prescribed that Her Majesty's Licence, by Warrant under her Royal Signet and Sign Manual, should be obtained for the Bishop's consecration.

That the circumstances in which licences had at various times been issued, under the powers conferred by that Act, for the consecration of Bishops in China, and that the limits of episcopal jurisdiction which had been from time to time assigned to them were set out in a Memorandum drawn up in the Librarian's Department of the Foreign Office, dated the 15th November, 1889.

That drafts of the licences themselves were inclosed, together with the licence authorizing the consecration of the Rev. C. J. Corfe as Bishop of the new diocese of Corea.

That it would be seen from the Memorandum above mentioned that some confusion had arisen as to the limits of the jurisdictions, respectively, of the Bishops of North, Mid, and South China, but that two Circulars to Her Majesty's Consuls in China, dated the 13th May, 1875, defined the limits of the jurisdictions of the Bishops of North and Mid China.

That the alterations, however, which had from time to time been made in the limits of the three dioceses in question had never received Her Majesty's formal sanction.

That it appeared, for instance, from a Commission granted by the Archbishop of Canterbury to Bishop Burdon on the 16th March, 1874, a copy of which was inclosed with Mr. Lee's letter of the 23rd April, 1875, that he was invested with Episcopal authority in Victoria, Hong Kong, and in the Empire of China to the south of the 28th degree of north latitude, and in the Empire of Japan, but that in 1883 a Bishop was appointed for Japan, and that, in the Queen's Licence for his consecration, Japan was assigned as the limit within which he might exercise spiritual jurisdiction.

That the correspondence which led to Japan being originally placed under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Victoria, Hong Kong, was described in the Memorandum dated the 8th September, 1884, and that, in consequence of doubts having arisen as to a possible conflict of jurisdiction between the Bishop of the Church of England in Japan and the Bishop of Victoria, Hong Kong, a Circular was addressed to Her Majesty's Consular officers in Japan, on the 4th January, 1887, after communication with the Archbishop of Canterbury, informing them that the superintendence hitherto exercised by the Bishop of Victoria, Hong Kong, over the ministers and congregations of the Church of England in Japan should thenceforth devolve upon the Bishop of Japan.

That Sir T. V. Lister was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the following points:—

1. Whether, in the event of an alteration being made in the limits of the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Corea, as proposed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the wording of the Act 5 Vict., cap. 6, and of the Royal Licence issued under that Act, required that Her Majesty's sanction should be given to such alteration;

2. If such sanction should be found to be necessary what form should it take; and

3. If Her Majesty's formal sanction was necessary to the alterations which had already been made from time to time in the limits of the dioceses of North, Mid, and South China, as originally defined, by what method could Her Majesty best express such sanction nunc pro tunc.

That your Lordship would be glad, at the same time, to be furnished with any general observations we might have to offer in connection with the matter.

We have taken the papers into our consideration and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Alteration in limits requires H. M.'s sanction.

1. That, in our opinion, any alteration in the limits of the jurisdiction of a Bishop consecrated under the Act 5 Vict., cap. 6, requires Her Majesty's sanction.

Form in which such sanction should be given.

2. That sanction should, in our opinion, be given by Warrant under the Royal Signet and Sign Manual.

3. We are not prepared to say that anything short of an Act of Parliament will suffice to give validity to acts done by the Bishop of Victoria, Hong Kong, in any places which are not British possessions as, in our judgment, if the Commission of 1875 was the only Commission held by Bishop Burdon it was not authorized by the Act, and was void so far as it proposed to give authority outside such possessions.

We are, however, of opinion that it is desirable that a Warrant should issue reciting the Commissions which have been issued to the five Bishops, whose cases are now before us, and assigning to each of them a particular district which must be, except in the case of Japan, described by proper geographical limitations.

It would, we think, be advisable that this Warrant should purport to ratify and confirm all acts heretofore done by either of such Bishops in pursuance of the Commission to him which is recited in the Warrant.

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received May 7.)

[After reciting the terms of the reference as below, the Law Officers report as on p. 17:—]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, April 8, 1890.

Gentlemen,

As to inclusion of Province of Shing King in ecclesiastical jurisdiction of Bishop of Corea.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquis of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list,* which relate to the suggestion made by his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury that the Province of Shing King, in Manchuria, should be included in the district over which the newly-consecrated Bishop of Corea, Bishop Corfe, would have ecclesiastical supervision.

As you are aware, some confusion had arisen in regard to the limits of the episcopal jurisdictions hitherto exercised respectively by the Anglican Bishops of North, Mid, and South China; and in consequence of the proposed extension of the jurisdiction of the newly-appointed Bishop of Corea, it has been necessary carefully to examine the question of the limits within which the aforesaid Bishops might legally exercise such jurisdiction.

The correspondence on this subject was referred to you on the 7th December last, and your views on the several points then submitted for your consideration were contained in a Report dated the 7th February, 1890 (see paper marked Q).

The substance of that Report was then communicated to the Archbishop of Canterbury (paper R), and he was at the same time informed that Lord Salisbury would await his Grace's observations before taking any steps in the matter.

The Archbishop has now furnished Lord Salisbury with his remarks on the question in a letter dated the 14th March (paper S), in which he explains the limits of jurisdiction hitherto exercised severally by the Bishops of—

1. Victoria, Hong Kong;
2. Mid and North China;
3. Japan; and

4. The limits of the ecclesiastical jurisdiction which it is now proposed shall be conferred on the new Bishop of Corea.

Limits of the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Victoria, Hong Kong.

1. Victoria, Hong Kong.—With regard to the case of the Bishop of Victoria, Hong Kong, it appears that he was consecrated under a licence issued by the Colonial Office, and under the provisions of 5 Vict., cap. 6 (commonly known as "The Jerusalem Act").

The Commission in the case of Victoria, Hong Kong, is not, except in so far as it relates to "foreign countries" outside the colonial possessions of Her Majesty, obnoxious to the same criticisms and observations as are applicable to the other cases. It appears, moreover, that when this Commission was issued the "foreign countries" to which it applied had not been brought within the operation of 5 Vict., cap. 6, and it is suggested that they remained consequently under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of London, in whom, by law or custom, general ecclesiastical jurisdiction is vested as regards all foreign countries or places where no special provision for other supervision has been made.

With reference to this latter point, it will be observed that, in the concluding paragraph of his letter of the 14th March, 1890, the Archbishop of Canterbury specially expresses his opinion that the Act 5 Vict., cap. 6, does not supersede the right of the Bishop of London to provide for spiritual jurisdiction in any foreign country which has not itself been brought under the operation of that Act.

Limits of the jurisdiction of Bishop of Mid and North China.

2. Mid and North China.—In both these cases the licence was obtained and the consecration took place (on the 28th October, 1880) under 5 Vict., cap. 6, and in each case the Bishop was consecrated to be a "Bishop of the Church of England in North China."

North China consists of such portions of the Empire of China as lie to the north of the 28th parallel of north latitude, and neither of the two Bishops mentioned has, since his consecration, exercised ecclesiastical jurisdiction outside of the limits assigned to him by his licence.

But on the day of consecration (26th October, 1880) the Archbishop of Canterbury gave to each Bishop a Letter Recommendatory, allocating to each that portion of North China in which he should exercise spiritual functions. From the copy of one of these Letters Recommendatory which is inclosed herewith it will be seen that the document in question is in no sense a Commission (as had been previously supposed), but it is rather to be regarded as a signification of the Archbishop's approval of a private arrangement which had been previously entered into by the two Bishops as to the limits of their respective spheres of labour within their joint Diocese.

Limits of the jurisdiction of Bishop of Japan.

3. Japan was withdrawn from the ecclesiastical jurisdiction which the Bishop of Victoria exercised there under his Commission, on the 31st October, 1884, and the present Bishop of Japan, who was consecrated under 5 Vict., cap. 6, exercises jurisdiction only in Japan, or within the limits mentioned in his licence. No Commission has been issued in this case.

Limits of jurisdiction of Bishop of Corea.

4. Corea.—The same remarks apply to this case as to that of Japan.

Under these circumstances it appears to his Grace that the two Bishops in North China are those only to whom it may now be necessary to assign ecclesiastical territorial jurisdiction in a somewhat more formal manner, and he suggests that it would be well to clearly define by Warrants the limits of those respective spheres of labour to which, as already explained, they have under a mutual arrangement, endorsed by the approval of his Grace, practically confined themselves throughout.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has also, through his Legal Secretary, Mr. H. W. Lee, furnished this Department with the following documents:—

(T.) Copy of an Agreement, dated the 26th October, 1880, entered into by the Bishops (elect), the Rev. G. E. Moule and the Rev. Charles Perry Scott, with regard to the scope of their functions within the Diocese of North China.

(U.) Copy of the Form of Letters Recommendatory addressed to the clergy and laity in North China in the case of Bishop Moule, by the Archbishop of Canterbury, dated the 18th October, 1880.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether, having regard to the further observations and explanations with which the Archbishop has been good enough to favour his Lordship, any existing difficulties may not be sufficiently met by adopting the suggestions made by his Grace in his letter of the 14th March last.

If, however, these should, in your judgment, be from a legal standpoint insufficient, Lord Salisbury would be glad to be favoured with your further opinion as to the mode and extent to which it may be desirable to supplement them.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. V. LISTER.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 8th ultimo, we have the honour to

Report—

As to suggestion of Archbishop of Canterbury that the limits of jurisdiction of Bishops of North and South China be defined by a Warrant under 5 Vict., cap. 6.

That we have considered the suggestion of his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury that the whole matter might be dealt with by a Warrant under 5 Vict., cap. 6, defining the limits of jurisdiction of the Bishops of North and South China; but we see no reason to modify the opinion expressed, or to alter the advice given, in our previous Report.

It is not doubted that a Warrant is required for the purpose of defining the limits of the two districts into which North China has by agreement been divided. The Warrant must also deal with Corea, as it is proposed to extend the jurisdiction of the newly-appointed Bishop.

Japan was included in the Commission to Bishop Burdon in March 1874, but was, nine years later, constituted a separate episcopal Diocese, without any revocation of the previous Commission.

See no reason to modify opinion in previous Report.

We remain of opinion that the Commission of Bishop Burdon was void as to any country or place outside of Her Majesty's dominions.

It will not be necessary to refer to the Letters Recommendatory given to Bishops Scott and Moule.

We have, &c.

My Lord,

Jurisdiction of English Bishops in China, Japan, and Corea.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 4th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 6th May last, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relating to the question of the jurisdiction of English Bishops in China, Japan, and Corea.

That, in accordance with the opinion given in our Report above referred to, a letter was addressed to the Archbishop of Canterbury on the 12th May last, inquiring whether his Grace could take steps to have a draft prepared of the necessary instrument for defining the limits of the episcopal jurisdiction of the English Bishops in those countries.

That the Archbishop had now submitted the draft of a Warrant, whereby the limits of jurisdiction at present desired might be duly assigned to the respective Bishops under the provisions of section 2 of the Act of Parliament 5 Vict., cap. 6.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the draft was drawn in suitable terms to meet the purpose for which it was designed, and might be prepared for the Queen's signature, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Approve draft Warrant as altered and initialled.

That, in our opinion, the draft Warrant, as altered and initialled by us, is in suitable terms, and may be prepared for Her Majesty's signature.

Victoria, by the grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland Queen, Defender of the Faith, &c.

WHEREAS by an Act passed in the fifth year of our reign, intituled, "An Act to amend an Act made in the twenty-sixth year of the reign of His Majesty King George III, intituled, 'An Act to empower the Archbishop of Canterbury, or the Archbishop of York, for the time being, to consecrate to the office of a Bishop persons being subjects or citizens of countries out of His Majesty's dominions'" (hereinafter called "the said Act"), it was amongst other things enacted that it should be lawful, our licence by Warrant under our Royal Signet and Sign-manual being first obtained, to consecrate British subjects, or the subjects or citizens of any foreign Kingdom or State, to be Bishops in any foreign country, as in the said Act mentioned;

And it was by the second section of the said Act further enacted that such Bishop or Bishops so consecrated might exercise, within such limits as might from time to time be assigned for that purpose in foreign countries by us, spiritual jurisdiction over the ministers of British congregations of the United Church of England and Ireland, and over such other Protestant congregations as might be desirous of placing themselves under his or their authority;

And whereas, in pursuance of our licence by a Warrant under our Royal Signet and Sign-manual, dated the 24th day of March, 1880, granted under the said Act, the Reverend George Evans Moule was, on the 28th day of October, 1880, duly consecrated to be a Bishop of the Church of England in North China;

And whereas, in pursuance of the said second section of the said Act, we did by our said Warrant assign North China as the limit within which the said Reverend George Evans Moule might exercise spiritual jurisdiction pursuant to the said Act;

And whereas, in pursuance of our licence by another Warrant under our Royal Signet and Sign-manual, dated the 14th day of July, 1880, granted under the said Act, the Reverend Charles Perry Scott was, on the said 28th day of October, 1880, duly consecrated to be a Bishop of the Church of England in North China;

And whereas, in pursuance of the said second section of the said Act, we did by our last-mentioned Warrant assign North China as the limit within which the said Reverend Charles Perry Scott might exercise spiritual jurisdiction pursuant to the said Act.

And whereas, in pursuance of our licence, by another Warrant under our Royal Signet and Sign-manual, dated the day of 18 , granted under the said Act, the Reverend Edward Bickersteth was, on the 2nd day of February, 1886, duly consecrated to be a Bishop of the Church of England in Japan;

And whereas, in pursuance of the said second section of the said Act, we did by our last-mentioned Warrant assign Japan as the limit within which the said Reverend Edward Bickersteth might exercise spiritual jurisdiction pursuant to the said Act;

And whereas, in pursuance of our licence by another Warrant under our Royal Signet and Sign-manual, dated the 2nd day of October, 1889, granted under the said Act, the Reverend Charles John Corfe was, on the 1st day of November, 1889, duly consecrated to be a Bishop of the Church of England in Corea;

And whereas, in pursuance of the said second section of the said Act, we did by our last-mentioned Warrant assign Corea as the limit within which the said Reverend George Evans Moule might exercise spiritual jurisdiction pursuant to the said Act;

And whereas it is expedient to define more clearly the limits assigned for the exercise of spiritual jurisdiction by the said Reverend George Evans Moule (now the Right Reverend Bishop Moule) and the said Reverend Charles Perry Scott (now the Right Reverend Charles Perry Scott) and their successors respectively;

And whereas the Province of Shing King, in the Empire of China, is not within the limits of spiritual jurisdiction of any of the said Bishops, and we are desirous of including the said province within the limits of spiritual jurisdiction of the said Reverend Charles John Corfe (now the Right Reverend Charles John Corfe) and his successors:

Now it is our Royal will and pleasure, and we do by this our Warrant under our Royal Signet and Sign-manual revoke the said Royal Warrants, so far as limits were thereby assigned within which the said Bishops should exercise spiritual jurisdiction, and in pursuance of the said second section of the said Act we do assign the following limits within which the said Bishops of North China, Japan, and Corea shall respectively henceforth exercise spiritual jurisdiction over the ministers of the Church of England and other persons above-mentioned, namely, the district or Diocese within which the said Right Reverend Bishop Moule and his successors shall exercise such spiritual jurisdiction shall be Mid-China, and shall be limited by the southern boundary of the Province of Shantung, the eastern and southern boundary of the Provinces of Shensi and Kansu, the southern limit of such Diocese being the 28th parallel of north latitude; the district or Diocese within which the said Right Reverend Bishop Scott and his successors shall exercise such spiritual jurisdiction as aforesaid shall be North China, and shall consist of the six northern Provinces of Shantung, Pe-che-li, Honan, Shansi, Shensi, and Kansu; the district or Diocese within which the said Right Reverend Bishop Bickersteth and his successors shall exercise such spiritual jurisdiction as aforesaid shall be the Empire of Japan; and the district or Diocese within which the said Right Reverend Bishop Corfe and his successors shall exercise such spiritual jurisdiction as aforesaid shall consist of the Kingdom of Corea, together with the Province of Shing King, in Manchuria, in the Empire of China: Provided always that it shall at all times hereafter be competent for us and our successors to revoke this our Royal Warrant, and in accordance with clause 2 of the said Act to assign such limits as may from time to time seem expedient to us within which the said Bishops, or any of them, and their successors, shall exercise such spiritual jurisdiction as aforesaid.

No. 11.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received June 14.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, June 11, 1890.

Question as to how far Commercial Treaties now about to be entered upon between Turkey and foreign countries might be held to have force in Egypt.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir James Fergusson's letter of the 9th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers, noted in the margin, relative to the application of Commercial Treaties in Egypt, and that he had to inform us that your Lordship was desirous of obtaining our opinion on certain further points in connection with the question.

That a general statement on the subject was submitted to our consideration in the letter from the Foreign Office of the 8th June, 1889, and that we advised on that reference in our Report of the 10th July last, which was inclosed, together with the papers relating thereto, for convenience of reference.

That Sir Evelyn Baring had now asked for information and directions with respect to certain points in connection with questions which were likely to arise on the termination of Commercial Treaties lately or now subsisting between the Porte and foreign Powers, stating that the last of the Treaties in question would expire in July next. That those inquiries, as set forth in the despatch also inclosed, were to the following effect:—

Sir E. Baring's queries thereon.

1. What treatment was at that date (July 1890) to be accorded, in Egypt, to Powers which had not concluded any special Commercial Convention with Egypt? Had they the right to demand the application of any Treaty they might hereafter conclude with the Porte, or had the Egyptian Government the right to apply any Tariff they chose?

2. Could a Power which had claimed the application, in Egypt, of a Tariff agreed upon between such Power and the Porte, demand, at the same time, the application of Commercial Conventions between Egypt and other countries in respect of stipulations which such Power might deem more favourable to its interests than the Tariff which it had itself agreed upon with the Porte?

3. Could a Power (for instance, Great Britain) which had concluded a formal Convention with Egypt demand, under the most-favoured-nation clause of such Convention, the application of any portions of the Turkish Tariff which it might consider more favourable to its trade than the Egyptian Tariff?

That, lastly, Sir E. Baring asked the further question, "Whether, in case of any Power entering upon the Turkish Tariff, the Tariff included in the Commercial Convention between Egypt and the United Kingdom would come into operation at all in view of the provisions of Article XIV, which runs as follows: 'The effect of the alterations of the present Tariff of duties, provided under Article VI, remains suspended until the alterations in question are also applicable to all other interested Powers'?"

That Sir James Fergusson was to request that we would be so good as to take those inquiries into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Sir E. Baring with respect to them, and, further, with any observations which we might have to offer on the general question as to how far Commercial Treaties now about to be entered upon between Turkey and foreign countries might be held to have force in Egypt.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Answers to Sir E. Baring's queries.

That, in our opinion, Powers which have not concluded any special Commercial Convention with Egypt, and between whom and the Porte no Treaty exists of an earlier date than 1867, are subject to any Tariff the Egyptian Government may choose to impose.

In our opinion, no Power can claim the application in Egypt of a Tariff agreed upon since 1867 between such Power and the Porte. Such Tariff might be accepted by agreement between any Power and the Egyptian Government, but it would then come into force as a Commercial Convention made by Egypt, and the right to claim the benefit of stipulations contained in other Commercial Conventions made by Egypt would depend upon the terms of the Agreement itself.

A Power which has concluded a Commercial Convention with Egypt cannot claim to apply any portions of the Turkish Tariff under the most-favoured-nation clause. The validity of its Commercial Convention with Egypt rests upon the right of that country, under the Firmans of 1867 or 1873, to act and be considered as a separate country for the purposes of Customs arrangements.

In our opinion, the coming into operation of the Commercial Convention between Egypt and the United Kingdom would not be prevented by an Agreement, made subsequent to such Convention between Egypt and another Power, to apply to that Power the Turkish Tariff, as by such Agreement the Power in question would be removed from the category of interested Powers within the meaning of Article XIV of the Convention.

In our opinion, the effect of Article XIV is that the Egyptian Government cannot be called upon to give effect to the alterations of Tariff, provided by the Convention, until it has dealt with all other interested Powers either by separate Agreements or, where no Agreement is made, by prescribing a Tariff equivalent to that contained in the Convention.

The Convention is not before us, but we assume that it contains a most-favoured-nation clause.

We have, &c.

Obligations of Egypt towards the Porte and towards foreign nations in commercial matters.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir James Fergusson's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us (together with other papers bearing on its subject) a draft of a despatch to Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Cairo, founded on our Report of the 11th ultimo, respecting the obligations of Egypt towards the Porte and towards foreign nations in commercial matters.

That we should have perceived that the opinion expressed on those matters by the Legal Advisers to the Egyptian Government differed widely from that of Her Majesty's Government, and that as the former had given in some detail the reasons on which their opinion was founded, it was thought that it would be useful in those circumstances to furnish Sir E. Baring with reasons in support of the opinion of Her Majesty's Government.

That the accompanying draft despatch had accordingly been prepared with a view of embodying, in a concise but complete form, for Sir E. Baring's guidance and assistance, the views of Her Majesty's Government as to the present position of Egypt with regard to commercial arrangements with foreign Powers.

That your Lordship would, however, desire, in the first instance, to learn whether the views and reasoning therein expressed were such as met with our concurrence, or whether the terms of the draft might, in our opinion (and, if so, in what respects), advantageously be modified.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

That we concur in the views and opinions expressed in the draft despatch, and do not suggest any alteration in its terms.

Draft of Despatch from the Marquis of Salisbury to Mr. Portal.

Sir, Foreign Office, July , 1890.

I HAVE considered, in consultation with the Law Officers of the Crown, Sir Evelyn Baring's despatch No. 7, Commercial, of the 25th March last in regard to the position of Egypt in commercial matters resulting from the termination of all hitherto existing Commercial Treaties between the Porte and foreign Powers.

By the Firmans of 1867 and 1873 the Sultan granted to the Khedive of Egypt certain privileges, and the first-named instrument provided that, "whilst all the Treaties of the Sublime Porte must be respected in Egypt, an exception is made only as regards the customs duties, and as regards foreigners in matters relating to the Police, Postal, and Transit Services, for which full powers are given to them to enter into special arrangements with foreign agents. But such arrangements must not take the form of Treaties or Conventions having any political signification or purport; and in the event of their being inconsistent with the principles laid down above, or opposed to my original sovereign rights, it will be necessary to hold them as null and void.

"Wherefore the question of conformity or nonconformity to these principles in matters where a doubt exists as regards Egypt must be referred to the Sublime Porte previously to such arrangements being concluded.

"And when, in the manner explained above, any special arrangements are entered into concerning the customs duties in Egypt, information thereof must be transmitted to my Sublime Porte.

"Also, when any Conference respecting Commercial Treaties takes place between my Government and other Powers in order that the commercial interests of Egypt may be attended to, the opinions of the Egyptian Administration shall be consulted thereon."

The Firman of 1873 further enlarged the freedom of the Khedive in regard to commercial arrangements with foreign Powers, for it did not stipulate that such arrangements must be referred to the Porte previously to their being concluded, nor did it make provision for considering Egyptian commercial interests in negotiations between the Porte and foreign Powers, but it gave authority to the Khedive in the following words:—

"Il est autorisé à renouveler et à contracter, sans porter atteinte aux Traités politiques de ma Sublime Porte, des Conventions avec les Agents des Puissances étrangères, pour les douanes et le commerce, et pour toutes les relations qui concernent les étrangers, et toutes les affaires intérieures et autres du pays, et cela dans le but de développer le commerce et l'industrie et de régler la police des étrangers, ainsi que leur situation et tous leurs rapports avec le Gouvernement et la population."

In renewing these privileges to the present Khedive, the Firman of 1879 stated:—

"Le Khédive sera autorisé à contracter et à renouveler, sans porter atteinte aux Traités politiques de mon Gouvernement Impérial, ni à ses droits souverains sur ce pays, les Conventions avec les Agents des Puissances étrangères pour les douanes et le commerce, et pour toutes les transactions avec les étrangers concernant les affaires intérieures, et cela dans le but de développer le commerce, l'industrie, et l'agriculture, et de régler la police des étrangers et tous leurs rapports avec le Gouvernement et la population. Ces Conventions seront communiquées à ma Sublime Porte avant leur promulgation par le Khédive." But by a note addressed by the Porte to the British and French Ambassadors at the time of the issue of the Firman it was laid down that the provision that "ces Conventions seront communiquées à ma Sublime Porte avant leur promulgation par le Khédive . . . . exclut toute obligation de la part du Khédive d'obtenir la sanction ou l'autorisation du Sultan pour promulguer ou mettre en pratique les dites Conventions; toutefois la Sublime Porte se réservant le droit de refuser de reconnaître ou de sanctionner les dites Conventions, et devant toujours être à temps pour le faire si elles portaient atteinte aux Traités politiques de la Sublime Porte ou à ses droits souverains sur ces pays comme il est dit dans le texte même du Firman."

In the view of Her Majesty's Government, the result of the Firmans from which I have quoted is that Egypt acquired by them commercial liberty so far as the Porte could grant it. The Sultan could not, by an arrangement with a vassal, abolish the rights of foreign States under Treaties then existing, but by the Firman of 1873 His Majesty divested himself of any right in the future to conclude commercial arrangements for Egypt, and only stipulated that the commercial arrangements to be made by the Khedive with foreign Powers should not affect the Sultan's political rights.

Foreign Powers not having made protest against the Firmans should, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, be held to have accepted their effect on their own position whenever their then existing Treaty rights should lapse, and no foreign Power has ground for setting up as against Egypt the stipulations in commercial matters of a Treaty with the Porte of a date subsequent to the Firman of 1873. Similarly the absence of protest appears to Her Majesty's Government to be a bar to any claim by a foreign State to enjoy in Egypt most-favoured-nation treatment in commercial matters under the Capitulations or other Treaties with Turkey anterior to 1873.

With regard to the several questions particularly raised in Sir E. Baring's despatch of the 25th March, the following are the views of Her Majesty's Government:—

Powers who have not concluded any Special Commercial Convention with Egypt, and between whom and the Porte no Treaty exists of an earlier date than 1873, are subject to any Tariff the Egyptian Government may choose to impose.

No Power can claim the application in Egypt of a Tariff agreed upon since 1873 between such Power and the Porte. Such Tariff might be accepted by agreement between any Power and the Egyptian Government, but it would then come into force as a Commercial Convention made by Egypt, and the right to claim the benefit of stipulations contained in other Commercial Conventions made by Egypt would depend upon the terms of the Agreement itself.

A Power which has concluded a Commercial Convention with Egypt cannot claim to apply any portions of the Turkish Tariff under the most-favoured-nation clause. The validity of its Commercial Convention with Egypt rests upon the right of that country, under the Firmans of 1867 and 1873, to act and be considered as a separate country for the purposes of Customs arrangements.

The coming into operation of the Commercial Convention between Egypt and the United Kingdom would not be prevented by an Agreement made subsequent to such Convention between Egypt and another Power to apply to that Power the Turkish Tariff, as by such Agreement the Power in question would be removed from the category of interested Powers within the meaning of Article XIV of the Convention. The effect of that Article seems to be that the Egyptian Government cannot be called upon to give effect to the alterations of Tariff provided by the Convention until it has dealt with all other interested Powers either by separate Agreements or, where no Agreement is made, by prescribing a Tariff equivalent to that contained in the Convention.

No. 13.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, January 22, 1890.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir James Fergusson's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the draft of a new Postal Convention now in course of negotiation between Her Majesty's Government and that of France, and to state that your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion upon a point which arose in connection with Article V of the draft under the following circumstances.

Proposed Anglo-French Postal Convention.

Privileges of mail-packets.

That notice was given to the French Government on the 30th April last to terminate the Postal Convention of the 24th September, 1856, between Great Britain and France. That the French Government had communicated to Lord Lytton the draft of a fresh Convention to replace that of 1856, which was thus about to expire.

That on consideration of that document at the Foreign Office it had appeared advisable to modify the terms of Article V (the stipulations of a somewhat similar nature in the existing Convention having given cause for complaint), and that certain Articles, VIII, XI, and XII, had been inserted at the instance of the Post Office.

That doubt had arisen whether Her Majesty's Government could engage to give effect to the stipulations of Article V as amended, or in the form proposed by the French Government, without legislation for the purpose; and also whether such legislation would not be required in the colonial and foreign possessions of Her Majesty as well as in the United Kingdom.

Case of "Parlement Belge."

That the provisions of Article V were of a somewhat analogous nature to those of Article VI of the Postal Convention with Belgium, which were brought under the consideration of the Admiralty Court, and of the Court of Appeal, in the case of the "Parlement Belge" (L. R. 4 P. D. 129, and L. R. 5 P. D. 197).

Law Officers' Report, April 23, 1880.

That in that connection Sir James Fergusson was to ask our attention to the Report of the 23rd April, 1880, in which our predecessors advised with respect to the case of the "Parlement Belge."

As to necessity for legislation in case of Articles V of French and British Projects.

That Sir James Fergusson was accordingly to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether legislation would be required in the United Kingdom, and likewise in the Colonies and foreign possessions of Her Majesty, to give effect to the provisions of Article V of the French "Avant-Projet," or of the "Projet de Convention" prepared on the part of Her Majesty's Government, or to any other part of the stipulations of the latter document.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Legislation necessary in respect of either proposed form of Convention.

That, in our opinion, in order to give effect to the provisions of either form of the proposed Postal Convention, legislation will be necessary.

Most convenient course, Act and Order in Council.

We concur with our predecessors in their opinion that a short Act conferring the power of regulating these matters by Order in Council would be the most convenient mode of effecting the desired object. Such Order may apply to and include Her Majesty's colonial and foreign possessions.

Concur in opinion of their predecessors as to subsidized ships.

We desire to call attention to their observation as to the great practical difficulty of dealing with the case of merchant or passenger ships receiving subsidies for postal service, and to express our concurrence with them upon that matter.

We have, &c.
(Signed) RICHARD E. WEBSTER.
EDWARD CLARKE.

French Avant-Projet.

ARTICLE V.

Lorsque les paquebots employés par l'Administration des Postes de France et par l'Administration des Postes Britanniques seront des bâtiments nationaux propriété de l'État, ou des bâtiments appartenant à des Compagnies subventionnées pour l'exécution du service postal, ces paquebots ne pourront, à aucun titre, être détournés de leur destination ni être sujets à saisie-arrêt, embargo, ou Arrêt de Prince.

Les passagers admis sur ces paquebots, qui ne jugeraient pas à propos de descendre à terre pendant la relâche dans un port de l'un et l'autre État, ne pourront sous aucun prétexte être enlevés du bord ou assujettis à aucune perquisition.

Toutefois, les autorités locales pourront réclamer par l'intermédiaire de l'autorité Consulaire de la nationalité du navire, l'expulsion du bord des individus recherchés en vertu d'un mandat régulier, pour crimes ou délits de droit commun, qui se seraient réfugiés ou embarqués, pendant la relâche, sur les paquebots-poste. Cette expulsion ne pourra être refusée.

En cas de nécessité, des recherches pourront être pratiquées à bord de ces navires par les autorités locales avec l'assistance du Consul de la nation dont le navire porte le pavillon ou de son délégué.

L'exécution de ces mesures ne pourra en aucun cas retarder le départ du navire. Lorsque, par suite, un mandat de justice ou autre ne pourra recevoir son accomplissement, une déclaration écrite sera donnée, à cet effet, par le Consul ou son délégué, au fonctionnaire ou officier ministériel chargé d'exécuter ce mandat.

En cas de nécessité des recherches pourront être pratiquées à bord de ces navires par les autorités locales.

L'exécution de ces mesures ne pourra en aucun cas retarder le départ du navire.

[IN reply to a note from Sir J. Fergusson asking the Solicitor-General why he thought legislation necessary in respect of all the Articles in the proposed Postal Convention, he wrote on the 31st January and the 5th February as follows]:—

Dear Sir James, Royal Courts of Justice, January 31, 1890.

Postal Convention with France.

Article V clearly requires legislation to give it effect, and Article III could not be enforced upon inward-bound British vessels without further statutory provisions, such as I do not think would be easily obtained.

The real difficulty with regard to this Convention appears to us to be that which is pointed out in our predecessor's Report, and I should hardly think it worth while to discuss details until that difficulty has been dealt with. I shall be very glad, at the first opportunity, to talk the matter over with you.

Faithfully yours,
(Signed) EDWARD CLARKE.

The Solicitor-General to Foreign Office.

Dear Sir James, Royal Courts of Justice, February 5, 1890.

The Convention can be carried out without legislation, except so far as Articles III and V are concerned.

I think the Convention can be carried out without the legislation, except so far as Articles III and V are concerned. Article III would be ineffective so far as it purports to oblige merchant-vessels homeward-bound to carry letters. Article IV appears to refer to Article III, and probably would be differently worded if Article III were omitted.

The other Articles might possibly be of some use without legislation, but it seems to me that they are either unnecessary or unilateral. Take Article VII, for instance, which purports to provide that letter-carrying boats of the two Administrations may enter or leave ports at any hour of the day or night. If at any British port there were a local Regulation conflicting with this, the Article would have no effect as far as that port was concerned. If there be no such port, the agreement is not needed so far as this country is concerned. Of course, this involves the question of admitting merchant-vessels receiving a subsidy to the contemplated privileges. But if it is desired to make a Convention containing the Articles other than III and V, I do not think there is any legal objection.

Very faithfully yours,
(Signed) EDWARD CLARKE.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, March 24, 1890.

O. in C. giving effect to arrangement extending Anglo-French Extradition Treaty to Tunis.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. H. Sanderson's letter of the 5th instant, stating that, by your Lordship's direction, he had to transmit to us the accompanying draft of an Order in Council which had been prepared for the purpose of carrying into effect an arrangement between the Governments of Great Britain and France, signed at Paris on the 31st December, 1889, extending to Tunis the provisions of the Anglo-French Extradition Convention of the 14th August, 1876.

That the principal object which Her Majesty's Government had in view in concluding that arrangement with the Government of the French Republic was to secure, as far possible, the removal of difficulties which at present arose in dealing with fugitives from justice, who, having escaped from some portion of the British dominions, subsequently took refuge in Tunis.

That that question had already come under our consideration, or under that of our predecessors in office, though in a somewhat less general form, both in 1886 (see Law Officers' Report of the 26th January, 1886, Tripoli, No. 59) and in 1887 (see Law Officers' Report of the 24th August, 1887, France, No. 19).

That on the latter occasion we reported that we approved the terms of a draft despatch dealing with the subject, which was subsequently (i.e., on the 27th August, 1887) addressed to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Paris.

That that despatch, amongst other things, instructed Mr. Egerton to represent to the French Government that, unless the French Tribunals in Tunis either were then, or could be subsequently, empowered to exercise the jurisdiction with respect to British fugitive offenders taking refuge in the Regency which was, previously to the Order in Council of the 31st December, 1883 (whereby British Consular jurisdiction in Tunis was made to cease to the extent of the jurisdiction vested by law in the new French Tribunals established under the Regency), vested in the British Consular Courts; or, failing that, unless the French Government were prepared to take other measures to secure the apprehension and return of such fugitives to the place from which they had escaped, Her Majesty's Government considered that they would be entitled to claim the right for British Consuls in Tunis to continue to exercise jurisdiction in such cases.

That in September 1889 (see M. Spuller to Lord Lytton of the 21st September, 1889, Inclosure No. 1 in Lord Lytton's No. 62, Treaty) a reply was received from the French Government proposing the signature of a Declaration extending to Tunis the provisions of the Extradition Convention between Great Britain and France of the 14th August, 1876.

That that proposal was accepted by Her Majesty's Government, and an arrangement was accordingly signed at Paris on the 31st December of last year.

That it would be seen that the arrangement in question purported to be made between the Government of Her Britannic Majesty on the one part, and the Government of the French Republic, acting in the name of His Highness the Bey of Tunis, on the other part; and it was considered that, inasmuch as the French Government are entitled, by Treaty Agreement with the Bey, to act as his Diplomatic Agents in such matters, the arrangement might, from the point of view of international law, consequently be regarded in effect as having been concluded between Her Majesty and the territorial Sovereign of Tunis rather than between Her Majesty and the Regent or protecting Power now existing, in the shape of the Government of the French Republic, over that Beylicate.

That the arrangement, moreover, did not in any way involve extradition to or from the Protectorates of Great Britain, but applied merely to Her Majesty's dominions, so that it was conceived that the various legal objections which we had already pointed out in our two previous Reports of the 3rd March, 1888 (Law Officers' Reports, Germany, No. 26 of 1888), and the 14th March, 1888 (Law Officers' Reports, Germany, No. 27 of 1888), respectively as arising in connection with arrangements between Great Britain and any foreign State for the mutual surrender of fugitive criminals from the dominions or Protectorates of the one who might be found in the Protectorates or dominions of the other, would scarcely make themselves felt in the present instance.

That copies of those Reports were, however, inclosed therewith for convenience of reference, as were also copies of our Report of the 20th April, 1888 (Law Officers' Reports, Germany, No. 29 of 1888), and of the considered Memorandum with which we favoured your Lordship on the 29th June, 1887 (Law Officers' Reports, Germany, No. 33 of 1887), with reference to the general question of the exercise of jurisdiction by the protecting Power over other foreigners within its Protectorate.

That it was presumed that as the arrangement of the 31st December, 1889, would not touch cases where British fugitive offenders from places which were outside the Queen's dominions, but in which Her Majesty exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction, take refuge in Tunis, Her Majesty's Government should, if possible, continue to reserve to themselves the right for British Consuls in Tunis to exercise jurisdiction in those cases, and should provide for their being dealt with either under "The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881," and the Ottoman Order in Council, 1882 (as was the case before the establishment of the French Regency in Tunis), or in some other manner, at any rate until a more satisfactory method of disposing of them could be agreed upon between Her Majesty's Government and that of the French Republic.

That the right to claim the extradition of such offenders was not given by existing Treaties between Great Britain and other countries, and no practical inconvenience could be said to have arisen as yet from its absence; but owing to the proximity of the Ottoman dominions to Tunis, those cases might possibly from time to time occur there, as indeed they might in other countries adjacent to Turkey.

That in the particular case, for instance, to which our attention had been indirectly drawn in the earlier part of Sir T. H. Sanderson's letter, the offender was a British subject of Maltese origin, who committed fraud at Tripoli and subsequently fled to Tunis (see Law Officers' Reports, Tripoli, No. 59, of the 26th January, 1886); and it would be impossible to deal with such an offender satisfactorily under the arrangement of the 31st December, 1889.

That Sir T. H. Sanderson was to inclose the correspondence which had passed upon the subject of that arrangement with Her Majesty's Embassy at Paris, and also with the Home and Colonial Offices, and he was to request that we would take the various papers transmitted therewith into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, the terms of the draft Order in Council were such as might properly be submitted to the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

That your Lordship would at the same time be glad to be furnished with any observations of a general nature which might occur to us in connection with the questions touched upon in that letter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

Approving draft O. in C. Question of

That, in our opinion, the draft Order in Council may properly be submitted to Her Majesty for her approval. It is clear that the arrangement sanctioned by such claiming right of British Consuls in Tunis to exercise jurisdiction over British fugitives is one of policy, not of law.

Order will not secure the surrender of British fugitives who are accused of committing crime in the Ottoman dominions. It is a serious question, and is one of policy, not law, whether it will be desirable to claim the right for British Consuls in Tunis to exercise jurisdiction in these cases, which must be of rare occurrence, and in which the French Government would probably be willing to co-operate in bringing the alleged criminal to justice.

Desirable to obtain some assurance of co-operation of French Govt.

It may be desirable to obtain from the French Government some assurance upon this point, by intimating that Her Majesty's Government will otherwise claim the continued exercise of Consular jurisdiction.

No. 16.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received April 3.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, April 2, 1890.

Detention of French fishing-schooners "Virginie" and "Amazone."

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 19th February last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list in further reference to the cases of the French fishing-schooners "Virginie" and "Amazone," which formed the subject of our Report to your Lordship on the 19th July last.

That upon receipt of that Report a communication was addressed to the French Ambassador at this Court in the terms of the draft despatch, as approved by us, adopting the conclusion arrived at by the Judgment of the Newfoundland Court of Appeal.

As to exercise of right of search on foreign vessels.

That the French Government, however, renewed the claim for 44,500 fr. as compensation for the detention of each of the vessels, chiefly on the ground that the Magistrate's sentence of confiscation, which led to their detention, was illegal; and that they again raised the questions whether it was consistent with international usage that the right of search should be exercised on foreign vessels except when taken in flagrante delicto, or when exercised by officials on board of ships other than those of a public character.

That information on the following points was thereupon sought to be obtained, namely, (a) from Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department, and from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, whether it was in accordance with precedent that compensation should be given by Her Majesty's Government for the erroneous, but bonâ fide, decision of a Magistrate while sitting on the Bench and administering the law in ordinary course; and (b) from the Board of Customs, through Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, as to the practice of exercising the right of search in this country for the enforcement of Customs or other internal Regulations.

That with regard to the point (a) it was understood that in all cases, where compensation had been given by Her Majesty's Government, it had been given as an act of grace and not as a matter of right.

That from the Report of M. Clunet, the Legal Adviser to Her Majesty's Embassy at Paris, it was understood that in France a British subject would not obtain compensation under the above circumstances as matter of right, but that at the same time M. Clunet considered that, as an act of international courtesy, compensation might reasonably be given to owners for the condemnation and subsequent detention of their vessels.

That with regard to the point (b) it was gathered that the Solicitor to the Customs was of opinion that forcible search of a foreign vessel, even when in British territorial waters, could scarcely be made by a British official from a purely commercial ship, but that it could be made from any vessel distinctly in Government employ.

He stated, moreover, that, in his belief, no record existed in this country of any foreign vessel having been searched by officials acting on board of ships having no public character.

That it would be observed that M. Jusserand, in his note of the 20th October last, assumed that the right of visitation and search was, in the case of the two vessels in question, exercised "en dehors de tout cas de flagrant délit ou d'indices indubitables de délit," and denounces the proceeding as being on that ground "contraire au principe de la liberté de circulation dans les eaux territoriales" admitted by Great Britain since the signature of the Convention of the Hague in 1882, of which document a copy was inclosed to us for reference.

But that the facts of the case seemed to be very far from bearing out the assumption thus made, inasmuch as the vessels appeared to have been "conveying" some of the said "fishes within the said limits" (see section 2 of the Newfoundland Bait Act, 50 Vict.) at the very time they were boarded and searched, and that, although not "flagrante delicto" quâ the "catching or taking" of such fish, they were "flagrante delicto" quâ the "conveying" of them, which was in itself a substantive offence against the Bait Act.

That, moreover, the presence of those fish on board would appear to furnish in itself "indices indubitables de délit."

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration in connection with the arguments advanced in M. Jusserand's above-mentioned note, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to (1) whether there had been any violation of commonly received maritime usage in respect of the exercise of the right of search by the Newfoundland authorities; and (2) whether it was incumbent upon Her Majesty's Government as matter of right, or desirable as an act of grace, to comply with the reiterated request of the Government of the French Republic, that compensation should be made to the owners of the "Virginie" and "Amazone" in respect of any damage they might have sustained through the illegal detention of their vessels.

That your Lordship would, at the same time, be glad to be favoured with any general observations which we might be good enough to offer upon the terms of M. Jusserand's note and the present aspect of the case.

That the previous correspondence* which was transmitted to us in June last was returned for convenience of reference.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Right of search in time of peace can only be conferred by Municipal Law.

1. That, in our opinion, there is not, independently of the provisions of Municipal Law, any right of search in time of peace even by vessels having a national character.

That right, however, may be conferred by such Municipal Law upon any persons acting in the public service, and may be exercised from vessels whether national or commercial.

It has been decided by a competent Tribunal that the Bait Act of 1887 did authorize such search, and it therefore appears that there was not, under the circumstances, any violation of commonly received maritime usage.

2. We are of opinion that an erroneous decision by a Court of First Instance, afterwards set aside upon appeal according to the course of law, does not found any claim to be made as of right against the country whose Tribunal has committed the error.

In particular case, detention of vessels being unlawful, H. M.'s Govt. might, without admitting liability to do so, grant compensation to their owners.

But in this case, we think the detention of the vessels from the 17th July to the 22nd August having been unlawful, Her Majesty's Government might, while making no admission upon the questions of international law raised by M. Jusserand's despatch, comply with the request of the French Republic that compensation should be made to the owners of these vessels for damages shown to have been occasioned by such detention.

Ratification of Sir B. Walker's action in closing a British lobster factory under the modus vivendi.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bramston's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy of a letter from the Admiralty, covering a request from Sir Baldwin Walker, Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Emerald," for the ratification, as an act of State, by command of superior authority, for closing British lobster factories under the modus vivendi. That a copy of the recent modus vivendi with France was inclosed.

That we were doubtless aware that the Act 5 Geo. IV, cap. 51, which authorized His Majesty to give instructions to naval officers for the enforcement of Treaties in Newfoundland, was continued to the 31st December, 1834, by the Act 2 & 3 Wm. IV, cap. 79, and that it then expired, and had not since been revived.

That it was understood that Sir Baldwin Walker had given effect to the modus vivendi by closing a British lobster factory, and that, in the absence of statutory authority, he desired that his action should be ratified as an act of State done by authority of Her Majesty's Government.

That your Lordship had no official information upon the subject, but that it would appear from the statements in the newspapers that Mr. Baird, the owner of the factory, being called upon to close it, refused to do so, and that thereupon Sir B. Walker, after giving him notice of his intention, closed it by force. That it was understood that that factory was not in existence on the 1st day of July, 1889.

That Mr. Bramston was accordingly to inquire: (1) Whether a document of the nature above mentioned might be sent to Sir Baldwin Walker? (2) In what form it should be couched? and (3) What would be the legal effect as a defence in any legal proceedings that might be taken against that officer, in regard to action already taken or that he might hereafter feel obliged to take? That the case of Buron v. Denman (2 Ex. 167) would seem to bear upon the present case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to Document ratifying his action may be sent.

Report—

1. That we are of opinion that a document ratifying the action of Sir Baldwin Walker in putting in force the provisions of the modus vivendi may properly be sent to him.

Form it should assume.

2. The form may be an approval of the action of Sir Baldwin Walker by the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty.

3. The ratification by Her Majesty's Government would be a defence to any proceedings taken against Sir Baldwin Walker in a case falling within the provisions of the arrangement embodied in the modus vivendi.

Admiralty to Vice-Admiral Watson.

Admiralty, July 21, 1890.

Sir,

I AM commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to acknowledge the receipt of a telegram, dated the 4th July, 1890, from Captain Sir Baldwin Walker, commanding Her Majesty's ship "Emerald," requesting that his action in closing British lobster factories in Newfoundland under the modus vivendi recently arranged for this season with the Government of France may be ratified "as an act of State, by command of superior authority."

In reply, I am commanded by their Lordships to transmit herewith copy of a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 17th instant, together with a Report from the Law Officers of the Crown, on this subject; and, in accordance with the opinion therein expressed, my Lords approve of the action taken by Sir Baldwin Walker in putting in force the provisions of the modus vivendi, such action being in accordance with the instructions of Her Majesty's Government.

I am, &c.

No. 18.

[Colonial Office.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Knutsford.

Royal Courts of Justice, August 12, 1890.

My Lord,

Rules and Regulations under section 18 of Newfoundland Fisheries Commission Act of 1889.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bramston's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy of Rules and Regulations made under section 18 of the Newfoundland Fisheries Commission Act of 1889, together with a copy of the Act.

That the Regulations aimed at protecting and preserving the fishery on the coasts of the Colony; that they were in themselves beneficial, and such as Her Majesty's Government would be disposed to approve, if, in our opinion, they might lawfully do so. For, as we should perceive from the proviso to the last Regulation, such approval was necessary before the fisheries on that part of the coast where the French had Treaty rights could be affected by the Regulations or obtain the benefit of them.

That neither the Treaty of Utrecht nor the subsequent engagements between the countries in terms exempted the French fishermen from the laws of the Colony, nor did they in terms declare that the French exercised their fishery rights subject to those laws.

That the question, so far as your Lordship had discovered, did not appear to have been directly raised in any case submitted to the Law Officers in former times, but that it was now necessary to consider whether the French fishermen, exercising their rights under the Treaties, were subject to Regulations which, though beneficial to the fishery in general, might yet to some extent restrict the operations of individual

French fishermen by limiting the size of the mesh in their nets (No. 18), and by preventing the use of certain engines (No. 19) before a given date.

That it was further to be observed that by establishing a close time for lobster fishing (Regulation 7), and by fixing the size of the lobsters which might be taken, the Rules, though framed to prevent the extinction of the lobsters, would be a restriction upon the French fishermen should it be held, contrary to the contention of Her Majesty's Government and to our Report of the 6th August, 1888, that they had a right to fish for lobsters.

That there could be no question as to the competence of the Legislature to pass, and of the Executive to enforce, such Regulations upon all fishermen, whether French or colonial, upon all other parts of the coast than that called the "French Shore," and upon colonial fishermen upon that shore, but that the question was whether the French fishermen upon that part of the coast could be bound.

That it would be observed that penalties were attached to the breach of the Regulations, and were (No. 27) to be recovered in a summary way before a Magistrate.

That your Lordship would be obliged if we would advise whether Her Majesty's Government might properly give the approval under Regulation 31.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

H.M.'s Govt. cannot give the approval mentioned in Regulation No. 31.

That, in our opinion, dealing with these Regulations as a whole, Her Majesty's Government cannot properly give the approval mentioned in the Regulation No. 31.

The French have no special Treaty rights in respect of the lobster-canning industry, but Regulations cannot be made with respect to the cod fishery except by arrangement with French Govt.

The Regulations with respect to the lobster-canning industry can, in our opinion, be lawfully made and enforced on any part of the coast, as, for the reasons stated in our Report of the 6th August, 1888, we do not admit that in respect of this industry the French have any special Treaty rights.

The Regulations with respect to the cod fishery would, however, clearly interfere with such rights, and ought not to be attempted to be made except by arrangement, or Convention, with the French Government.

No. 19.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received November 15.)

Royal Courts of Justice, November 13, 1890.

My Lord,

Complaints of British colony in Tunis against certain taxes imposed since the establishment of the French Protectorate.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to complaints of the British colony in Tunis against certain taxes imposed upon the community since the establishment of the French Protectorate over the Regency.

That the Memorial embodying those complaints was referred to Her Majesty's Consul at Tunis for his observations, and that his remarks would be found in the despatch annexed (see Consul Drummond Hay's No. 53 of the 29th July, 1890).

That the grievances enumerated appeared to resolve themselves into eight heads:—

1. The Octroi Taxes.

That Consul Hay observed that these taxes were not an innovation of the French régime, having been in force before the establishment of the Protectorate.

2. The Municipal Abattoir Taxes.

That your Lordship was in some doubt whether these were taxes against which Her Majesty's Government could protest as of right, but that your Lordship considered that the attention of the Tunisian Government might properly be called to the Regulations of the 30th March, 1881, drawn up by the Consular Body at Tangier and the Moorish authorities for the payment of the agrarian and gate tax (see "Morocco No. 1, 1882"); and that the adoption of similar Regulations might be recommended to the Tunisian Government.

3. The Communal Taxes.

That these taxes appeared to be unnecessarily onerous, but that it was questionable whether there was any just cause of complaint on the part of foreigners, and that your Lordship would be glad to be informed whether we concurred in that view.

Case of M. Diacono.

That if, as Consul Hay stated, the Municipality had exceeded their powers in certain instances (such as the case of M. Diacono, cited by the memorialists), there might, perhaps, be a ground for remonstrance in such individual cases.

That the argument used by Consul Hay did not seem to be applicable when he stated:—

"The Municipality appear to have considerably exceeded their powers in this instance, as proofs can be shown that, before the introduction of French jurisdiction, their Regulations had to be confirmed by Judgments from the Consular Courts in the cases of foreigners."

That it was apprehended that the Regulations of the Municipality were not contrary to Treaty rights if authorized by the French Tribunals in Tunis (see to Consul Ricketts No. 22 of the 20th February, and to Acting Consul Carbonaro No. 45 of the 2nd August, 1889), but that your Lordship desired to be favoured with our opinion upon that point.

Case of M. Ellul.

That the case of Ellul, alluded to in the Memorial, had already formed the subject of a reference to ourselves (see Law Officers' Report, France, No. 15 of the 11th July, 1889), and that, in consequence of the opinion then expressed by us, the Acting Consul at Tunis was informed that the acts complained of by M. Ellul did not constitute a violation of the Treaty rights of British subjects. (See Acting Consul Carbonaro, No. 45 of the 2nd August, 1889.)

4. Irregularities committed by the Officials employed in collecting Taxes.

That this would appear to be a matter in which Her Majesty's Government could only interfere where specific cases of wrong-doing could be shown.

5. The Prohibition of the Import of Fruit and Vegetables from Malta under pretext of guarding against the Introduction of the Phylloxera.

That the law applicable to this matter appeared to be the Decree of the 17th February, 1886. (See "Dictionnaire de la Législation Tunisienne"—Phylloxera—pp. 252, 253.)

That the prohibition seemed to be in violation of Article VII of the Anglo-Tunisian Treaty of the 19th July, 1875, which stated:—

"His Highness the Bey engages that he will not prohibit the importation into the Regency of any article the produce or manufacture of the dominions and possessions of Her Britannic Majesty, from whatever place arriving."

But that Consul Hay explained that the law applied to all countries, including France as well as Malta, though by the Decree of the 2nd January, 1887 (see page 253 of volume mentioned above), an exception was made in favour of such products when coming from Algiers.

That even if the prohibition were, as was alleged, an infraction of Treaty rights, strictly interpreted, it became a question whether, having in view that the prohibition applied to all countries beyond the sea equally, an exemption in favour of British subjects could equitably be demanded.

6. Increase of the Water Tax.

That this appeared to be a matter in which the Municipality were within their right, and afforded no ground for a representation as a violation of Treaty rights.

7. Tax on Urban Property.

That instructions as to this had already been sent to the Acting Consul at Tunis. (See to Acting Consul Carbonaro No. 47 of the 31st October, 1889.)

That Mr. Carbonaro was informed that there was no ground for objecting to the tax if imposed on natives of Tunis and British subjects alike, but that if the latter considered themselves wrongly assessed, they should appeal to the French Tribunals.

That those instructions, Consul Hay reported, had been carefully followed, but that he added that the tax was seriously resented, and that a Memorial on the subject would probably be submitted to the Tunisian Government and to the foreign Consuls.

8. Vague Charges of Partiality and Denial of Justice on the part of the French Judges.

That, as had been observed above (§ 4), this would appear also to be a matter in which Her Majesty's Government could interfere only where specific acts of miscarriage of justice could be shown to have been committed.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would inform your Lordship whether we agreed generally in the views which had been shortly indicated therein with respect to the various sub-heads of complaint put forward in the Memorial, and would, at the same time, favour you with a more specific opinion on any point arising upon the Memorial with reference to which we might consider it, from a legal point of view, desirable that Her Majesty's Consul should receive more detailed instructions.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Agree generally with the views stated in Sir P. Currie's letter of the 30th October.

That we agree generally with the views stated in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 30th October.

We are of opinion that the matters alleged by the memorialists in respect of the various local taxes, and the prohibition of the import of fruit and vegetables, afford no ground for protest on the part of Her Majesty's Government. The administrative irregularities complained of are not sufficiently specified, and do not appear to be of a grave character.

The charge against the French Tribunals is far too serious to be made the subject of diplomatic representation without much more detailed evidence in its support than is to be found in the Report of the memorialists.

We have, &c.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, December 22, 1890.

Nationality of Mme. de Préaudet, a lady of French origin, widow of a native of Mauritius.

That Mme. Préaudet's husband died, apparently, in the year 1874, when she left Mauritius for France, where she had since continuously resided. That she inquired whether, according to the law of Mauritius, she remained a British subject after her husband's death, or recovered her original French nationality.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to observe that the matter appeared to be primarily governed by the provisions of the "Code Napoléon," which, having been introduced into the Mauritius in 1808, while the island was under French rule, was continued as (and still remained) the law of the Colony when it subsequently became a part of the British dominions.

That the Code in question provided as follows (Livre 1, Chapitre II, section 1^{re} § 19): "Une femme Française qui épousera un étranger suivra la condition de son mari. Si elle devient veuve elle recouvrira la qualité de Française pourvu qu'elle réside en France," &c.; and that the "Procureur-Général" of the Colony reported that, by the effect of that provision, Mme. Préaudet, as she was now a widow and resided in France, had resumed her nationality as a French citizen.

That it was, however, doubtful whether the sections of the "Code Napoléon" quoted by that officer could, when construed as part of the law of Mauritius under British rule, be held to apply to the case of a French woman marrying a British subject, as such a construction required that, for the purposes of the law of a British Colony, a British subject should, as well as every other person not a French citizen, be described as "un étranger;" while aliens of French nationality should be the only persons regarded as natives.

That it seemed, therefore, most probable that the law was to be read, mutatis mutandis, as follows:—

"Une femme Mauritienne qui épousera un étranger suivra la condition de son mari.

"Si elle devient veuve elle recouvrira la qualité de Mauritienne pourvu qu'elle réside dans l'Ile Maurice," &c.

That in that event the paragraphs quoted by the "Procureur-Général" had no application to the case in question, which would appear rather to be governed, in so far as the law of Mauritius was concerned, by the terms, mutatis mutandis, of Article 12 of the "Code Napoléon," viz., "L'étrangère qui aurait épousé un Français suivra la condition de son mari."

That there was no provision of the "Code Napoléon" dealing specifically with the national status of an alien woman who, having married a Frenchman, subsequently became a widow; but that, judging from the analogy of the case dealt with in Article 19 (already quoted above) of that Code, such widow would retain the French nationality of her late husband, unless and until she complied with the formalities prescribed by the law of her country of origin with regard to persons desirous of reverting to their nationality of origin.

Assuming that construction rather than that of the "Procureur-Général" to be correct, the law of the Mauritius would, it was thought, be found to be practically in accord with the provisions of the Imperial Naturalization Act of 1870 upon the point.

But that, on the other hand, if section 10 (1) of the latter Act was applicable to Her Majesty's Colonies as well as to the United Kingdom, as to which point Sir Thomas Sanderson was to call our attention to the inclosed opinion (Law Officers to Colonial Office of the 8th February, 1881) given by our predecessors in office and by Dr. Deane, Q.C., in 1881; and if the construction of the "Code Napoléon" which was contended for by the "Procureur-Général" should prevail, then there would, apparently, be an irreconcilable conflict between Colonial and Imperial law with regard to the present status of this lady.

* The Earl of Lytton, No. 60, Treaty, July 26; to ditto, No. 55, Treaty, July 28; Mr. Egerton, No. 66, Treaty, August 3; to Colonial Office, August 11; Colonial Office, August 22; ditto (and Inclosure), November 14, 1890; Law Officers' Report, February 8, 1881; Naturalization Act, 1870, and French Nationality Law of June 26, 1889.

That in that latter event it was presumed that the provisions of the Imperial Statute would prevail over the common law of the Colony.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to observe that, as far as the national status of Mme. de Préaudet in France, and according to French law, was concerned, she appeared to be in a position to claim the benefit of French citizenship under the last clause of the first paragraph of Article 19 of the recent Nationality Law of the French Republic of the 26th June, 1889, which provided as follows:—

"La femme Française qui épouse un étranger suit la condition de son mari à moins que son mariage ne lui confère pas la nationalité de son mari, auquel cas elle reste Française. Si son mariage est dissous par la mort du mari . . . . elle recouvre la qualité de Française avec l'autorisation du Gouvernement, pourvu qu'elle réside en France, ou qu'elle y rentre, en déclarant qu'elle veut s'y fixer."

That the point, however, upon which Mme. de Préaudet desired information from Her Majesty's Government (see Lord Lytton's No. 60, Treaty, of the 26th July, 1890, and its inclosure) was whether, according to the law then in force in the Mauritius, she remained a British subject after her husband's death, or recovered her French nationality.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to—

1. Whether Article 19 of the "Code Napoléon," as now in force in the Mauritius, must be held to apply to this case, and, if so, whether the construction of that Article contended for by the Procureur-Général of that Colony should, so far as the law of the Mauritius governed the case, be held to be correct; or whether the alternative construction and Article of the Code which were suggested in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter as being preferably applicable to the matter should not rather be adopted as governing it?

2. Whether, "The Naturalization Act, 1870" (33 Vict., cap. 14), and more particularly section 10 thereof, was in force in the Mauritius or not?

3. Whether, assuming the answer to question 2 to be in the affirmative, and also that the provisions of the Imperial Naturalization Act governing the national status of Mme. de Préaudet conflicted with the provisions of the law of the Mauritius upon the same point, the former or the latter must be held to prevail?

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to add that the questions submitted raised points which, apart from the necessities of the case now under consideration, were of practical and general importance to the Foreign Office.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

1. That, in our opinion, the question raised in this case does not depend upon the "Code Napoléon" as now in force in the Mauritius.

2. "The Naturalization Act, 1870," being the law of England, is in force in the Mauritius so far as it determines national status. (See Donegani v. Donegani (1835), 3 Knapp 63, 85; In re Adam, 1 Moore, P.C., 460, 470.)

3. If there were a conflict between the provisions of the law of Mauritius and those of the Act of 1870 upon this subject, the provisions of the Imperial Act would prevail. There is, however, in our judgment, no such conflict.

The "Code Napoléon," as a law in force in the Mauritius, must be read as if the word "Mauritienne" were substituted for the word "Française," and, in construing that law, a French woman must be considered "une étrangère."

Article 19 of the "Code Civil" would, therefore, have no reference to the case of a French woman who has married a British subject.

Mme. de Préaudet would continue to enjoy the British nationality acquired by her marriage until she, by some act of her own, divested herself of it.

Article 12 would apply to her case, and would have the same effect as section 10 (1) of the Imperial Act, viz., that the French widow would continue to enjoy the British nationality acquired by her marriage until she, by some act of her own, divested herself of it. (See Dalloz' "Jurisprudence Générale," vol. xviii, Art. 156, p. 71.)

Status of widow of Mr. Blumenthal, naturalized under Act of 1844.

MR. AND MRS. BLUMENTHAL (both natives of Germany) were married in Hamburg in 1852. They subsequently lived in England, and in 1862 Mr. Blumenthal was naturalized under the Act of 1844 (7 & 8 Vict., cap. 66) on an application by Memorial, stating the age, profession, occupation, and duration of residence of the applicant in the United Kingdom. Under that Act (section 7) the Secretary of State has power (section 8) to issue a certificate granting to the memorialist all the rights and capacities of a natural-born British subject (after having made inquiries into the circumstances of each case) except the capacity of being a Member of the Privy Council or Member of either House of Parliament, and except such rights and capacities (if any) as may be specially excepted in such certificate.

By section 9 every such certificate must be enrolled in the High Court of Chancery, and an oath of allegiance in the form prescribed by section 10 must be taken by the holder of the certificate within sixty days from the date of it.

The conditions embodied in all certificates granted since 1858 provide that they shall cease and determine if the holder resides out of the United Kingdom for more than six months without the leave of the Secretary of State.

In Mr. Blumenthal's case the usual course was adopted, and the usual certificate was issued. Mr. and Mrs. Blumenthal continued to reside in England until the death of the former, which occurred in 1872, and at his death his certificate was unforfeited.

The question arises as to the status of Mrs. Blumenthal, who after the death of her husband went to reside abroad.

By the Act of 1844, section 16, it is provided that any woman, married, or who shall be married, to a natural-born subject or person naturalized, shall be deemed and taken to be herself naturalized and have all the rights and privileges of a natural-born subject.

It will be observed that under this section no act has to be done by the woman so married to obtain these rights and privileges, no Memorial has to be presented by her, no inquiries are made, no oath is taken, no enrolment in Chancery. The Act itself confers the right.

At the death of her husband Mrs. Blumenthal was unquestionably the wife of a person naturalized, and though no doubt she might have acquired by such naturalization greater rights than her husband, i.e., freedom from forfeiture of it by residence abroad, yet he never did so reside, and it would, it is submitted, be impossible to contend that her status depended entirely on the existence of the certificate, which it is apprehended would terminate equally by the death of the holder of it as by its forfeiture by him in his lifetime by an act of his to which his wife might have been no party.

In 1870 the Act 33 Vict., cap. 14, was passed. Mr. Blumenthal did not, however, avail himself of its provisions and obtain a fresh certificate of naturalization as that Act (section 7, last paragraph) enabled, although it did not compel him to do so. Certificates under the Act of 1870 do not contain the provision as to forfeiture which was embodied as above mentioned in certificates granted under the Act of 1844. The 10th section of it, moreover, enacts as follows: "A married woman shall be deemed to be a subject of the State of which her husband is for the time being a subject."

Mrs. Blumenthal, it is submitted, was, at the date of the passing of the Act, the wife of a subject of the United Kingdom, continuing so up to the time of her husband's death, and she has done no act to divest herself of her nationality since his death, as residence abroad by itself does not have that effect.

Form of passports for widows of persons naturalized under Act of 1844

It will be observed from the correspondence hereafter set out that it has hitherto been the custom of the Foreign Office in the issuing of passports to treat the widows of persons who were naturalized under the Act of 1844 as subject to conditions contained in the certificate granted to their husbands.

Copies of some correspondence on the subject that has taken place between the Foreign Office and the Secretary of State are given below*

The Secretary of State agrees with Lord Salisbury in not seeing any advantage from maintaining the difference in practice pointed out in the Foreign Office letter of the 12th December, but he would be glad to be advised by the Law Officers on the following points:—

1. Whether by the Act of 1844 (a), the wife of a person naturalized under that Act was originally subject to the condition of forfeiture contained in the certificate granted to her husband; and (b) whether after the death of her husband the widow still remained subject to such condition?

2. Whether if so originally subject but no forfeiture having occurred, and the husband and wife having been British subjects at the date of the passing of the Act of 1870, the wife became by virtue of that Act entitled to be deemed the wife of a British subject, and having done no act to divest herself of her nationality, is entitled to be so deemed during her widowhood, to all intents and purposes, and irrespective of the conditions attached to the husband's naturalization?

3. Whether there is any legal objection to proposed alteration in the form of passports to be granted by the Foreign Office?

The Attorney- and Solicitor-General are requested to favour the Secretary of State with their opinion, as asked in Mr. Pemberton's letter.

1. Widow of person naturalized under Act of 1844, and dying without forfeiting his status, is not subject to forfeiture by residence abroad.

1. We are of opinion that the wife of a person naturalized under the Act of 1844 was not subject to any condition of forfeiture in respect of her residence abroad, but, as she followed the status of her husband, his forfeiture by breach of the condition would have deprived her of the status of a naturalized British subject.

The husband dying without having forfeited his status his widow was not, in our opinion, subject to any condition.

2. Act of 1870 does not apply.

2. The Act of 1870 does not, in our opinion, affect the question.

3. No objection to altered form of passport.

3. We see no legal objection to the proposed alteration in the form of the passport.

Opinion by the Advocate-General of Bengal.—(Communicated by India Office, January 9, 1891.)

[THE Advocate-General of Bengal (Sir Charles Paul) having been asked by the Government of India in October 1890 for his opinion as to whether, by the law of India, a woman of foreign nationality of origin, on her marriage with a natural-born British subject, or with a person naturalized under the provisions of the Indian Naturalization Act as a British subject, follows the nationality of her husband, reported as follows:—]

"The English Naturalization Act, 1870," applies to India.

I have carefully considered "The English Naturalization Act, 1870," which is included in Mr. Whitley Stokes' Statutes relating to India, and am of opinion that that Statute is a general one, and that section 10, subsection 1, applies to India, regard being had especially to the definition of the term "a natural-born British subject" in section 4.

It follows that, in my opinion, the law is the same in India as it is in England with regard to a woman of foreign nationality of origin marrying a natural-born British subject, or a person who is a naturalized British subject.

Indian Naturalization Act of 1852 must be read subject to the English Statute.

The Indian Naturalization Act of 1852 does not contain any provisions similar to the provisions contained in section 10 of the English Naturalization Act, and must, in my opinion, be read subject to the English Statute, which, as I have observed, applies to India.

Draft Order in Council respecting marriage of British subjects outside the United Kingdom, in accordance with section 9 of "Marriage Act, 1890."

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. Villiers Lister's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of an Order in Council which had been prepared by Mr. R. S. Wright, in consultation with the Foreign Office, making certain Regulations with regard to the marriage of British subjects outside the United Kingdom, in accordance with section 9 of "The Marriage Act, 1890."

That, for convenience of reference, Sir T. Villiers Lister inclosed a copy of that Act (53 & 54 Vict., cap. 47), together with copies of other Acts referred to therein; and that he was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the draft Order in Council might properly be laid before the Queen in Council, for Her Majesty's gracious approval.

That Sir T. Villiers Lister was at the same time to request that we would inform your Lordship whether we concurred in the inclosed instructions which you proposed to address to Her Majesty's Diplomatic and Consular officers with reference to the marriages of British subjects abroad under "The Marriage Act, 1890," which would come into force on the 1st January, 1891.

That a copy of the instructions which were issued to Her Majesty's Representatives abroad on the 18th October last was also inclosed.

That Sir T. Villiers Lister was to add that the Colonial Office and Admiralty would undertake the making of any necessary provision for cases under sections 3 to 5, inclusive, of the Act falling within the province of those Departments.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to Approve draft Order in Council and instructions to H.M.'s Diplomatic and Consular Representatives as amended; but a more complete Order in Council should be prepared.

Report—

That, in our opinion, it is desirable that the Act of 1890 should be brought into operation with the least possible delay, and we think that the draft Order in Council and instructions as submitted to us will suffice for this purpose with the amendments which we have inserted, but it appears to us that a more complete and detailed Order in Council should be prepared and issued with as little delay as is consistent with a careful consideration of the important and difficult questions to which our attention has been called by the papers submitted to us.

Claim of Mr. M. Spartali on Greek Government.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 9th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 15th July last, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Athens relative to the claim of Mr. Michael Spartali upon the Greek Government.

Little prospect of settlement of.

That it would be seen that there was very little prospect of a settlement of the case, that the legal proceedings threatened to be interminable, and that they constituted, in Sir E. Monson's opinion, a gross scandal, and a disgrace to Greek legal procedure.

That under those circumstances Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would again take the whole case into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether, having regard to the considerations set forth in Sir E. Monson's despatch, it was now advisable for Her Majesty's Government to address a formal diplomatic remonstrance to the Hellenic Government, and, if so, upon what particular grounds such remonstrance might, in our opinion, be most advantageously based.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

No ground for diplomatic remonstrance

That, in our opinion, there is no ground for a diplomatic remonstrance to the Hellenic Government, against whose present action no complaint is made, except that it declines to interfere with a matter which is now before the Greek Tribunals.

We would, however, suggest that the Hellenic Government should be asked to inform Messrs. Caravia that, unless due diligence is shown in the prosecution of their suit, the amount voted by the Chamber will be paid to Sir E. Monson.

HAÏTI.

No. 25.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received February 5.)

My Lord,

Royal Courts of Justice, February 4, 1890.

Measures of new Haïtian Government.

That in the month of December 1888 General Légitime was elected President of the Haïtian Republic, and was recognized in that capacity by Her Majesty's Government on the 31st January, 1889. That a revolution soon broke out against his authority, and that in August last he resigned office and left the island.

New Constitution of October 9, 1889.

That General Hyppolite, the leader of the Opposition party, was then elected President of the Republic by a Constituent Assembly, which met at the town of Gonaives on the 9th October, on which day the same Assembly voted a new Constitution for the island.

That Article 185 of that Constitution ran as follows:—

Losses of foreigners through civil wars, &c.

"Tout étranger qui se trouve sur le territoire de la République jouit de la protection accordée aux Haïtiens, quant aux personnes et aux biens, sauf les exceptions établies par la loi.

"En cas de pertes éprouvées par suite de troubles civils et politiques, nul Haïtien ou étranger ne peut prétendre à aucune indemnité. Cependant, il sera facultatif aux parties lésées dans ses troubles de poursuivre par-devant les Tribunaux, conformément à la loi, les individus reconnus les auteurs des torts causés, afin d'en obtenir justice et réparation légale."

That Mr. Zohrab, Her Majesty's Consul-General in Haïti, had since reported in his despatch No. 77 of the 6th December, 1889, that, in pursuance of that Article, General Hyppolite's Government published the Notices of which copies were annexed to that despatch.

Renunciation of Contracts made by former Government.

That reports had also reached the French Government that the new Foreign Minister had since announced that his Government would reject all Contracts made by their predecessors unless they were declared obligatory by the Haïtian Tribunals.

As to Anglo-French protest.

That communications had passed between Her Majesty's Government and that of France as to the course to be adopted with regard to those measures. That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to inclose that correspondence, from which it would be seen that the French Government were of opinion that they called for a protest.

Draft for approval.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was also to inclose the draft of a despatch which your Lordship proposed to address to Her Majesty's Ambassador in Paris on the subject, and that he was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the terms of the draft were such as were right and proper under the circumstances.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Approve draft.

That, in our opinion, the terms of the draft despatch are right and proper.

My Lord,

Foreign Office, February , 1890.

HER Majesty's Government have had under their careful consideration the communication from the French Government recorded in my despatch No. 32 of the 27th ultimo relative to the attitude of the present Haïtian Government towards foreigners.

With regard to the Haïtian Decree affecting the privileges of foreigners settling in the island for purposes of trade, I have to observe that there is no Treaty between this country and Haïti to which Her Majesty's Government can appeal as guaranteeing the position of British subjects in that island. It is therefore doubtful whether Her Majesty's Government can object to the Decree, in so far at least as it affects British subjects who may settle in Haïti for purposes of trade, &c., after its promulgation, on the ground that it is in direct violation of any established principle of general international law.

But the case is different as regards those British subjects who have already established themselves in Haïti on the faith of a different state of things, and who have acquired property and developed their business there under a more favourable system of government, and one more in accordance with the general usage of civilized States. They were entitled to assume that the Haïtian Government would continue to recognize their obligations in respect to the property of foreigners to the same extent, and would allow them to carry on business on the same terms as heretofore, and Her Majesty's Government consider that the present Haïtian Government are in this respect bound by the action of their predecessors, and are not entitled suddenly and violently to change, to the detriment of foreigners, the reasonable conditions under which they originally established themselves in the island, and have since continued to carry on their business there.

Her Majesty's Government will be prepared to join with the French Government in formally protesting on these grounds against the Decree in question, in so far as it in any way affects foreigners who have established themselves in Haïti previous to its issue.

They will also be prepared expressly to reserve to themselves, as a Government, entire freedom of action as to the presentation of any claims in regard to injuries suffered by British subjects which they may consider justified in equity and according to international usage, whether the sufferers have or have not subscribed a renunciation of the right to bring forward such claims themselves.

Her Majesty's Government have not yet received from the Haïtian Government any intimation of its intention to disavow Contracts made by its predecessors unless such Contracts should be declared obligatory by the Haïtian Tribunals. In the event, however, of their receiving any such intimation, they will be prepared to state that they reserve to themselves the acknowledged right of urging upon the Haïtian Government any cases in which they may consider that British subjects have suffered injustice.

I have to request your Excellency to address a note to the French Government in the above sense.

I am, &c.

Refusal of Italian Govt. to permit a British subject to act as an Emigration Agent in Italy.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 10th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted on the accompanying list, relating to the refusal of the Italian Government to permit a British subject to act as an Emigration Agent in Italy.

That the principal points in the case were summarized in the inclosed Memorandum.

That Sir T. V. Lister was to request us to consider the papers, and to favour your Lordship with our opinion on the following questions, which would be found stated in the above-mentioned Memorandum, with an indication of the particular papers on which they arose:—

Commercial Treaty between Great Britain and Italy of 1883.

1. Whether, on the assumption that the business of an Emigration Agent was "commerce" within the meaning of the Commercial Treaty between Great Britain and Italy, the Italian Law which limited to Italian subjects the choice of the agent who might perform particular portions of a ship-owner's business was or was not in harmony with the said Treaty?

2. Whether the business of an Emigration Agent, as defined by Italian law, was or was not "commerce" within the meaning of the Treaty; and, if so, whether the provision of that law prohibiting emigration agency to foreigners, and therefore to British subjects, was not contrary to the provision of the Treaty which insured to British subjects the same rights in Italy in matters of commerce as were or might be enjoyed by Italian subjects?

3. Whether the Italian Government was right in contending that a Law regulating the choice of Emigration Agents was not a limitation of free commerce, but a regulating of the conditions under which persons might emigrate, and that such a Law was thus, by its very nature, necessarily exempt from any of the obligations imposed by a Commercial Treaty?

4. Finally, Sir T. V. Lister was to request us to favour your Lordship with our opinion, or observations, on any other questions raised by the papers which might appear to us to be of importance in dealing with the case to which they referred.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

1. That in our opinion, if the business of an Emigration Agent were "commerce" within the Treaty of 1883, the Italian law would not be in harmony with the said Treaty.

Italian Law on emigration is not a contravention of the Treaty.

2 and 3. But we are of opinion that the business of an Emigration Agent, as defined by Italian law, cannot fairly be held to be "commerce" within the meaning of the Treaty, and that the Italian Law on emigration is not a contravention of the Treaty.

We have, &c.

My Lord,

Draft of Agreement between Great Britain and Italy with reference to the coasting trade and merchant shipping.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 8th September last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying draft of an Agreement between this country and Italy with reference to the coasting trade, and certain matters concerning merchant shipping.

That your Lordship had some doubt whether, in the absence of agreement between the parties, there was at present any legal power to compel them to accept the decision of a Consular officer in the case provided for by Article III of the draft Agreement.

That your Lordship expressed that view to the Board of Trade, and was informed, in reply, that the Board were advised that the doubt felt by your Lordship appeared to be well founded.

That the Board observed, at the same time, that failure on the part of the owners, shippers, and underwriters to contract themselves out of the provisions of the Article could hardly be construed into a binding acquiescence in its provisions on their part.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to inclose correspondence relative to the Agreement between the Foreign Office, Her Majesty's Embassy at Rome, the Board of Trade, the Home Office, and the Colonial Office; and he was to request that we would take the draft Agreement into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether, if signed, it could be put into effect without fresh legislation, and with any general observations which we might have to offer.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Legislation would be required to give effect to it.

That, in our opinion, legislation would be required in order to give effect to the draft Agreement.

Article II is, in our judgment, inconsistent with sections 432, 433, 439, and 441 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," as it purports to give authority to Italian Consuls which would conflict with the statutable authority and duties of the Receiver of Wrecks.

If Article III is intended to make the appraisement of a British Consul binding in British Courts, it would not have that effect, and, apart from such a result, we do not see what will be the purpose of the appraisement.

Article IV professes to add another requirement for the registration of a British ship to those the law already prescribes, and would therefore be inoperative without legislation.

Annex.

Articles II, III, and IV of British Counter-Draft.

ARTICLE II.

The following provisions with respect to wrecks are agreed upon by the Contracting Parties as supplementary to those contained in Article IX of the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation of the 15th June, 1883:—

When any vessel belonging to the subjects of one of the two Contracting Parties shall be wrecked or stranded on the coast of the other State, the local authorities shall, with the least possible delay, bring the fact to the notice of the Consul-General, Consul, Vice-Consul, or Consular Agent nearest to the scene of the disaster.

The operations respecting the rescue of English ships wrecked or stranded on the coasts of Italy shall be directed by the Consuls-General, Vice-Consuls, or Consular Agents of Great Britain, and conversely the Italian Consuls-General, Consuls, Vice-Consuls, and Consular Agents shall direct the operations relative to the rescue of ships of their nation wrecked or stranded on the coasts of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

When the proprietors of the ship or cargo, or their legally authorized Representatives, are present, the Consuls-General, Consuls, Vice-Consuls, and Consular Agents shall hand over to them the direction of the operations for rescue, requiring a deposit of the ship's papers and a reimbursement of the expenses already incurred, and a sufficient guarantee for expenses of works undertaken before the transfer, and not yet carried out.

The intervention of the local authorities shall only take place in the two countries in order to carry out the civil and criminal law of the country, to assist the Consular authorities to maintain order, to guarantee the interests of the persons participating in the rescue, if they are other than the shipwrecked crew, and to insure the execution of the regulations to be observed for the entry and exit of the merchandize saved.

But, in the absence of and until the arrival of the Consuls-General, Consuls, Vice-Consuls, and Consular Agents, the local authorities may take all the necessary measures for the protection of the individuals, and the preservation of the objects rescued from the wreck.

Such intervention shall not give ground for the reimbursement of any expenses, except such as shall have been necessary, for the operations of rescue and for the custody of the articles saved, as also those to which, under similar circumstances, national vessels would be subjected. These expenses shall be discharged according to circumstances by the Agents of the Consular Service, the proprietor, or his mandatories.

When on account of absence, illness, or any other cause, the Consular functionaries should be prevented from attending to or managing the operations for rescue, the local authorities, to whom such operations and management shall be intrusted, shall be bound to hand over to the said functionaries the ship's papers and the net product of the ship and cargo.

ARTICLE III.

When there are no stipulations to the contrary between the owners, shippers, and underwriters, the injuries which the ships of the two countries shall have suffered at sea, if they put into the ports of either, voluntarily or by stress of circumstances, shall be appraised by the Consul-General, Consul, Vice-Consul, and Consular Agent of the nation to which the said ships belong, unless subjects of the country where the above-mentioned Agents reside, or those of a third Power, are interested in such injuries. In that case, in the absence of an amicable compromise between all the parties interested, the injuries shall be appraised by the local authorities.

ARTICLE IV.

It is agreed that, except in the case of judicial sales, the ships of one of the two countries cannot be nationalized in the other without a declaration of release from the flag granted by the maritime or Consular authorities of the State to which the vessels belong.

Proposed Anglo-Italian Coasting Trade Agreement.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 21st November last, relative to the proposed Anglo-Italian Coasting Trade Agreement, he was directed by your Lordship to inquire whether, in our opinion, the draft submitted to us in his letter of the 8th September last could be carried into effect in the United Kingdom without fresh legislation, provided that Articles 2, 3, and 4 were omitted entirely.

That the draft Agreement was returned for convenience of reference.

We have taken the question into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to

That in our opinion the draft Agreement could be carried into effect in the United Kingdom without fresh legislation if Articles 2, 3, and 4 were omitted.

My Lord,

Grant by the Liberian Govt. to an English Company of the monopoly of the rubber trade.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Villiers Lister's letter of the 8th instant, stating that, by your Lordship's direction, he had to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list with regard to a question which had arisen in connection with the recent grant by the Liberian Government to an English Company of the monopoly of the rubber trade with that country.

That from those papers it would be perceived that the Company in question, the Liberian Concession Company, had recently acquired a Concession from the Liberian Government, which, according to their prospectus, gives the holders, among other things, (1) the sole right of collecting the india-rubber grown on all the Government lands and forests; and (2) the sole right of exporting all india-rubber grown within the territories of the Republic.

That by Article II, however, of the Treaty which was concluded between this country and Liberia on the 21st November, 1848, it was provided that British subjects were to be allowed to buy from and to sell to whom they liked, without being restrained or prejudiced by any monopoly, contract, or exclusive privilege of sale or purchase whatever; and though it might possibly be the case, as would be seen was the opinion of Sir H. Davey, that the first part of the Concession, applying as it did only to Government lands and forests, was not, strictly speaking, a monopoly, and therefore did not constitute an infringement of the Article of the Treaty above referred to, still it was a point that would seem open to question—though Sir Horace expresses himself as being without doubt in that respect as well—whether at any rate the second part, which conferred the sole right of exporting all india-rubber from within the territories of Liberia, and which therefore applied to the whole of that country, was not a distinct infringement of the Article in question, and did not as such call for a remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

That it was true indeed that, as would be seen had been pointed out by Sir H. Davey, Article II of the Anglo-Liberian Treaty did not in express terms refer to or prohibit the granting of an exclusive privilege of exporting a particular commodity, but that, nevertheless, a monopoly of exportation such as was intended to be conferred on the Company could hardly fail to seriously prejudice the sale and purchase of that article by all such British subjects as should be outside the terms of the Concession, and it was that very disadvantage which would be incurred by them, which the Article of the Treaty would appear to have been designed to guard against when it said that British subjects should be allowed to buy from and to sell to whom they like, without being restrained or prejudiced by any monopoly, contract, or exclusive privilege of sale or purchase whatever.

That Sir Villiers Lister was to request that we would take those papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer on the points alluded to above, or on such others in the case as might seem to us worthy of remark.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

Second part of Concession granted to Ellis Tarr and others (giving them the sole right of exporting india-rubber from Liberia) is contrary to Liberian Treaty of 1848.

That, in our opinion, the first part of the Concession granted to Ellis Tarr and others, granting them the sole right of collecting the india-rubber grown upon the Government lands and forests, is not an infringement of the Treaty of November 1848; but that the second part of the Concession, which gives the sole right of exporting all india-rubber grown within the territories of the Republic of Liberia, is a monopoly by which other British subjects will be prejudiced, and is therefore a distinct infringement of Article II of the Treaty.

No. 30.

[Colonial Office.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Knutsford.—(Communicated by Colonial Office, June 21.)

My Lord,
Royal Courts of Justice, May 9, 1890.

Proposed amendment in Treaty between H. M. and Tonga of 1879.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. J. Bramston's letter of the 25th March last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us copy of a despatch from the High Commissioner for the Western Pacific, with its inclosures, in which, for the reason stated, he suggested an amendment in the Treaty of Friendship, &c., between Her Majesty and the King of Tonga, 1879, together with a copy of a correspondence between the Colonial Office and the Foreign Office on the subject.

That Mr. Bramston was to request that we would take those papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion on the following points:—

1. Whether a proceeding to obtain divorce would be a "civil suit" within the meaning of Article III (d) of the Treaty, or whether, in order to give the High Commissioner's Court jurisdiction to dissolve marriages, it would be necessary, not only to create the jurisdiction by an Order in Council, but to get such jurisdiction recognized by an amendment of the Treaty;

2. Whether we concurred in the opinion that British subjects ought not to have the option of being tried by Tongan Courts; and

3. Whether we thought it necessary that a further alteration should be made, giving the High Commissioner's Court exclusive divorce jurisdiction where the husband was a British subject. If so, such jurisdiction should, it was assumed, be also conferred by the new Western Pacific Order in Council, which was being prepared to take the place of the existing Orders.

That, as then advised, your Lordship was disposed to adopt the view taken by Sir J. Thurston in regard to the alteration of paragraph (b) of Article III of the Treaty.

That your Lordship was also inclined to concur with Lord Salisbury that the proposed alteration of paragraph (c) would be sufficient for the purpose, and that, looking to all the circumstances of the case, Sir J. Thurston should be instructed not to prosecute Gray for bigamy.

That your Lordship would be pleased to be favoured with any observations which might occur to us on any further points which might suggest themselves to us in the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

1. That, in our opinion, a proceeding to obtain divorce would be a civil suit within the meaning of Article III (d) of the Treaty; and to enable the High Commissioner's Court to dissolve marriages, it is only necessary to confer such jurisdiction upon it by Order in Council, no amendment of the Treaty being required.

We observe, however, that if Sir J. Thurston's proposed alteration of Article III (b) were adopted, British subjects in Tonga might altogether escape liability to punishment for some offences. Adultery, for instance, is not a criminal offence cognizable by British law, and it is not clear that it could be considered a violation of a Tongan law relating to local police. The Treaty as at present drawn undoubtedly covers all offences against Tongan law.

British subjects should retain the option of being tried by Tongan Courts.

2. The question whether British subjects should retain the option of being tried by Tongan Courts is one of policy, but we do not see any conclusive reason for depriving them of that option, which does not to us appear unreasonable.

The High Commissioner's Court should have exclusive jurisdiction only in cases where respondent is a British subject.

3. We think it desirable that the High Commissioner's Court should have exclusive jurisdiction only in cases where the respondent, whether husband or wife, is a British subject, and that will be the case under the Treaty where divorce jurisdiction is conferred by Order in Council on that Court.

Gray should not be prosecuted for bigamy.

We concur that, under all the circumstances of the case, Sir J. Thurston should be instructed not to prosecute Gray for bigamy.

CASE.—UNINHABITED ISLANDS, LICENCES.

Lease of Sombrero Island granted in 1865 to F. K. Dumas.

IN 1865 a lease of Sombrero Island was granted to F. K. Dumas for twenty-one years. The lease was executed on behalf of Her Majesty by the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners (see section 6 of 18 & 19 Vict., cap. 119, now repealed by 35 & 36 Vict., cap. 73, sec. 5).

Lease granted to Phosphate Company in 1881.

In 1881 a surrender of the above lease was accepted, and a new lease granted to the Phosphate Company of Sombrero.

As the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners had ceased to exist in 1881, and Sombrero Island was not within the jurisdiction of any Colonial Governor, a Royal Warrant empowering the Secretary of State for the Colonies to execute this and similar leases was approved by the then Law Officers (Sir H. James and Sir F. Herschell).

When this Warrant was submitted to and approved by the Law Officers the Lords of the Treasury were not aware that Letters Patent were in existence under which the Governors of New South Wales and Jamaica, and the High Commissioner of the Western Pacific, were empowered to grant and were in the habit of granting leases of, and licences to take guano from, extra-colonial islands in the Indian, Pacific, and Atlantic Oceans.

The question of the grant of licences to occupy and remove substances from uninhabited islands has recently been occupying the attention of the Foreign Office and the Colonial Office, by whom it has been agreed that two fresh Letters Patent should be issued to the High Commissioner of the Western Pacific, one dealing with islands already in the possession of the Crown, the other with islands not yet forming part of the Empire.

These Letters Patent have been approved by the Law Officers. Copies of them and of recent Reports by the Law Officers on the subject are left herewith.

Amendment proposed by Colonial Office of Royal Warrant of 1881 (A).

The Colonial Office have now suggested to the Treasury that the Warrant to the Secretary of State requires amendment, and have proposed that it should be amended as shown in red ink in the accompanying copy.

The Lords of the Treasury desire the opinion of the Law Officers on the following points:—

1. Whether, if Letters Patent are requisite for the powers to be given to the High Commissioner, the weaker instrumentality of a Royal Warrant will suffice for the powers to be given to the Secretary of State.

2. Whether, if two different instruments, emanating from two different Departments, are required for the two different classes of islands in the case of the High Commissioner, a single instrument will suffice for both classes of islands in the case of the Secretary of State.

3. Whether, if both the foregoing questions be answered in the affirmative, the wording of the draft Warrant is suitable for the purpose it is intended to fulfil.

Opinion.

Royal Warrant will suffice for all powers proposed to be given to Secretary of State.

In our opinion a Royal Warrant will suffice for the powers proposed to be given to the Secretary of State in respect of both classes of islands and places, and, assuming that it is intended to give the Secretary of State concurrent power with the High Commissioner of the Western Pacific of granting, selling, or disposing of islands, &c., subject to the Letters Patent already approved, the wording of the draft Warrant now submitted to and initialled by us is sufficient for the purpose it is intended to fulfil; but if it is intended that there should not be concurrent power in the Secretary of State and the High Commissioner over the places subject to the jurisdiction of the High Commissioner under such Letters Patent, such places should be excluded from the operation of the Warrant.

Difficulties in case of a concurrent jurisdiction of Secretary of State and of High Commissioner for Western Pacific.

It might, in our opinion, create difficulties if a concurrent jurisdiction existed.

VICTORIA R. AND I.

By Her Majesty's command.

Victoria, by the Grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland Queen, Defender of the Faith, to our right trusty and well-beloved Councillor Henry Thurstan, Baron Knutsford, our Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies, greeting.

WHEREAS our subjects may resort to and settle in islands and places not within our dominions nor within the jurisdiction of any civilized Power, and it may be expedient that such islands or places should become part of our dominions, and that our subjects should be empowered to take and hold possession of such islands or places on our behalf:

And whereas there are or may hereafter be vested in us, by virtue of our Royal prerogative, and subject to alienation at our pleasure, divers islands and tracts of waste land abroad which are not within the jurisdiction of the Governor of any of our Colonies or possessions abroad:

And whereas we have judged it expedient that provision should be made for the demising, granting, selling, exchanging, and disposing, in our name and on our behalf, as occasion may arise, of such islands and waste lands:

Now, therefore, by these presents and by virtue of the powers in us vested, we do hereby authorize and empower you, the said Henry Thurstan, Baron Knutsford, or other the person for the time being holding the office of Principal Secretary of State for our Colonies, to empower any of our subjects to take and hold possession on our behalf of any islands or places as aforesaid, other than islands or places capable of being dealt with by our High Commissioner for the time being for the Western Pacific under our Letters Patent bearing date the 19th and 20th days of May, 1890; and with the consent of the Commissioners for the time being of our Treasury to demise, grant, sell, exchange, and dispose of such our islands and waste lands as aforesaid, and subject to such consent as aforesaid, which consent shall be signified by the execution by the said Commissioners of the deed or deeds, instrument or instruments, whereby such demise, grant, sale, exchange, or disposal is effected, to make allowances to and arrangements with all or any of the tenants or occupiers for the time being of such islands and waste lands, and with others, and to accept surrenders of leases and tenancies, and also to demand, sue for, collect, and receive, and give effectual discharges for all the rents and profits now due, or which shall become due, in respect of the said premises, and in case of non-payment thereof, or any part thereof, to enter into and upon all or any of such islands and waste lands in respect of which any rents or profits shall be unpaid, and for the same rents and profits, and the costs and expenses incurred by, or incidental to, the non-payment thereof, to distrain, and the distress and distresses then and there found to dispose of in due course of law. And to take and use all lawful proceedings and means for recovering and receiving the said rents and profits, and for evicting and ejecting defaulting tenants and occupiers from all or any of such islands and waste lands, and determining the tenancy or occupation thereof, and for obtaining, recovering, and retaining possession of all or any of such islands and waste lands held or occupied by such defaulters, and also, subject to such rules and regulations aforesaid, to commence and prosecute and defend all actions, claims, demands, and proceedings touching such islands and waste lands, or the estate, interest, and rights of us or of our tenants or assigns therein and thereto.

And we direct that the Principal Secretary of State for our Colonies for the time being shall, upon the receipt of any moneys under or by virtue of these presents, account for the same to us, our heirs and successors, and may, for the purposes aforesaid or any of them, in our name and on our behalf, sign, make, execute, and do all contracts, agreements, deeds, transfers, assignments, instruments, and things whatsoever:

Provided always, and we do hereby declare our pleasure to be, that nothing herein contained shall alter or affect, or be construed to alter or affect, any appropriation now made or hereafter to be made by law or by the authority of the Commissioners for the time being of our Treasury, of any moneys which may be produced by the demises, grants, sales, exchanges, and dispositions of such islands and waste lands:

Provided also that nothing herein contained extends, or shall be construed to extend, to interfere in any manner with the due execution of any Law made or hereafter to be made by us with the advice and consent of Parliament in respect of the demises, grants, sales, exchanges, and dispositions of such islands and waste lands in respect of the appropriation of the proceeds of any such demises, grants, sales, exchanges, and dispositions.

Punishment inflicted upon natives of the Pacific for outrages against British subjects.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bramston's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy of a despatch from the High Commissioner for the Western Pacific, with its inclosures, respecting the punishment inflicted upon natives of the Pacific for outrages against British subjects.

That we should observe that Sir J. Thurston suggested the enactment of a local law in Fiji authorizing the detention in Fiji of natives, brought within the jurisdiction of the Colony, who had been proved guilty of violence against British subjects.

That the Law Officers in 1879, in their letter of the 20th March, of which a copy was inclosed, reported that they did not think that Her Majesty could assume a jurisdiction over foreigners not within any part of Her Majesty's dominions. That your Lordship, while accepting that opinion, would, however, suggest, with reference to the concluding words of that Report, that it might be still open to consideration whether offending natives made captives by one of Her Majesty's ships, and conveyed to Fiji, might not be regarded as prisoners of war, and their detention on British soil legalized by an Ordinance of the Colony.

Pacific Islands Marriages.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Robert Herbert's letter of the 15th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to refer us to section 6 of "The Pacific Islanders Protection Act, 1875," in connection with the accompanying correspondence respecting marriages in the Pacific Islands, and to request that we would be good enough to advise your Lordship whether, in our opinion, an Order in Council under the section above referred to, and purporting to be for the government of Her Majesty's subjects, would be sufficient to give legal validity to marriages solemnized by missionaries in the islands of the Pacific, between persons of whom one was a subject of Her Majesty. That if so the draft of the proposed Order would be submitted to us in due course for approval.

"Pacific Islanders Protection Act, 1875."

We have taken the matter into our consideration and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

As to legality of when celebrated by missionaries.

That in our opinion an Order in Council would be sufficient to give legal validity in this country where one of the parties was a British subject, and everywhere, when both were British subjects, to marriages celebrated by missionaries, assuming such marriages not to be otherwise contrary to the laws of this country.

We have, &c.

That Mr. Bramston was to request that your Lordship might be favoured with our opinion as to whether the High Commissioner's suggestion could be followed.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

Detention in Fiji of natives of countries not being British possessions would be improper, except under very special circumstances.

That we are clearly of opinion that it would be improper by any enactment to attempt to justify, as a matter of criminal procedure, the detention in Fiji of natives of countries not being British possessions, who had been proved guilty of violence against British subjects.

We entirely agree with the Report of the Law Officers of the 20th March, 1879.

As regards the suggestion that offending natives captured by Her Majesty's ships should be detained as prisoners of war, we are of opinion that such a course should only be adopted under very special circumstances, and where such detention is considered imperatively necessary in order to prevent further unlawful and hostile acts.

As a rule such detention should be on board the capturing vessel, but if on shore a local Ordinance should be passed authorizing the detention.

Temple, March 20, 1879.

Sir,

Western Pacific Order in Council of August 13, 1877.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. Herbert's letter of the 4th January last, stating that he was directed by you to transmit to us a copy of a despatch from Chief Justice Gorrie, written in the absence of Sir A. Gordon in this country, in which it was suggested that the jurisdiction exercised by the High Commissioner for the Western Pacific under the Order in Council of the 13th August, 1877 (a copy of which was annexed), should be extended in the manner specified to natives living within the High Commissioner's command, and to request that we would favour you with our opinion whether it was competent to Her Majesty to confer upon a British Court jurisdiction to try savages for offences against British subjects.

And, if so, what instrument would be proper for the purpose.

Mr. Herbert was further to ask us to favour you with our advice generally upon the proposal.

In obedience to your commands, we have the honour to report—

Do not think it possible for Her Majesty to assume a jurisdiction over foreigners not within any part of Her Majesty's dominions.

That we are unable to concur in the views expressed by Chief Justice Gorrie. We do not think it is possible, by any expedient whatever, to avoid the serious infringement of international jurisprudence which would be involved in Her Majesty assuming a jurisdiction over foreigners not within any part of Her Majesty's dominions. The right to make laws must arise either from a personal jurisdiction, as where Her Majesty is entitled to the allegiance of her own subjects all over the world, or is derived from the sovereignty over the territory with respect to which it is sought to legislate. The maxim, "Extra territorium jus dicenti impune non paretur," is strictly relevant to the suggestion of the Chief Justice, and, if we understand rightly, that suggestion is that, by an Act of Parliament or an Order in Council, Her Majesty should obtain or create a jurisdiction to try foreigners who are neither her subjects nor within her territories. Such an Act or Order could effect nothing, and we think would be a very mischievous example of a State attempting to legislate for those beyond its jurisdiction. If savage tribes inflict violence or injury, the only alternative is to treat those acts as acts of war, and vindicate justice accordingly.

Final Act of the Conference on Samoan affairs of June 14, 1889. Regulations to be issued thereunder by High Commissioner for Western Pacific.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, December 1, 1890.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 11th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list with reference to certain Regulations to be issued by the High Commissioner for the Western Pacific, for the purpose of enforcing the stipulations of the Final Act of the Conference on Samoan affairs.

That that Act was drawn up and signed at Berlin by the Representatives of Great Britain, Germany, and the United States of America on the 14th June, 1889, and having been in due course ratified by the three Powers, received the assent of the King of Samoa.

That instructions were, therefore, sent to Sir J. Thurston, the High Commissioner for the Western Pacific, and to Colonel de Coëtlogon, Her Majesty's Consul for the Navigators' Islands, directing them to issue, as far as possible, such Regulations in accordance with the Final Act as would place British subjects upon the same legal footing as the subjects of the two other Treaty Powers, viz., Germany and the United States of America.

Regulations passed by the Treaty Powers with regard to collection of customs and taxes in Samoa.

That Sir J. Thurston had now replied, inclosing a copy of the Regulations passed by Her Majesty's Consul for the Navigators' Islands, in conjunction with his German and American colleagues, with regard to the collection of customs and taxes in Samoa.

That he, at the same time, stated that, on considering the instructions sent to him, and the already existing Regulations in force in Samoa, he had come to the conclusion that he could not at present pass any fresh Regulations without placing British subjects on a footing differing from that occupied by the subjects of other nations.

That Sir Philip Currie was to inquire whether we agreed with the view of Sir John Thurston, that Article 7 of the Western Pacific Order in Council of 1879, under which Regulations were issued by the High Commissioner, did not authorize the imposition of taxes, and that he would, therefore, be debarred from issuing a Regulation which would enforce in its entirety the Regulation with regard to taxes agreed upon by the three Consuls.

That it would be seen that the High Commissioner was of opinion that he could have so far assisted the Consuls as to have issued Regulations enforcing the making of the necessary declarations with regard to imports and exports, value of houses, and clerks employed, &c., on which the amount of taxes was computed. But that the Regulations issued by the three Consuls provided no penalty for a breach of their observance, and that, apparently, if Sir J. Thurston were to impose any such penalties by Regulation, British subjects would be placed in a different position from the subjects of other countries.

That Sir John Thurston requested instructions as to the manner in which the payment of taxes was to be enforced in the future, and pointed out that, though the greater part of them would be payable in Apia, and, therefore, the Municipal Council would be able to make the necessary Regulations within the limits of that Municipality, the Council had no jurisdiction outside of Apia. That he was, therefore, in some doubt as to how outside taxes could and should be enforced.

That your Lordship was inclined to agree with the High Commissioner, that amounts due could probably be sued for before the Chief Justice of Samoa as civil debts due to the Samoan Government, but that any penalties which might be attached to failure to comply with the tax laws must be tried, so far as the subjects of the Treaty Powers were concerned, by their own Courts, the Chief Justice not possessing criminal jurisdiction over the subjects of those Powers.

That your Lordship would be glad, however, of our opinion on these points, for it would appear that when the Samoan Government should have passed laws for the regulation of taxes, it would be the duty of the High Commissioner to make Regulations imposing penalties for entering the country at any other port than Apia, and for any failure to make the required declarations of values and other Returns.

That your Lordship would also wish to be advised whether it was within the High Commissioner's power to impose a penalty on any person carrying on a particular trade without having paid the licence prescribed by the Samoan Government. That Sir J. Thurston was of opinion that, under the existing Orders in Council, that would not be within his power, but that he stated that it would be advisable that such penalties should be imposed, and that he was unable to see, should he be correct in his view, who would be able to enforce them against British subjects outside of Apia.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted therein, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Powers of High Commissioner as to imposition of penalties, and manner in which such penalties should be imposed.

That, in our opinion, it is competent to the High Commissioner for the Western Pacific, under Article 7 of the Western Pacific Order, 1879, to impose penalties upon British subjects, and that Sir John Thurston would therefore be acting within his legal power in issuing a Regulation which would enforce in its entirety the Regulations as to taxes agreed upon by the three Consuls.

We are not prepared to say that the imposition of penalties upon British subjects for breach of fiscal Regulations could properly be held to place them in a different position from that of German subjects and American citizens, and it must be assumed that these two Signatory Powers will take adequate steps for enforcing upon their respective nationals the Regulations which have been agreed to.

It might, however, be desirable that the penalties should, if possible, be similar in all three cases, and be simultaneously prescribed.

Claims and disputes in consequence of cancelling of Persian Lottery Loan Concession.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, October 28, 1890.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the circumstances under which the Persian Lottery Loan Concession was cancelled by His Majesty the Shah of Persia, and to the claims and disputes which had in consequence arisen.

That our Report of the 5th December last dealt with various questions arising out of the endeavours of certain parties to float the Concession in this country.

That on the 10th December last, however, the Persian Minister for Foreign Affairs notified to Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran that the Concession was cancelled.

That a notification to the same effect was conveyed by the Persian Government to Malcom Khan by telegram on the 5th of the same month.

That Malcom Khan had, a short time previously, been recalled from his post as Persian Minister in this country.

That his letter of recall was dated December 1889, no particular day being specified, but that his audience of Her Majesty to deliver his letter of recall did not take place till the 10th March, 1890, up to which date at least it was presumed that he would enjoy the privileges of extraterritoriality. That in reply, moreover, to a specific inquiry which had been addressed to the Persian Government with reference to that point, Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran had been informed (see Sir H. D. Wolff's telegram No. 252) "that the telegram of the 5th December cancelling the Lottery Concession was officially addressed to Malcom Khan as Persian Minister in London."

That a letter had now been received from Messrs. Slaughter and May, stating that the question of the revocation of the Concession was one of vital importance to their clients, the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate, on whose behalf they might hereafter have to claim the support and protection of Her Majesty's Government, and inquiring when and to whom the notice of withdrawal was first given.

That they, at the same time, inclosed a Circular addressed by the Directors of the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate to their shareholders, to which our particular attention was directed, as it contained a statement of the dealings which had taken place in regard to the Lottery Concession in question.

That the precise date of the notification of the withdrawal of the Concession had been ascertained by telegraph from Her Majesty's Legation at Tehran, and that Sir Thomas Sanderson was to inclose a draft of the reply which it was proposed to return to Messrs. Slaughter and May's communication.

That it appeared probable that the questions at issue would eventually, in some form or other, become the subject of legal proceedings, and that, under those circumstances, Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the accompanying reply to Messrs. Slaughter and May into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion (1) as to whether any statements made in relation to this matter by the Secretary of State, or under his direction, in answer to specific inquiries addressed to him by Messrs. Slaughter and May, would, if made bonâ fide and without malice, be considered to have been made on a privileged occasion; and (2) whether, apart from any question of privilege, the terms of the inclosed draft were in themselves sufficiently guarded to protect Her Majesty's Government and the Foreign Office from all legal liability towards the parties and persons severally concerned in this dispute.

That any general observations which we might have to offer on other aspects of the case were also invited.

We were also honoured with Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 20th instant, inclosing a further letter from Messrs. Slaughter and May.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

No privilege. Do not think it incumbent on H. M.'s Govt. to give any further assistance to persons interested.

That, in our opinion, no privilege will attach to any communications made by Her Majesty's Government to Messrs. Slaughter and May, or other persons interested in this matter; and, having regard to the character of the Concession in question, we do not think it incumbent on Her Majesty's Government to give any further assistance to the persons interested.

Approve terms of draft despatch to Messrs. Slaughter and May.

We note, however, the promise made in the Foreign Office letter of the 30th September, 1890, and approve the terms of the draft now before us.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, October , 1890.

WITH reference to my letter of the 30th ultimo respecting the Persian Lottery Loans Concession, I am directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to inform you that, according to the information obtained by Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran from the Persian Government, and reported by him by telegram, the fact of the Concession being cancelled was notified by a telegram from the Persian Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Persian Legation in London, dated the 5th December, 1889.

That the case in question had already been before us, and formed the subject of our Report of the 25th January, 1889.

L. O. Report, 25th January, 1889. Peru, No. 44.

That in consequence of the opinion therein expressed, Her Majesty's Minister in Peru, under instructions from the Foreign Office, addressed to the Peruvian Government the note, of which a copy was inclosed, in the paper marked (A).

That as no answer was received, he made a further representation on the 22nd December in the terms of the paper marked (B), and received, in reply, the note of which a copy was given in Inclosure 1 of No. 2 of the accompanying print, marked (C).

That the note which contained copies (Inclosures 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13) of the sentences of the different Courts, and (Inclosure 14) the Report of the Fiscal of the Supreme Court to his Government, might be taken as the Peruvian case.

That it was submitted to the Company, and that their reply, dated the 22nd September last (No. 6 in the printed paper C), contained their counter case.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether, having regard to the various facts and arguments adduced on either side in those documents respectively, Her Majesty's Government should reiterate the demand they had already made on behalf of the Company upon the Peruvian Government for the repayment of the 2,000*l.* said to have been improperly exacted, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Reasons why H.M.'s Govt. is fully justified in strongly supporting the claim of the Pacific Steam Navigation Company for repayment of the 2,000*l.* said to have been improperly exacted.

That, in our opinion, there is nothing in the note now submitted to us, nor in the Report of the Fiscal of the Supreme Court, which justifies the action of the Peruvian Government in respect of which Her Majesty's Government has already made remonstrance.

It is contended that the Company is not now entitled to diplomatic assistance because it acquiesced in the conduct of legal proceedings before the several Courts. This, however, was not a matter of option on the part of the Company, and, in our opinion, the action of the Peruvian Government, the long delay in the proceedings, and the extravagant sentence pronounced nearly eleven years after the alleged offence, fully justify Her Majesty's Government in strongly supporting the claim of the Pacific Steam Navigation Company.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir James Fergusson's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by your Lordship's direction, a despatch,* together with its inclosures, lately received, from Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon with reference to a claim for compensation which had been put forward by the agents of the British steamer "Elbe," in respect of alleged illegal interference with, and obstruction to, that vessel while she was endeavouring to take in her cargo at the port of Setubal.

That the material circumstances of the case, as therein set forth, appeared to be briefly as follows:—

On the evening of the 6th February the British ship "Elbe" arrived off St. Ubes, in Portugal, for the purpose of taking on board salt and other cargo. Everything was made ready to ship the salt from the lighters which had come alongside, and the master finding that no labourers came off from shore, made preparation for taking the cargo on board by means of the ship's crew.

At noon part of the crew went into the lighters with the gear for shipping the salt, but large crowds of the inhabitants of the town, armed with clubs, came alongside the boats, and by intimidating the crew, prevented them from proceeding with the operation of loading. The master, desiring to enter a formal protest, was informed that it would not be prudent for him to go on shore, and a protest was brought on board by the pilot, which protest the master signed and returned. The inhabitants of the town then removed the ship's gear from the lighters and towed them from the ship's side. The police boat having been alongside the whole time and no attempt having been made to prevent the men from removing the lighters, the master, seeing that no protection was afforded to the ship, decided to leave the port, and did so at 5 P.M. on the same day on which the events above mentioned had occurred.

The owner's agents at Oporto consider that indemnity is due from the Portuguese Government for actual loss of freight and for the costs of protests, telegrams, and other expenses which were occasioned in consequence of the "Elbe" not having been able to ship the cargo.

That Sir James Fergusson was to request that we would take the despatch and inclosures transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the case was one which Her Majesty's Government should represent to that of Portugal, and if so, upon what grounds such representatations could most effectively be based.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

H. M.'s Govt. should not support claim.

That in our opinion the case is not one in which Her Majesty's Government should make or support any claim against the Government of Portugal. We do not see that any officials of the Government were guilty of neglect of duty, and it appears that but for the hasty action of the captain in leaving the port, measures might have been taken to protect the shipment of the cargo.

Claim of Anglo-Portuguese Oyster Fisheries Co. against Portuguese Govt.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir James Fergusson's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the affairs of the Anglo-Portuguese Oyster Fisheries Company.

That we should perceive from your Lordship's despatch No. 43, Commercial, of the 12th July last, that the case then appeared to have reached such a phase that its merits could only be satisfactorily determined by some one thoroughly conversant with Portuguese law and procedure.

That the whole of the papers were therefore submitted to Dr. Franco do Castro, a jurist of eminence, whose opinion thereon was inclosed in Mr. Petre's despatch No. 110, Commercial, of the 8th November last. That the opinion in question contained a very full account of the case, and of the many points of Portuguese law and procedure which it had raised; that it might not therefore be necessary for us to consider all the papers, but only those in the accompanying print, together with the despatch to Mr. Petre (No. 57, Commercial) of the 2nd December, and the despatch from Mr. Petre (No. 122, Commercial) of the 11th December, and the letter to Mr. Hart of the 4th December last, and his answer of the 7th of that month, regarding two points on which additional information was thought to be desirable. That our previous Reports on the case were also inclosed for convenience of reference.

* Mr. Petre, No. 12, Commercial, February 14, 1890.

That on consideration of the jurist's opinion, your Lordship addressed to Mr. Petre the above-mentioned despatch (No. 57, Commercial) of the 2nd December.

That the reply of the Portuguese Government to the representation made in accordance with that instruction was inclosed in Mr. Petre's despatch (No. 11, Commercial) of the 8th February, and that as it was unfavourable to the claims of the Company that reply was referred to Dr. Franco do Castro, whose observations thereon were inclosed in Mr. Petre's despatch No. 20, Commercial, of the 5th March.

That the Secretary to the Company had now forwarded a claim against the Portuguese Government for illegally taking and withholding the properties bought by the Company from the late H. J. Place, thereby stopping and destroying the Company's business, besides causing heavy legal and other expenses.

That the Company estimated their monetary loss at the large figure of 441,102*l.*, and were desirous that Her Majesty's Government should now present a formal claim for that amount to the Portuguese Government on their behalf. (See Mr. Hart of the 14th March, 1890.)

Alleged delay in legal proceedings, and denial of justice by Portuguese Govt.

That it would, however, be perceived that legal proceedings in the case were still to some extent pending, but that in view of the extraordinary manner in which those proceedings were apparently being protracted by the agents of the Portuguese Executive, Sir James Fergusson was to request us to take the above mentioned papers into our consideration, and to favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the delay had assumed a character which could be regarded as a denial of justice by the Government of one nation to the subjects of another, and likewise with any general observations which we might have to offer on the present aspect of the case.

That the other papers in the case were inclosed for convenience of reference.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and in obedience to your Lordship's commands have the honour to

Report—

No improper and vexatious delay on part of Portuguese Govt.

That we do not find in the papers before us any allegation that there has been improper and vexatious delay on the part of the legal Representatives of the Portuguese Government in the prosecution of the steps which it appears to be admitted that they are entitled to take, under the Portuguese law, for the purpose of preventing the establishment, as against that Government, of the right of the Company to the possession of the oyster-beds in question.

No denial of justice calling for intervention of H.M.'s Govt.

In these circumstances we are unable to say that there has been a denial of justice calling for peremptory intervention by Her Majesty's Government, and, having regard to the assurances contained in the letter of Senhor H. Ribeiro, we do not suggest that any steps should be taken further than requesting that the Portuguese Government will take care that no unnecessary delays should be allowed to prolong a condition of uncertainty which has already inflicted losses so grave upon the English Company.

My Lord,

Confiscation of British schooner "Araunah" for seal-hunting in Behring's Sea.

That the circumstances under which the seizure was said to have taken place would be found set out in letters addressed to the Canadian Government by Messrs. Hall and Goepel, the owners of the "Araunah," dated the 21st September and the 26th October, 1888, and by the master of that ship in a letter to Mr. Dering, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at St. Petersburgh, dated the 27th August, 1888.

That on the 30th November, 1888, Sir Robert Morier furnished your Lordship with a further Report upon the case, and, at the same time, asked for instructions with regard to certain doubtful points before making formal representation on the subject to the Russian Government.

That on the 30th November, 1888, his Excellency wrote to Messrs. Hall and Goepel, asking for information on certain points which he considered required further explanation.

Note from M. de Giers raising various questions of international law.

That in reply to inquiries made by the Russian Government for information as to the proceedings of the Russian authorities with regard to the "Araunah" (from Sir R. Morier's No. 443 of the 30th December, 1888), a note was received from M. de Giers which appeared to Sir R. Morier to raise various questions of international law (see Sir R. Morier's No. 264).

That his Excellency was thereupon informed that before Her Majesty's Government could form any decided opinion as to their future action in the case they would require to be furnished with fuller information on certain points which were indicated to him (to Sir R. Morier, No. 281, 3rd October, 1889).

That M. de Giers' answer upon those points formed an inclosure in Sir R. Morier's despatch No. 79 of the 19th October, 1889.

That the whole of the correspondence had been referred to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, who, in a letter dated the 17th April, 1890, pointed out that if the "Araunah" at the time of her seizure was engaged in committing an offence against the local laws within the local jurisdiction, there would seem to be nothing to show that the confiscation was not carried out with all the formalities required by the Tribunal by which she was condemned, viz., that of the Intendant of the Commander Islands acting under the supervision of the Government of the Russian Province of Amour.

That, in connection with the subject, Sir Thomas Sanderson was to invite our attention to our Reports, dated the 19th July last and 2nd ultimo, on the cases of the French fishing-schooners "Virginie" and "Amazone," which were boarded within the territorial waters of Newfoundland by the Customs Commissioners of that Colony, and by them conveyed to the port of Placentia, where their respective masters were charged before the Resident Magistrate with a violation of the Colonial Bait Acts.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was also particularly to call our attention to the three Reports of the Solicitor to Her Majesty's Customs, which were submitted to us in connection with the cases of those vessels, and which dealt with the practice of this country in regard to the exercise of the right of search in territorial waters.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would, at our earliest convenience, favour your Lordship with our opinion—

1. Whether, in view of the Reports of the Solicitor to the Board of Customs of the 12th and 14th November, 1888, and of his further Memorandum, inclosed with the Colonial Office letter of the 31st January, 1890, on the seizures of the French vessels "Virginie" and "Amazone" for contravention of the Newfoundland Bait Act, it could, having regard to the English doctrine and practice on such matters, be safely contended by Her Majesty's Government that a private vessel, with a duly authorized officer on board, and flying the proper flag, and under special instructions, could not rightly make such a seizure as that now under consideration.

2. Whether the Russian Government were justified by international law in subjecting the subjects of a foreign friendly State to informal Tribunals such as those indicated by the procedure in the case of the "Araunah."

3. Whether the fact of the canoes which belonged to the vessel committing an offence, assuming them to have been within Russian jurisdiction, warranted the seizure of the "Araunah" if she was not, at the time of the committal of the alleged offence, or at the time of the capture, within such jurisdiction.

That your Lordship would also be glad to be furnished with any general observations we might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

1. That, in our opinion, a private vessel, with a duly authorized officer on board and flying a proper flag, and under special instructions, may lawfully make a seizure such as that now under consideration.

2. We see nothing inconsistent with international law in the establishment by the Russian Government of such Tribunals as those indicated by the procedure in the case of the "Araunah."

3. Even if the "Araunah" at the time of the seizure was herself outside the 3-mile territorial limit, the fact that she was by means of her boats carrying on fishing within Russian waters, without the prescribed licence, warranted her seizure and confiscation according to the provisions of the municipal law regulating the use of those waters.

Proposed establishment of differential railway rates in Russia in favour of foreign goods imported in vessels sailing under Russian flag.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir James Fergusson's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin,* relative to a proposed establishment of differential railway rates in Russia in favour of foreign goods imported into that country by vessels sailing under the Russian flag.

That Sir James Fergusson was to direct our especial attention to Article V of the Treaty between Great Britain and Russia of January 1859, which provided that "all merchandize and articles of commerce, the produce or manufacture either of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, its dominions and possessions, or of any other country, which are or may be legally importable into the ports of the dominions and possessions of His Majesty the Emperor of All the Russias, in Russian vessels, may likewise be imported into those ports in British vessels, without being liable to any other or higher duties, of whatever denomination, than if such merchandize and articles were imported in Russian vessels."

That Sir James Fergusson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the point as to whether the Article of the Treaty above quoted might be properly held to be applicable to railway rates, although the latter were not specifically mentioned in the Treaty.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Proposed establishment of differential railway rates is contrary to Treaty of 1859.

That, in our opinion, the proposed establishment of differential railway rates in favour of foreign goods imported into Russia in vessels sailing under the Russian flag is clearly at variance with the spirit and intention of the Treaty of 1859, and is inconsistent with the terms of section 4 of clause XI of that Treaty.

Russian Government should be remonstrated with.

It is not clear, upon the papers before us, whether the railways affected by the new scale are owned by the Government or are private undertakings, subject only to Government control. But, in either case, we are of opinion that remonstrance upon the subject may properly be addressed to the Russian Government.

Seizure of the "Araunah" off Copper Island by Russian authorities.

That, in consequence of our Report of the 2nd May last, the despatch of the 9th of that month (No. 16 in the Parliamentary Paper "Russia No. 1, 1890") was addressed to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at St. Petersburgh, informing him that, "as at present advised, Her Majesty's Government do not propose to address any further representation to the Russian Government in regard to this case."

That your Lordship had now received a letter, dated the 6th October, from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, forwarding a despatch from the Canadian Government, in which they suggested that the case should be again brought before the Russian Government, and brought forward various arguments in support of that view.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the statements and arguments in the Minute of the Canadian Privy Council, embodying the Report of the Canadian Minister of Marine, led us in any respects, and, if so, to what extent, to modify the views already expressed by us in our Report of the 2nd May last.

That your Lordship would be glad to be favoured, at the same time, with any general observations which we might desire to offer on the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Do not modify Report of 2nd May last.

Imprisonment and death of P. Stanver in Philippine Is.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 13th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the circumstances attending the imprisonment and death, in the Philippine Islands, of a British subject named Peter Stanver.

Circumstances attending his arrest, imprisonment, and death.

That from the inclosed despatches (Consul Gollan, Nos. 1 and 2 of the 2nd and 9th January, 1888) from Her Majesty's Consul at Manila it would be seen that, in December 1886, this man, a native of Jamaica, was sent down to Balabac by a British resident at that port to assist a shipwrecked crew in the salvage of some property. That while so occupied with the sailors, the wreck on board of which they were working broke up, and that they had to get to shore on a raft to save their lives. That Stanver reached Balabac utterly worn out by the hardships he had undergone, and that, on his party being ordered by the Governor of that Settlement to work on the roads, he refused, and shouted to his comrades not to do so. That thereupon he was arrested, without being informed of the nature of his alleged offence, and kept in irons until conveyed to Manila. That there, notwithstanding the representations of Consul Gollan, he was imprisoned for six months without trial or investigation, until, being taken ill, he was removed to the prison ward of the hospital, where, on the 16th June, 1887, he died, without, as it appeared, having received proper medical attendance.

Consul's inquiry into action of Spanish authorities.

That Her Majesty's Consul thereupon pressed for an exhaustive inquiry, and for an explanation of the action of the Spanish authorities. That six months elapsed before he was informed that Stanver had been guilty of disrespect to the Governor's authority, and that, in consequence of the death of the accused, the proceedings against him had been quashed.

Representation to Spanish Govt.

That, owing to the unsatisfactory character of that reply, Her Majesty's Ambassador at Madrid was instructed to call the earnest attention of the Spanish Government to the facts described above, and to urgently press them to institute an immediate and rigorous investigation of the case.

Their reply thereto.

That the reply of the Spanish Government was to the effect that Stanver had been exempted from labour on account of his weak state, but that he was arrested for inciting his companions to resist the order to work, and for using threatening gestures to the Governor, in the course of which he is said to have handled a revolver which he had concealed under his shirt. That they moreover asserted that he died in hospital of typhoid fever, and denied the allegation that he did not receive proper medical assistance.

That Consul Gollan, to whom the above explanation, with its accompanying documents, was communicated, obtained the opinion of a Spanish lawyer resident in the Colony, who stated that the action of the Governor was arbitrary and illegal; that the subsequent proceedings of the authorities at Manila were dilatory and inconclusive; and that there was an utter absence of proof of crime to warrant the treatment which Stanver received, and through which he undoubtedly died.

Further representation to Spanish Govt.

That Sir C. Ford was therefore again instructed to call the special attention of the Spanish Government to the absence of any serious offence on the part of Stanver, who was not even accused of any breach of Spanish law, and to press for the dismissal of the Governor of Balabac for his inhuman and illegal treatment of the deceased.

Spanish reply thereto.

That that representation received no reply until April last, when the Spanish Government expressed their dissent from the views of Her Majesty's Government, and declined to take any steps in the matter, on the ground that the Governor had acted in strict accordance with Spanish law, and with the universal mode of administering justice in the Philippine Islands, whether the person accused happened to be of Spanish or any other nationality.

Draft of remonstrance to Spanish Govt. for approval.

That the accompanying draft of a further instruction to Sir C. Ford had been prepared, but that, inasmuch as the legal aspect of the case was not altogether free from difficulty, your Lordship would first be glad to be favoured with our opinion as to whether the terms of the proposed representation to the Spanish Government were suitable, or whether any, and, if so, what, alternative action on the part of Her Majesty's Government presented itself to us as preferable under the circumstances.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Approving draft of remonstrance as amended.

That, in our opinion, the facts appearing from the papers before us are of a grave character, and call for emphatic remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government, but we doubt whether they are sufficient to justify expressions of such a character as those proposed in the draft submitted to us.

If it is considered politic to make so strong a representation, we think the passage excised by us in red ink* on p. 2 should be omitted.

We have, &c.

Draft of Despatch to Mr. Barrington (as altered by the Law Officers).

Sir, Foreign Office, June , 1890.

I HAVE received Sir C. Ford's despatch No. 53 of the 12th April last, inclosing a note from the Spanish Government, in which they decline to take any action with regard to the case of the deceased British subject Peter Stanver, and justify the action of their officials in the Philippine Islands.

I have to request you to state to the Spanish Government, in reply, that Her Majesty's Government deeply regret that they should have refused to give any more satisfactory explanation of the inhuman treatment by their local authorities of a British subject, ~~and demand to be furnished with particulars of the law and judicial proceedings under which, and of the offence for which, the deceased man was imprisoned for six months. If this demand be refused,~~ Her Majesty's Government can only conclude that British subjects in Manila are liable to be sent to goal without trial at the caprice of the Governor, and that the Spanish Government is ready to tolerate and justify the most flagrant acts of illegality on the part of their Colonial authorities against the subjects of a friendly Power.

Annex 2.

Despatch to Mr. Barrington (as amended by the Marquis of Salisbury).

Sir, Foreign Office, June 18, 1890.

I HAVE received Sir C. Ford's despatch No. 53 of the 12th April last, inclosing a note from the Spanish Government in which they decline to take any action with regard to the case of the deceased British subject Peter Stanver, and justify the action of their officials in the Philippine Islands.

I have to request you to state to the Spanish Government, in reply, that Her Majesty's Government deeply regret that they should have refused to give any more satisfactory explanation of the treatment which a British subject has undergone at the hands of their local authorities. It will give rise to the belief that in Manila the subjects of a friendly Power are liable to arbitrary imprisonment of a severe character at the will of the Governor; and that even when such treatment has a fatal issue, no redress can be hoped for from the Government of Spain.

I am, &c.

O. in C. for trial of British subjects for serious crimes in Ottoman dominions. Draft for approval.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of an Order in Council (to be cited as "The Ottoman Order in Council, 1890") which had been prepared by Mr. R. S. Wright, under instructions from the Foreign Office, for the purpose of making further provision for the trial of serious criminal offences committed by British subjects within the Ottoman dominions.

That the circumstances which had pointedly drawn your Lordship's attention to the necessity of supplementing the arrangements hitherto in force for the trial of such offences when committed in remote parts of the Ottoman dominions were briefly as follow:—

That on the 5th October last Her Majesty's Consul-General and Judge at Constantinople informed your Lordship that Colonel Tweedie, Her Majesty's Consul-General at Bagdad, had reported thence a charge against a British Indian subject named Abdullah Khan of murdering his wife at Kadhivan, about 4 miles from Bagdad.

That the minutes, depositions, and exhibits taken in the case by Colonel Tweedie were inclosed in Sir H. Fawcett's despatch, but that it appeared, for the purposes of the present reference, immaterial to trouble us with them.

That Her Majesty's Consul-General at Bagdad was not, under the provisions of the existing Ottoman Orders in Council of 1873 and 1882, competent to try cases which would be capital in England, and that the prisoner must therefore (as the law stood at present) either be sent as a British Indian subject, under the provisions of section 265 of the Ottoman Order in Council, 1873, and of section 4 of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1843," to take his trial at Bombay, or the Judge or Assistant Judge of the Supreme Court at Constantinople must proceed to Bagdad to try him on the spot (see section 34 of the Ottoman Order in Council, 1873).

That the case, so far, seemed to correspond in its main features with a case known as the Kerbellah case which arose in 1885, and which formed the subject of two Reports, dated respectively the 24th February and 26th March, 1885, from the then Law Officers of the Crown.

That in that case the latter alternative was adopted, and Mr. Assistant Judge Tarring was sent to Bagdad to try the accused person.

That in the present instance, however, it was considered most undesirable to follow a similar course, as Mr. Tarring's prolonged absence from Constantinople (the journey and trial would probably occupy some four months) at the present time would, in view of the fact that no duly qualified Consular officer was at present available to act as Assistant Judge at Constantinople during Mr. Tarring's absence, be attended with great inconvenience to public interests; while the former alternative of sending the prisoner and witnesses to Bombay was open to grave objection on grounds of expense and inconvenience, and was, moreover, considered unsuitable by the India Office, who had been consulted on the matter.

That with a view of meeting the immediate difficulty it was suggested by Sir H. Fawcett that powers should be conferred upon Her Majesty's Consul-General at Bagdad to enable him to try cases of that kind, but that Colonel Tweedie did not possess the legal qualifications prescribed by the Ottoman Orders in Council of 1873 and 1882 for a Judge in regard to the trial of cases which in England were capital, and that it appeared to your Lordship undesirable to modify by further legislation the extent of the qualifications which were then thought necessary for the trial of those particular crimes.

That, under the circumstances, it seemed preferable that an Order in Council should be prepared in general terms enabling the Secretary of State to nominate and appoint from time to time, whenever he should deem that course advisable in the public interest, any person possessing the legal qualifications requisite for an Assistant Judge of the Supreme Court at Constantinople (see section 5 of the Ottoman Order in Council, 1882), in order to proceed to any part of the Ottoman dominions for the purpose of trying any case or cases of exceptional gravity or importance, and demanding for their trial special legal experience and knowledge.

That Sir T. V. Lister was to request that we would take the draft Order in Council into our consideration in connection with the other papers transmitted therewith, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether its terms were such as might properly be submitted to the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to Approve draft.

That, in our opinion, the terms of the draft Order in Council are such as may properly be submitted to the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

Foreign Office, July , 1890.

Sir,

I HAVE received your despatch No. 278 of the 19th ultimo, on the subject of a report you had received from Her Majesty's Consul in Crete, forwarding a claim for indemnity from Mr. Cassimati, Clerk to Her Majesty's Consulate at Canea, in consequence of the destruction of his property while it was being guarded by Turkish soldiers, as well as a claim to indemnity from Mrs. Moazzo, widow of the late Vice-Consul at Canea, whose property was burnt by Christians owing to her holding it jointly with a Mussulman. You ask to be furnished with instructions before replying to Mr. Biliotti.

The general principles on which Her Majesty's Government have consistently acted in such cases are that—

1. In times of insurrection or riot foreigners are entitled to as ample protection for their persons and property as are natives, but that they are not as a rule entitled to any special or greater protection.

2. That if the authorities neglect to protect foreigners equally with natives, or to take reasonable or proper precautions to quell a riot or insurrection which might otherwise have been prevented, and foreigners suffer injury in consequence, either of these circumstances would afford a primâ facie ground for remonstrance on the part of the foreign Government, and for a claim for compensation on the foreigner's behalf.

Her Majesty's Government would, however, in practice require the clearest proof of negligence on the part of the Government of a friendly State, or of culpability on the part of its authorities, before intervening on behalf of British subjects so long as they were accorded as favourable treatment as was extended to natives or to foreigners of other nationalities.

Provided that the above principles were not violated or infringed by the Turkish authorities in dealing with any cases in which British subjects were concerned arising out of the riots in Crete, Her Majesty's Government would not be disposed to press the claims of such British subjects in any special manner upon the consideration of the Porte.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. Villiers Lister's letter of the 15th ultimo, stating that, by your Lordship's direction, he had to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, which related to the levying of fees under the Ottoman Order in Council, and that he was to request our opinion as to whether those fees were levied as Consular fees, under the Consular Act of 1825 (6 Geo. IV, cap. 87), or solely by virtue of the Foreign Jurisdiction Act of 1843 (6 & 7 Vict., cap. 94).

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the fees under the Ottoman Order in Council are levied under the authority of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1843," but that, in view of the questions that have been raised, we think it advisable that the recital of the Act of the 6 Geo. IV, cap. 87, should be retained in the Order in Council, and that in every case some maximum limit of fee should be inserted.

Mr. C. Charnaud's claim against Turkish Govt. for compensation for seizure in 1877 of steam flour-mill.

Sir W. Wh No. 346.

That at the time of the seizure Mr. Charnaud sought and obtained the intervention of Her Majesty's Embassy at Constantinople, and a summary of what then occurred would be found in the inclosed despatch from Sir W. White (vide also Inclosures 1, 2, 3, and 4 in the said despatch).

That subsequently, but not until long after, Mr. Charnaud was put again into possession of his property, but no indemnity had been received by him for the losses he sustained by its sequestration.

That the Turco-Russian Commission for the settlement of all claims arising out of the late war recognized the justice of the joint claim preferred by M. Franchini and Mr. Charnaud, and awarded them the sum of 60,000 fr., to be paid integrally and immediately.

That it would, however, appear that M. Franchini had as yet only received 434*l.* of the 30,000 fr. awarded to him, while Mr. Charnaud had, as already stated, received nothing.

That the question remained in abeyance until lately, when, on the 21st October last, Mr. Charnaud addressed a letter to Her Majesty's Embassy (vide Inclosure 5 in Sir W. White's No. 346) asking their intervention with a view to obtain from the Turkish Government payment of the sum of 30,000 fr., with interest from 1877 up to date, as a simple claim for rental for the work wrought out of his mill, and as his share of the 60,000 fr. fixed by the Russo-Turkish Commission after the conclusion of the war, of which the half was allotted to his partner, M. Franchini.

Sir W. White's note to the Porte claiming payment of sum of 30,000 fr. awarded by Russo-Turkish Commission to Mr. Charnaud.

That, on the 28th February last, Sir W. White addressed a note to the Porte calling attention to the previous correspondence, and claiming payment of the sum of 30,000 fr. as Mr. Charnaud's portion of the sum of 60,000 fr. awarded by the Russo-Turkish Commission.

The Porte's reply thereto.

Treaty between Russia and Turkey of February 8, 1879.

That the Porte's reply formed Inclosure 7 in Sir W. White's despatch, and it would be seen that they decline to admit Mr. Charnaud's claim, and contend that an indemnity was awarded to M. Franchini only in execution of a decision given by the Russo-Turkish Commission, and as a consequence of the Treaty of Peace between Russia and Turkey signed on the 8th February, 1879, and other acts establishing the basis of the indemnity to be paid to Russian subjects who had suffered losses during the war.

That the Porte further argued that Mr. Charnaud's claim was not based on any legal ground, since the Imperial authorities, under the pressure of the exigencies of war, had merely seized and made temporary use of a mill which had been abandoned by its owners, and which was eventually handed over to the Russian authorities, who were in military possession of the place, a course which they maintained to be amply justified by the rights of war.

That the Treaty of Peace between Russia and Turkey of the 8th February, 1879, to which reference has been made, was annexed.

That Sir P. Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted therewith into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the position taken up in this matter by the Porte could be contested, if so, upon what grounds, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

Mr. Charnaud's claim should not be pressed.

That, in our opinion, Mr. Charnaud's claim should not be pressed. The contention of the Turkish Government appears to us to be sound, unless compensation was paid to Turkish subjects under similar circumstances, of which there is no suggestion. We note also that it is not shown that Mr. Charnaud sustained any damage at all, and that no sufficient explanation is given of the claim being allowed to sleep for eleven years.

Draft of letter to Mr. Stewart McNicoll respecting detention of Mr. Anderson, of steam-ship "Franklin," on board Turkish brig "Adelphotis" in consequence of collision at sea.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Villiers Lister's letter of the 15th ultimo, stating that he had to transmit to us, by your Lordship's direction, the draft of a letter which it was proposed to address to Mr. Stewart McNicoll, for communication to Mr. Anderson, late second officer of the steam-ship "Franklin," who had invoked the assistance of Her Majesty's Government under the following circumstances.

That on the 24th October last year a collision occurred on the high seas between the British steam-ship "Franklin" and the Turkish brig "Adelphotis," of Kios or Cassos, John Anderson, the second officer of the former, being at the time of the collision off duty and asleep in his berth. Anderson, having proceeded on board the "Adelphotis" for the purpose of rendering any assistance that might be required, was illegally and forcibly detained on that vessel against his will not only on the high seas, but also after her entry into the port of Kastro, and suffered great privations in consequence. Mr. Anderson has asked for redress through Mr. S. McNicoll.

That it had been suggested by Mr. Stavrides, Dragoman to Her Majesty's Embassy at Constantinople, that in the event of the "Adelphotis" putting into a British port, the local (British) authorities of the port should compel the master, through his Consul, to find bail that he would proceed to Constantinople to undergo his trial.

That the opinion of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs and the Board of Trade upon that suggestion was given in the proposed draft to Mr. McNicoll.

That Sir Villiers Lister was to request that we would take the draft transmitted herewith into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted in his letter, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We were also favoured with Sir Villiers Lister's further communication of the 11th instant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

Approve draft letter as altered.

That, in our opinion, the draft letter to Mr. McNicoll, as altered by us, expresses the legal considerations applicable to the case; we are not aware of any means of compelling the master of the "Adelphotis" to give bail, as suggested by Mr. Stavrides.

Foreign Office, August , 1890.

Sir,

With reference to the letter from this Office of the 10th ultimo respecting the case of John Anderson, of the steam-ship "Franklin," I am now directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to inform you that the Board of Trade are unable to suggest any means of redress other than by resort to the Turkish Tribunals unless the master of the Turkish vessel should come to England, in which case an action might be brought against him in the Superior Court, but he could not be arrested or held to bail. There is, however, little probability of the master coming and remaining here, so that proceedings in this country are of no practical value.

As the Merchant Shipping Acts apply only to British subjects and to the master, officers, and crews of British ships upon the high seas, their provisions afford no assistance to Mr. Anderson in the present case.

Trial and sentence of Abdullah Khan, otherwise Dossabhoy Nowroji, for murder of Zohra Begum.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Ottoman O. in C., 1890.

That the proceedings were conducted at Bagdad before Mr. W. B. Cracknall, Barrister-at-Law, Her Majesty's Vice-Consul at Zanzibar, who had been appointed by the Secretary of State, in pursuance of the power conferred by Article II of the Ottoman Order in Council, 1890, to be and act as a Judge for the purpose of the aforesaid trial.

Ottoman O. in C., 1873.

That the Judge found it impossible to fulfil the condition of a trial by jury according to the Ottoman Order in Council, 1873, and that, therefore, in pursuance of Article 266 of that Order and of Article 2 of the Order of the 21st March, 1890, he tried the case with two Assessors. That in the event the accused was adjudged guilty of the murder for which he was indicted.

That a complete record of the proceedings would be found inclosed in Mr. Cracknall's Report to Sir Henry Fawcett, Her Majesty's Consul-General and Judge of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople, who had forwarded it to the Foreign Office in his despatch No. 50 of the 1st July last.

That among the papers would also be found, under cover of a letter from Messrs. Ardesir, Hormusje, and Dinshaw, a Petition from Nowroji Dossabhoy Hatiram, the father of the condemned man, praying that the Secretary of State would "be pleased to distrust the story of the prosecution and set aside the conviction of murder against the accused and order him to be set at liberty."

That your Lordship proposed that the maximum penalty which the Secretary of State could, having regard to the provisions of the Ottoman Order in Council of 1873, direct to be imposed, i.e., twenty years' imprisonment, should be awarded to the prisoner. But that, before acting in the matter, your Lordship would be glad to learn whether we agreed in that view, or whether we considered that the circumstances of the case would be more suitably met by the infliction of any lighter, and, if so what, term of imprisonment.

Sir, Foreign Office, November , 1890.

WITH reference to Mr. Tarring's despatch No. 86 of the 20th ultimo, forwarding the original depositions taken before Mr. Cracknall, at Bagdad, in re Regina v. Abdullah Khan, I am directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to inform you that, after consultation with the Law Officers of the Crown, his Lordship is of opinion that there is in this case no ground for reducing the term of imprisonment below the maximum permitted by the provisions of the Ottoman Order in Council of 1873.

In pursuance, therefore, of section 269 of that Order, Lord Salisbury directs that the punishment to be inflicted on the prisoner shall be twenty years' imprisonment with hard labour.

[After reciting the following letter, they report as on p. 74:—]

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, November 12, 1890.

Claims for indemnity on account of destruction of property of British subjects during riots in Crete.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquis of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list,* which relate to the claims for indemnity put forward by certain British subjects on account of the destruction of their property during the riots in Crete.

On the receipt of your Report of the 18th July last, instructions in the terms of the draft approved by you were sent to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople as to the general principles on which Her Majesty's Government have consistently acted with regard to claims arising out of riots or insurrections in foreign countries, and these instructions were communicated by Mr. Fane to Her Majesty's Consul in Crete.

Mr. Biliotti has now addressed a further despatch to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople with reference to the claims of five British subjects whose cases he contends are not covered by the above-mentioned instructions, and who have, he submits, an incontestable claim to compensation from the Ottoman Government.

1. Case of Vice-Consul Cassimati.

1. Mr. Vice-Consul Cassimati, whose house and furniture were burnt, and oil factory as well as family chapel and tomb destroyed, while guarded by Turkish troops, after the desertion of the village of Galata, in which the property was situated, by all the inhabitants.

Mr. Cassimati's house was burnt on the night of the 1st-2nd August, and the village had been uninterruptedly occupied by troops from the 29th August. Mr. Biliotti observes that if they (the troops) were not the actual perpetrators of the outrage, they at all events did nothing to prevent it or to apprehend the culprits.

The papers connected with this case were sent home by Mr. Biliotti in his despatch No. 72 of the 3rd June (Inclosure A), and full details of what took place, tending to establish the responsibility of the Imperial authorities in the matter, are given in his despatch to Sir W. White above referred to, No. 141 of the 1st October (Inclosure B).

2. Case of Mrs. Moazzo.

2. Mrs. Moazzo, widow of the late British Vice-Consul at Canea, whose farmhouse and oil factory, situated about 12 miles from Canea, were burnt by Christians, owing, as is alleged, to the property being held by her in joint account with a certain Mussulman.

In Mr. Biliotti's opinion, this case comes within the category of those in which the claimants did not receive the same protection as was afforded to natives and to other foreigners. He further argues that the principle laid down that foreigners are entitled to as ample protection for their persons and property as natives are involves the obligation on the part of the Government to protect its own subjects; but that when no protection whatever is granted to natives, as was the case during the recent troubles, it does not follow that foreigners should suffer because the Government of the country failed to fulfil its duties towards its own subjects.

At the time the disturbances took place the ranks of the eight battalions usually stationed in the island had been so thinned that, instead of their proper complement of 8,000 men, they numbered only 4,500, and the gendarmerie was known to be useless.

The Vali suggested in proper time the reinforcement of the garrison as a reasonable precaution, but his proposal was not acted upon by the Imperial Government; and it is submitted that this fact, coupled with the wholesale desertion of the gendarmerie, allowed the rioters to carry out their schemes without any attempt on the part of the authorities to prevent them.

3. Case of Vice-Consul Calocherino.

3. Mr. Vice-Consul Calocherino, whose vineyards and harvest of grapes were plundered, the chief offenders being soldiers of the Imperial army.

* (A) Consul Biliotti, No. 72, June 3; (B) ditto, No. 141, October 1; (C) to Mr. Fane, No. 218, July 22, 1890.

Mr. Calocherino is the owner of three farms, situated at from one to one and a-half hours' journey from the town of Candia.

According to documents obtained by him from the Christian authorities of the commune, the damage done to his harvest of grapes by about 1,000 soldiers encamped near his farm, and by soldiers in and around the town when the grapes were being conveyed thither, amounted to 68,000 piastres, and that done by natives to 27,000 piastres.

During the insurrection which took place in 1866, the Imperial troops having wrecked two farm-houses and their contents belonging to Mr. Calocherino, the latter obtained an indemnity of 63,119 piastres; and Mr. Biliotti considers this precedent of much value, both as regards Mr. Calocherino's present claim and that of Mr. Cassimati.

4. Case of Dr. Ittar.

4. Dr. Ittar, who rents extensive vineyards in the neighbourhood of Candia for the purpose of manufacturing wine, &c.

The whole of this property was plundered, owing to the neglect of the authorities to protect it, while protection is stated to have been afforded to other parties. Dr. Ittar affirms that if the local authorities, in compliance with his request, had sent a few soldiers to guard his property, it would have been saved, as it was saved by that means in the year 1878. He further states that one battalion of troops who witnessed the plunder of his property did nothing to prevent it, while soldiers were sent to guard the property of Mussulmans who required no such protection, and that he did not receive the protection granted to Ottoman subjects and to other foreigners.

5. Case of Mr. C. Pappadaki.

5. Mr. C. Pappadaki, of Athens, whose property, consisting of two houses and furniture, in the Province of Candia, was burnt by Mussulmans.

The remarks made above with reference to the claim of Mrs. Moazzo apply equally with regard to Mr. Pappadaki's case.

Documents in support of Cases 1 and 2 are forwarded in Mr. Biliotti's No. 72 (Inclosure A), and in Cases 3, 4, and 5 in his No. 141 (Inclosure B).

I am to state that it is not necessary now to consider any question of the amount of compensation claimed in each case, and that, in Lord Salisbury's opinion, it would be desirable in the first instance to come to a decision on the question of principle.

I am to invite your special attention to the last three paragraphs of Mr. Biliotti's despatch No. 141 (Inclosure B), which appear of great importance as showing that the Turkish Government were repeatedly warned in good time of the impending dangers, and yet failed to take adequate steps to guard against them.

I am to request that you will take the papers submitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in pressing upon the Porte, diplomatically, all or any of the five cases above referred to; and that, in the event of your considering any of these claims deserving of support, you will be good enough also to indicate the grounds upon which they may, in your opinion, be most advantageously pressed upon the attention of the Porte.

I have, &c.
(Signed) P. W. CURRIE.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands signified to us in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 12th November last, we have the honour to Reasonable ground for supporting Vice-Consul Calocherino's claim, but not the others.

Report—

That we have considered the five cases in respect of which claims are made, and are supported by Mr. Biliotti, and we are of opinion that it is only in the case of Vice-Consul Calocherino that reasonable ground is shown for claiming any compensation from the Turkish Government.

In the cases of Cassimati, Moazzo, and Pappadaki it is not, in our opinion, shown that the claimants did not receive the same protection as was afforded to natives and other foreigners. Indeed, Mr. Biliotti, who makes this statement, goes on, in the same despatch, to say that no protection whatever was granted to natives. He argues that the principle that foreigners are entitled to as ample protection for their persons and property as natives involves an obligation on the part of the Government to protect its own subjects.

This is not, in our opinion, a just contention. It must be assumed that a Government will endeavour, to the best of its power, to protect its subjects, and a failure to do this involves a consideration of questions of policy and of the wise or unwise distribution of available forces which, in the absence of circumstances showing clearly that foreigners needed special protection, cannot be the subject of diplomatic intervention on behalf of foreigners who have suffered in common with the native inhabitants.

We must add that the statements before us do not show any unwillingness on the part of the Turkish authorities to utilize, for the purpose of protection, such forces as they had at their disposal, and Mr. Biliotti's chief complaint is that there were not sufficient troops in the island.

The case of Dr. Ittar differs only from the three we have just mentioned in that he was Vice-Consul for the French Government, and in that capacity, and upon that ground, considered that he was entitled to special protection.

This is not a matter which can affect his claims as a British subject.

In the case of Vice-Consul Calocherino, it is stated that the larger portion of the damage he sustained was caused by a body of Ottoman soldiers quartered close to his vineyards.

In our opinion this affords ground for pressing that part of his claim.

We have some doubt upon the matter, as we find a letter from Mr. Calocherino, dated the 31st July, 1889, in which he says that he abandons his crops and estates to the Ottoman Government, reserving his right to claim an indemnity. If he in fact ceased, at that date, to take any means for protecting his own property, he cannot reasonably claim to be compensated for loss to which his own default has contributed. Subject to this observation, we think this claim may be supported.

Royal Courts of Justice, December 23, 1890.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the claim of Ezra Harari to British protection within the Ottoman dominions.

Nationality of Harari family.

That in our Report of the 27th November, 1888, we advised that Her Majesty's Government would not be justified in recognizing and pressing upon the Porte the claim of the various members of the Harari family to British nationality, but that it would not, in our opinion, be desirable to withdraw from Ezra the protection accorded to him in 1856 and continued since that date.

That instructions were sent to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople in that sense on the 4th December, 1888, No. 370.

Porte refuse to recognize Ezra Harari as British subject.

That in his despatch No. 400 of the 28th September, 1889, Sir W. White forwarded a copy of a note verbale he had received from the Ottoman Government declining to recognize Ezra Harari as a British subject on the ground of insufficient evidence, together with a copy of his reply. That the terms of his Excellency's reply were approved by your Lordship in your despatch No. 326 of the 9th October, 1889.

That a despatch had now been received from Sir William White (No. 504 of the 21st November, 1890), transmitting a copy of the reply of the Porte to his last note, together with a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Damascus, to whom that reply had been referred by his Excellency.

That in view of the continued refusal of the Porte to recognize Ezra Harari's claim, and the unsatisfactory nature of Mr. Dickson's despatch, Her Majesty's Ambassador did not deem it advisable to continue the correspondence with the Sublime Porte without further instructions, as he saw no prospect of success unless he were furnished with better evidence to lay before the Porte, which in this, as in all cases of doubtful nationality, was most tenacious of what it considered its rights.

That Sir W. White put forward a suggestion, though he himself did not appear to favour its adoption, that the Porte might be asked as a favour to allow British protection to be continued to Ezra Harari during his lifetime, but that it did not seem to your Lordship advisable to make that request, in view of the Porte not improbably refusing to grant it.

That Sir Philip Currie was to submit a draft of the instructions which your Lordship proposed to send to Sir W. White on the subject, and that he was to request that we would take it into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether its terms were right and proper under the circumstances.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

Approve as amended.

That in our opinion the draft instructions, as amended by us, are right and proper.

Draft of Despatch to Sir W. White.

Sir, Foreign Office, December , 1890.*

I have had before me your Excellency's despatch No. 504 of the 21st ultimo, and its inclosures, respecting the continued refusal of the Sublime Porte to recognize the right of Ezra Harari to British protection.

You observe that it might be desirable to know on what grounds the Law Officers of the Crown, in their Report of the 27th November, 1888, advised that Her Majesty's Government would not be justified in recognizing and pressing upon the Porte the claim of the other members of the Harari family to British nationality, and at the same time stated that they did not consider it desirable to withdraw protection from Ezra Harari.

Reasons for decision in Harari case.

The reason which induced the Law Officers to discriminate between the case of Ezra and those of the rest of the family was that ~~inasmuch as, rightly or wrongly, Ezra Harari had, as a matter of fact, enjoyed British protection since 1856, that protection ought not to be lightly or readily withdrawn from him.~~

~~Her Majesty's Government have now, however, done all that they can in order to induce the Porte to recognize this claim; and I do not think that it would be wise to insist further on a more or less disputable demand which has been, and will evidently continue to be, strenuously resisted by the Porte, and not without some justice.~~

No evidence of British nationality.

But the protection given to Ezra in 1856 not to be lightly withdrawn.

while they came to the conclusion that no satisfactory evidence had ever been produced of the British nationality of the Harari family, they considered that inasmuch as in 1856 British protection had been (probably erroneously) afforded to Ezra Harari, that protection ought not to be lightly or readily withdrawn from him.

It now appears that the Porte is resolved to resist the claim to British protection, even when limited to the case of Ezra Harari alone, and Her Majesty's Government are not disposed to press upon the Porte a demand for which the only assignable justification is that it was submitted to by the Porte in 1856, when it was put forward by Her Majesty's Representative abroad in reliance upon evidence which has now been discovered not to be trustworthy.

I do not consider that it would be advisable to ask the Porte as a favour to allow us to continue to protect Ezra Harari during his lifetime if there is any likelihood of such a request being refused.

Under these circumstances I leave the matter to be dealt with by your Excellency as you may think fit.

I am, &c.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, March 20, 1890.

O. in C. giving effect to Extradition Treaty with U. S. A.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. H. Sanderson's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he had the honour, by direction of your Lordship, to transmit to us a draft of an Order in Council applying the Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, in the case of an Extradition Convention between Her Majesty and the United States of America (supplementary to Article X of the Treaty of the 9th August, 1842), signed at Washington, 12th July, 1889, the ratifications of which were exchanged at London on the 11th instant.

That Sir T. H. Sanderson was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the Order in Council as now drafted was right and proper to be submitted to the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

That your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion at our earliest convenience, as it was very important that the Order in Council should be submitted for approval at the next meeting of the Council, which would take place at a very early date.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

Approving draft of.

That the Order in Council as now drafted is right and proper to be submitted to the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

We think it right to call attention to the fact that the principal offence of obtaining under false pretences is omitted from sub-head 3 of Article I, although contained in many other Treaties, and although the offence of receiving is included.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, May 26, 1890.

Remonstrance made at Washington against seizure of Canadian vessels by the U. S. Revenue cutter "Rush" in Behring's Sea.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquis of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list,* which relate to the remonstrance which was made on the 12th October last through Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington against the seizure of Canadian vessels by the United States' Revenue cutter "Rush" in Behring's Sea.

The terms in which that remonstrance was drawn up were submitted for your consideration, and reported on in your letter of the 1st October last (see D, p. 120 A). Upon its receipt Mr. Edwardes was furnished with the instructions contained in Lord Salisbury's despatches Nos. 205 and 206 of the 2nd October, 1889 (see D, pp. 121, 122).

On the 12th October Mr. Edwardes reported that he had acted on his instructions (from Mr. Edwardes No. 187, D, p. 133), and on the 23rd January last Sir J. Pauncefote, Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, sent home the reply of the United States' Government (Sir J. Pauncefote, No. 9, E, pp. 30–33).

Views of H. M.'s Govt. regarding the seizures.

Lord Salisbury now proposes to address to Sir J. Pauncefote the despatch marked (F), embodying the views of Her Majesty's Government on the principal arguments brought forward on behalf of the United States in justification of the seizures referred to.

It will be observed that these arguments, although particularly addressed and nominally confined to the case of the seizures which were made by the "Rush" in 1889, are in principle equally applicable to those earlier seizures which were effected by the United States' cruizer "Corwin" in 1886.

Law Officers' Reports of the 20th August, 1887; 14th March, 1888; 28th November, 1888.

The proceedings of this latter vessel formed the subject of a detailed reference to you in 1887, and I am to invite your attention to the terms of the Report with which you were good enough to favour Lord Salisbury upon the 20th August of that year (Law Officers' Reports, United States, No. 67, of the 20th August, 1887), and also to your further Reports in connection with the same matter of the 14th March (Law Officers, No. 60, United States, of 1888), and of the 28th November (Law Officers, No. 64, United States, of 1888) of the following year.

I am to add that, from telegrams received on the 23rd instant from Sir J. Pauncefote, it appears that, notwithstanding the fact that negotiations for the settlement of the question on an equitable basis are now in progress at Washington, the United States' Government have actually reissued instructions to their Revenue cruizers in Behring's Sea similar to those of last season, with this one exception: that, instead of capturing, they are to dismantle all vessels found sealing in those waters, and to seize their log-books and skins as evidence in case of judicial proceedings being subsequently taken against them.

Protest of H. M.'s Govt.

On the receipt of this intelligence Sir J. Pauncefote was instructed to inform the United States' Secretary of State that a formal protest would be forwarded to him at once against any such interference with British vessels, and I am to inclose the drafts of two further despatches which Lord Salisbury proposes to address to Sir J. Pauncefote, and the second of which incloses the draft of the protest in question.

I am to request that you will at once take into your consideration these draft despatches, and the other papers bearing thereon which are forwarded herewith, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury, at your earliest convenience, with your opinion as to whether their terms are right and proper under the circumstances.

I am, &c.

We have considered the draft despatches, and approve the same as altered and initialled by us.

ANNEXES.

(No. 1.)

Draft of Despatch from the Marquis of Salisbury to Sir J. Pauncefote.

(No. .)
Sir,
Foreign Office, May , 1890.

I RECEIVED in due course your despatch No. 9 of the 23rd January, inclosing copy of Mr. Blaine's note of the 22nd of that month, in answer to the protest made on behalf of Her Majesty's Government on the 12th October last against the seizure of Canadian vessels by the United States' Revenue cutter "Rush" in Behring's Sea.

The importance of the subject necessitated a reference to the Government of Canada, whose reply has only recently reached Her Majesty's Government. The negotiations which have taken place between Mr. Blaine and yourself afford strong reason to hope that the difficulties attending this question are in a fair way towards an adjustment which will be satisfactory to both Governments. I think it right, however, to place on record, as briefly as possible, the views of Her Majesty's Government on the principal arguments brought forward on behalf of the United States.

Mr. Blaine's note defends the acts complained of by Her Majesty's Government on the following grounds:—

1. That "the Canadian vessels arrested and detained in the Behring's Sea were engaged in a pursuit that is in itself contra bonos mores—a pursuit which of necessity involves a serious and permanent injury to the rights of the Government and people of the United States."

2. That the fisheries had been in the undisturbed possession, and under the exclusive control, of Russia from their discovery until the cession of Alaska to the United States in 1867, and that from this date onwards until 1886 they had also remained in the undisturbed possession of the United States' Government.

3. That it is a fact now held beyond denial or doubt that the taking of seals in the open sea rapidly leads to the extinction of the species, and that therefore nations not possessing the territory upon which seals can increase their numbers by natural growth should refrain from the slaughter of them in the open sea.

Mr. Blaine further argues that the law of the sea and the liberty which it confers do not justify acts which are immoral in themselves, and which inevitably tend to results against the interests and against the welfare of mankind; and he proceeds to justify the forcible resistance of the United States' Government by the necessity of defending not only their own traditional and long-established rights, but also the rights of good morals and of good government the world over.

He declares that while the United States will not withhold from any nation the privileges which they demanded for themselves when Alaska was part of the Russian Empire, they are not disposed to exercise in the possessions acquired from Russia any less power or authority than they were willing to concede to the Imperial Government of Russia when its sovereignty extended over them. He claims from friendly nations a recognition of the same rights and privileges on the lands and in the waters of Alaska which the same friendly nations always conceded to the Empire of Russia.

With regard to the first of these arguments, namely, that the seizure of the Canadian vessels in the Behring's Sea was justified by the fact that they were "engaged in a pursuit that is in itself contra bonos mores—a pursuit which of necessity involves a serious and permanent injury to the rights of the Government and people of the United States," it is obvious that two questions are involved: first, whether the pursuit and killing of fur-seals in certain parts of the open sea is, from the point of view of international morality, an offence contra bonos mores; and secondly, whether, if such be the case, this fact justifies the seizure on the high seas and subsequent confiscation in time of peace of the private vessels of a friendly nation.

It is an axiom of international maritime law that such action is only admissible in the case of piracy or in pursuance of special international agreement. This principle has been universally admitted by jurists, and was very distinctly laid down by President Tyler in his Special Message to Congress, dated the 27th February, 1843, when, after acknowledging the right to detain and search a vessel on suspicion of piracy, he goes on to say: "With this single exception, no nation has, in time of peace, any authority to detain the ships of another upon the high seas, on any pretext whatever, outside the territorial jurisdiction."

Now, the pursuit of seals in the open sea, under whatever circumstances, has never hitherto been considered as piracy by any civilized State. Nor, even if the United States had gone so far as to make the killing of fur-seals piracy by their Municipal Law, would this have justified them in punishing offences against such Law committed by any persons other than their own citizens outside the territorial jurisdiction of the United States.

~~There are numerous acts which are considered grave offences by the internal laws of particular States to which the law of nations does not attach at all the same signification. Even~~ In the case of the Slave Trade, a practice which the civilized world has agreed to look upon with abhorrence, the right of arresting the vessels of another country is exercised only by special international agreement, and no one Government has been allowed that general control of morals in this respect which Mr. Blaine claims on behalf of the United States in regard of seal-hunting.

But Her Majesty's Government must question whether this pursuit can of itself be regarded as contra bonos mores, unless and until, for special reasons, it has been agreed by international arrangement to forbid it. Fur-seals are indisputably animals feræ naturæ, and these have universally been regarded by jurists as res nullius until they are caught; no person, therefore, can have property in them until he has actually reduced them into possession by capture.

It requires something more than a mere declaration that the Government or citizens of the United States, or even other countries interested in the seal trade, are losers by a certain course of proceeding, to render that course an immoral one.

Her Majesty's Government would deeply regret that the pursuit of fur-seals on the high seas by British vessels should involve even the slightest injury to the people of the United States. If the case be proved, they will be ready to consider what measures can be properly taken for the remedy of such injury, but they would be unable on that ground to depart from a principle on which free commerce on the high seas depends.

The second argument advanced by Mr. Blaine is that the "fur-seal fisheries of Behring's Sea had been exclusively controlled by the Government of Russia, without interference and without question, from their original discovery until the cession of Alaska to the United States in 1867," and that "from 1867 to 1886 the possession, in which Russia had been undisturbed, was enjoyed by the United States' Government also without interruption or intrusion from any source."

I will deal with these two periods separately.

First, as to the alleged exclusive monopoly of Russia. After Russia, at the instance of the Russian American Fur Company, claimed in 1821 the pursuits of commerce, whaling, and fishing from Behring's Straits to the 51st degree of north latitude, and not only prohibited all foreign vessels from landing on the coasts and islands of the above waters, but also prevented them from approaching within 100 miles thereof, Mr. Quincy Adams wrote as follows to the United States' Minister in Russia:—

"The United States can admit no part of these claims; their right of navigation and fishing is perfect, and has been in constant exercise from the earliest times throughout the whole extent of the Southern Ocean, subject only to the ordinary exceptions and exclusions of the territorial jurisdictions."

~~Subsequently to this protest, a Treaty was signed between Russia and the United States in 1824, whereby it was agreed that "in any part of the great ocean commonly called the Pacific Ocean or South Sea, the respective citizens or subjects of the High Contracting Powers should be neither disturbed nor restrained either in navigation or in fishing."~~

That the right of fishing thus asserted included the right of killing fur-bearing animals is shown by the case of the United States' brig "Loriot." That vessel proceeded to the waters over which Russia claimed exclusive jurisdiction for the purpose of hunting the sea-otter, the killing of which is now prohibited by the United States' Statutes applicable to the fur-seal, and was forced to abandon her voyage and leave the waters in question by an armed vessel of the Russian navy. Mr. Forsyth, writing on the case to the American Minister at St. Petersburgh on the 4th May, 1837, said:—

"It is a violation of the rights of the citizens of the United States, immemorially exercised and secured to them as well by the law of nations as by the stipulations of the Ist Article of the Convention of 1824, to fish in those seas, and to resort to the coast for the prosecution of their lawful commerce upon points not already occupied."

From the speech of Mr. Sumner when introducing the question of the purchase of Alaska to Congress, it is equally clear that the United States' Government did not regard themselves as purchasing a monopoly. Having dealt with fur-bearing animals, he went on to treat of fisheries, and, after alluding to the presence of different species of whales in the vicinity of the Aleutians, said: "No sea is now mare clausum; all of these may be pursued by a ship under any flag, except directly on the coast or within its territorial limit."

I now come to the statement that from 1867 to 1886 the possession was enjoyed by the United States with no interruption and no intrusion from any source. Her Majesty's Government cannot but think that Mr. Blaine has been misinformed as to the history of the operations in Behring's Sea during that period.

The instances recorded in Inclosure 1 in this despatch are sufficient to prove, from official United States' sources, that from 1867 to 1886 British vessels were engaged at intervals in the fur-seal fisheries, with the cognizance of the United States' Government. I will here, by way of example, quote but one.

In 1872 Collector Phelps reported the fitting-out of expeditions in Australia and Victoria for the purpose of taking seals in Behring's Sea, while passing to and from their rookeries on St. Paul and St. George Islands, and recommended that a steam-cutter should be sent to the region of Ounimak Pass and the Islands of St. Paul and St. George.

Mr. Secretary Boutwell informed him, in reply, that he did not consider it expedient to send a cutter to interfere with the operations of foreigners, and stated, "In addition, I do not see that the United States would have the jurisdiction or power to drive off parties going up there for that purpose, unless they made such attempt within a marine league of the shore."

Before leaving this part of Mr. Blaine's argument, I would allude to his remark that "vessels from other nations passing from time to time through Behring's Sea to the Arctic Ocean in pursuit of whales have always abstained from taking part in the capture of seals," which he holds to be proof of the recognition of rights held and exercised first by Russia and then by the United States.

Even if the facts are as stated, it is not remarkable that vessels pushing on for the short season in which whales can be captured in the Arctic Ocean, and being fitted specially for the whale fisheries, neglected to carry boats and hunters for fur-seals, or to engage in an entirely different pursuit.

The whalers, moreover, pass through Behring's Sea to the fishing-grounds in the Arctic Ocean in April and May, as soon as the ice breaks up, while the great bulk of the seals do not reach the Pribyloff Islands till June, leaving again by the time the closing up of the ice compels the whalers to return.

~~It is unnecessary for me to deal with the third argument advanced by Mr. Blaine, namely,~~ The statement that it is "a fact now held beyond denial or doubt that the taking of seals in the open sea rapidly leads to their extinction," would admit of reply, and abundant evidence could be adduced on the other side. But as it is proposed that this part of the question should be examined by a Committee to be appointed by the two Governments, it is not necessary that I should deal with it here.

~~The evidence of experts is at variance on the point, but there is reason to hope that it may be finally settled ere long by the Committee proposed in the draft Convention now being negotiated between the two Governments. It will be sufficient, therefore, for the purposes of this despatch. to point to the evidence contained in Mr. Tupper's letter of the 8th ultimo, which forms part of the correspondence relating to fur-seal fisheries in Behring's Sea, printed in the Government Printing Office at Washington, 1890, and sent home in your despatch No. 53 of the 15th instant, to show that, according to responsible officers of the United States' Government and of the Alaska Commercial Company, the number of seals in the rookeries of St. Paul and St. George has increased of late years.~~

Her Majesty's Government do not deny that if all sealing were stopped in Behring's Sea except on the islands in possession of the lessees of the United States, the seal may increase and multiply at an even more extraordinary rate than at present, and the seal fishery on the islands may become a monopoly of increasing value; but they cannot admit that this is a sufficient ground to justify the United States in forcibly depriving other nations of any share in this industry in waters which, by the recognized law of nations, are now free to all the world.

It is from no disrespect that I refrain from replying specifically to the subsidiary questions and arguments put forward by Mr. Blaine. Till the views of the two Governments as to the obligations attaching, on grounds either of morality or necessity, to the United States' Government in this matter, have been brought into closer harmony, such a course would appear needlessly to extend a controversy which Her Majesty's Government are anxious to keep within reasonable limits.

The negotiations now being carried on at Washington prove the readiness of Her Majesty's Government to consider whether any special international agreement is necessary for the protection of the fur-sealing industry. In its absence they are unable to admit that the case put forward on behalf of the United States affords any sufficient justification for the forcible action already taken by them against peaceable subjects of Her Majesty engaged in lawful operations on the high seas.

"The President," says Mr. Blaine, "is persuaded that all friendly nations will concede to the United States the same rights and privileges on the lands and in the waters of Alaska which the same friendly nations always conceded to the Empire of Russia."

Her Majesty's Government have no difficulty in making such a concession. In strict accord with the views which, previous to the present controversy, were consistently and successfully maintained by the United States, they have, whenever occasion arose, opposed all claims to exclusive privileges in the non-territorial waters of Behring's Sea. The rights they have demanded have been those of free navigation and fishing in waters which, previous to their own acquisition of Alaska, the United States declared to be free and open to all foreign vessels.

That is the extent of their present contention, and they trust that, on consideration of the arguments now presented to them, the United States will recognize its justice and moderation.

I have to request that you will read this despatch to Mr. Blaine, and leave a copy of it with him should he desire it.

I am, &c.

We approve the above as altered.

(No. 2.)

Draft of Despatch from the Marquis of Salisbury to Sir J. Pauncefote.

(No. .)
Sir, Foreign Office, May , 1890.

YOU will receive by this mail my despatch No. of the 22nd instant, replying to the arguments urged by Mr. Blaine in his note of the 22nd January last in defence of the seizure of Canadian vessels by United States' Revenue cruizers in Behring's Sea.

Those arguments were not such as Her Majesty's Government could admit to be valid according to the established principles of international law, or sufficient to justify the acts complained of.

The reply has been for some time in draft, but Her Majesty's Government were unwilling to introduce any unnecessary element of controversy into the negotiations in which you are engaged for the friendly settlement of the whole question. I had therefore thought that a certain delay in the presentation of the despatch would not be disadvantageous, ~~and it had been my desire to leave it entirely to your discretion whether and when it should be communicated to Mr. Blaine~~.

The intelligence contained in your telegrams Nos. 37 and 38 of the 22nd instant as to the dispatch of United States' cruizers to Behring's Sea, and the instructions with which they are provided, render it necessary that the communication should no longer be delayed. I have accordingly to request that you will at once place a copy of it in Mr. Blaine's hands.

I shall forward to you, as soon as its terms have been approved by the Queen and the Cabinet, a formal protest, to be delivered to Mr. Blaine, against any such interference with British vessels outside the territorial waters of the United States, as appears to be contemplated in the instructions just issued. I need not say that it would be a cause of sincere satisfaction to Her Majesty's Government if a consideration of the arguments advanced in my despatch, and of those with which you will be able to supplement them, should induce the Government of the United States so to limit the action of their cruizers as to remove the occasion for such a protest.

I am, &c.

(No. 3.)

Draft of Despatch from the Marquis of Salisbury to Sir J. Pauncefote.

(No. .)
Sir, Foreign Office, May , 1890.

I RECEIVED on the 23rd instant, and at once submitted to the Queen and the Cabinet, your telegrams Nos. 37 and 38 of the previous day, reporting the instructions issued to the United States' Revenue cruizers in Behring's Sea for the approaching fishing season.

According to accounts given in the press, the accuracy of which is not denied by Mr. Blaine, these instructions are similar to those under which Canadian vessels were seized last summer outside the territorial waters of the United States, with this exception, that, instead of capturing vessels found sealing in Behring's Sea, the cruizers are to dismantle such vessels, and to seize their log-books and skins as evidence in case of judicial proceedings.

This modification, it is unnecessary to say, in no way removes the objections of Her Majesty's Government to such interference with British vessels on the high seas as contrary to international law and the practice of civilized nations.

They deeply regret this decision of the United States' Government as likely, if persisted in, to produce the most serious complications, and to frustrate the efforts now being made to arrive at an agreement for the proper protection of the seal fisheries and the settlement of the questions connected therewith.

Her Majesty's Government have no alternative, under the circumstances, but to protest formally and solemnly against any interference on the part of United States' cruizers with British vessels navigating outside the ~~recognized~~ territorial jurisdiction of the United States, and to leave to the United States' Government the responsibility of the consequences if that protest is disregarded.

I accordingly inclose herewith the draft of a note which you will address to Mr. Blaine if you should unfortunately find that there is no intention of so modifying or restricting the action of the United States' cruizers as to render this step unnecessary.

I am, &c.

(No. 4.)

Draft of Note to be addressed to Mr. Blaine.

THE Undersigned, Her Britannic Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, has the honour, by instructions of his Government, to inclose to Mr. Blaine, Secretary of State, &c., the following communication.

Her Britannic Majesty's Government have learnt with great concern, from notices which have appeared in the press, and the general accuracy of which has been confirmed by Mr. Blaine's statements to the Undersigned, that the Government of the United States have issued instructions to their Revenue cruizers about to be dispatched to Behring's Sea, under which the vessels of British subjects will again be exposed, in the prosecution of their legitimate industry on the high seas, to unlawful interference at the hands of American officers.

~~Her Britannic Majesty's Government have drawn the attention of the Government of the United States to the illegality of these proceedings in a despatch to Sir L. West, then Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, dated the 10th September, 1887, which was communicated by him to Mr. Bayard, then Secretary of State; and again in a despatch of the 2nd October last, which was communicated to Mr. Blaine on the 12th of that month.~~

~~The reply of the United States' Government to the latter of these two communications was given in a note from Mr. Blaine to the Undersigned, dated the 22nd January. It has received the careful attention of Her Britannic Majesty's Government, and the Undersigned has had the honour to forward to Mr. Blaine the copy of a despatch giving the reasons for which Her Britannic Majesty's Government are unable to admit the validity of the arguments urged in justification of these seizures.~~

Her Britannic Majesty's Government are anxious to co-operate to the fullest of their power with the Government of the United States in such measures as may be found to be expedient for the protection of the seal fisheries. They are at the present moment engaged in examining, in concert with the Government of the United States, the best method of arriving at an agreement upon this point, and are awaiting the reply of the United States to their suggestions. But they cannot admit the right of the United States, of their own sole motion, to restrict for this purpose the freedom of navigation of Behring's Sea, which the United States have themselves in former years convincingly and successfully vindicated, nor to enforce their municipal legislation ~~on~~ against British vessels on the high seas beyond the limits of their territorial jurisdiction ~~generally recognized by international law~~.

Her Britannic Majesty's Government are therefore unable to pass over without notice the public announcement of an intention on the part of the Government of the United States to renew the acts of interference with British vessels navigating outside the territorial waters of the United States, of which they have previously had to complain.

The Undersigned is, in consequence, instructed formally to protest against such interference, and to declare that Her Britannic Majesty's Government must hold the Government of the United States responsible for the consequences that may ensue from acts that are contrary to the established principles of international law ~~and usage~~.

Jurisdiction claimed by the United States in Behring's Sea. Further note from Mr. Blaine.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, August 1, 1890.

That in that note Mr. Blaine endeavoured to show that the claim of Russia to exclusive jurisdiction for a distance of 100 miles from the coast was never disputed, either by the United States or Great Britain, so far as Behring's Sea was concerned.

Draft of despatch to Sir J. Pauncefote in reply.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to inclose a draft of a despatch to Sir J. Pauncefote in reply to that communication, with a copy of the proposed inclosure to it.

That it reviewed the correspondence respecting the Russian Ukase of 1821, with the view of disproving the construction which Mr. Blaine had sought to place upon that correspondence, and upon the Conventions of 1824 and 1825; and that it produced extracts from the despatches preserved in the archives of the Foreign Office to show that Great Britain distinctly declined to acknowledge the claim of jurisdiction set up by Russia, and that it was, in fact, withdrawn.

That, for purposes of reference, Sir Thomas Sanderson was to inclose copies of (A) your Lordship's despatches of the 10th September, 1887, and the 2nd October last; of (B) Mr. Blaine's note of the 22nd January; and of (C) your Lordship's rejoinder of the 22nd May; together with copies (D) of the papers published by the United States' Government, containing, at pp. 204 et seq., extracts from the correspondence between Russia and the United States in 1822 and following years. That more complete copies of a portion of that correspondence would be found in "State Papers," vol. ix, pp. 471 et seq. That copies of the articles in the "Quarterly Review" and "North American Review," referred to in Mr. Adams' despatch of the 22nd July, 1823, were also inclosed.

That a translation of the Ukase of 1799 would be found in Bancroft's "History of Alaska," pp. 379, 380, which was inclosed with the papers.

That the Ukase of 1821 was given at length in "State Papers," as indicated above.

That a Memorandum on Mr. Blaine's note, drawn up at the Colonial Office, was also inclosed. That such portions of it as it seemed desirable to make use of had been embodied in the draft.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and would inform your Lordship whether, in our opinion, the draft, and its inclosure, contained a sufficiently complete answer to Mr. Blaine's arguments, and whether we would recommend any alterations or additions.

That your Lordship would also be glad to be favoured with any general observations which might occur to us on the points involved.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Draft despatch to Sir J. Pauncefote approved, with omission of passage on p. 17.

That, with the omission of the passage on p. 17 of the draft despatch, we approve of the same.

We have, &c.
(Signed) RICHARD E. WEBSTER.
EDWARD CLARKE.

Paragraph showing Passage omitted by advice of Law Officers.

The answer, therefore, to the questions with which Mr. Blaine concludes his despatch is that Her Majesty's Government have always claimed the freedom of navigation and fishing in the waters of Behring's Sea outside the usual territorial limit of 1 marine league from the coast; that it is impossible to admit that a public right to fish, catch seals, or pursue any other lawful occupation on the high seas can be held to be abandoned by a nation from the mere fact that for a certain number of years it has not suited the subjects of that nation to exercise it; ~~and that, if Canadian vessels did not resort to that sea for the purpose of seal-hunting previous to 1886, it has been simply because they were unaware of its immense capabilities as a seal-hunting ground, and also because the price of seal-skins was not high enough in previous years to induce them to resort to waters the navigation of which has always been regarded as peculiarly difficult and dangerous.~~*

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, August 18, 1890.

Proposed arbitration of claims arising out of seizure of vessels in Behring's Sea.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relating to a proposal which it was intended to make to the Government of the United States for the reference to arbitration of all the claims arising out of the seizure of, or interference with, British vessels in Behring's Sea by United States' revenue-cruizers in the years 1886, 1887, and 1889.

Law Officers, August 20, 1887; July 17 and November 28, 1888; October 1, 1889; and May 27, 1890.

That the circumstances of those seizures had already formed the subject of references to us from the Foreign Office, and had been reported on by us in regard to various points on the 20th August, 1887; the 17th July and the 28th November, 1888; the 1st October, 1889; and the 27th May last.

Draft Arbitration Agreement, drawn up by Sir J. Pauncefote.

That, after discussion with Mr. Tupper, Canadian Minister of Fisheries, who was specially delegated by the Government of the Dominion to confer with him at Washington, Sir Julian Pauncefote, Her Majesty's Minister in the United States, drew up a draft Arbitration Agreement, which was contained in his despatch No. 70 of the 12th May last, and had been submitted by Mr. Tupper to the Canadian Government for their approval.

That your Lordship was of opinion that, in the first paragraph of the proposed draft, it would be well to insert the words "alleging themselves to be" before the word "aggrieved," to omit the word "other" before "injuries," and after "injuries" to insert the words "in connection therewith," and to omit the word "therefrom."

That the paragraph would then run as follows:—

"The question for arbitration is whether compensation should be paid by the United States' Government to the persons alleging themselves to be aggrieved by the seizure of, or interference with, vessels in Behring's Sea by United States' revenue-cruizers in the years 1886, 1887, and 1889, and for any injuries in connection therewith resulting to such persons."

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the terms of the draft Agreement, and specially whether we considered that they were sufficiently wide to cover the claims in respect of the imprisonment of the officers seized, the claim in respect of the death of Ogilvie, the master of the "Carolina," which would be found at p. 34 of the paper marked (C), and the circumstances of which were detailed at pp. 2 and 20 of the paper marked (A); the repayment of the fines, &c.; and whether the draft, as it then stood, was such as could properly be submitted to the United States' Government.

That your Lordship would further be glad to be favoured with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the first paragraph of a proposed draft should run as follows:—

Opinion on terms of draft Agreement as to their covering claims in respect of imprisonment of officers seized, in respect of death of Ogilvie, Master of the "Carolina," and the repayment of the fines.

"The question for arbitration is whether compensation should be paid by the United States' Government to persons aggrieved by the seizure of, or interference with, British vessels in Behring's Sea by United States' cruizers in the years 1886, 1887, and 1889, for any losses or injuries in connection therewith resulting to such persons."

We think the words "alleging themselves to be" should not be inserted before the word "aggrieved," as the question which it is proposed, in the first instance, to decide is whether, assuming a person to have suffered loss by reason of the seizure, Great Britain can properly, on his behalf, sustain a claim for compensation.

We note that, while the draft Agreement appears, in all its clauses except the third, to contemplate the decision of this question of principle as the only duty of the Arbitrators and Umpire to be appointed, the closing words of clause 3 provide for the determination of questions of amount by the same Tribunal.

The written statements prepared by the respective Governments with a view to the decision of the main question would not in any way enable the Tribunal to assess the amount of the compensation, and it would be most undesirable to encumber those statements with the questions of, or arguments upon, the amount.

We venture to suggest that the ascertainment of the amount of damage sustained in each case must involve the examination of accounts and vouchers, and possibly, in some cases, the examination of witnesses, and is not a duty required to be discharged by so important a Tribunal as that to which the main question of principle is to be referred. Nor could that duty be properly fulfilled, subject to the limitations contained in clause 5 of the draft Agreement, which, as it now stands, appears to apply to all the proceedings before the Tribunal.

It would, in our opinion, be better that the question of amount should be referred to other Arbitrators under a supplemental Agreement, which should provide for the sittings of the Arbitrators, and for the taking of evidence by affidavit or otherwise. It would for this purpose be necessary to substitute other words for those which conclude clause 3 of the draft.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin,* relative to the question of the seizures by the authorities of the United States of America of certain British vessels when engaged in seal-fishing in Behring's Sea.

Case of the "W. P. Sayward."

That among the British vessels so dealt with in 1887 was the "W. P. Sayward," of Victoria, captured by the United States' revenue-cruizer "Rush," and sent to Sitka for trial before the District Court of the United States for the District of Alaska (from Admiralty, 5th September, 1887; from Colonial Office, 15th September, 1887; from Sir L. West, 3rd February, 1888).

That claims for compensation were advanced by the owners of the vessel, together with a statement of the circumstances under which the capture was made, particulars of which would be found in Inclosures 5, 6, and 7 of a letter from the Colonial Office dated the 23rd January, 1888. That a revised statement of those claims was sent home by Sir Julian Pauncefote, Her Majesty's Minister at Washingten, in his despatch No. 110 of the 6th August, 1890.

Release of the "W. P. Sayward" under bond.

That on the 25th July, 1888, a letter was received from the Colonial Office reporting that the "W. P. Sayward" had been released under bond. That that bond was granted on condition that an appeal should be prosecuted from the Alaska District Court to the Supreme Court of the United States.

That, in reply to an inquiry addressed to him, Sir J. Pauncefote reported on the 26th April, 1889, that the record of appeal was filed on the 30th October, 1888, but that the case would not be reached for about three years.

That Mr. Edwardes, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington, having been instructed to ascertain the views of Mr. Calderon Carlisle, the Legal Adviser of the British Legation, as to what steps might be taken to obtain an early hearing of the case, reported the result of his inquiries on that point in his despatches Nos. 172, 173, 178, and 180 of the 2nd and 23rd September, 1889.

That a transcript of record in the case of the "W. P. Sayward" v. United States would be found in Mr. Edwardes' despatch No. 177 of the 19th September, 1889.

Mr. Carlisle, October 29, 1890.

That Mr. Calderon Carlisle, having now been consulted as to the possibility of obtaining, within a shorter period, a decision of the Supreme Court on the question of law raised by the appeal, had reported that, in his opinion, the Supreme Court had no power to entertain an appeal from the District Court of Alaska, and that that opinion appeared to be shared by many other competent persons, including Mr. Senator Ingalls, who actually introduced a Bill into the Senate for the purpose of amending that supposed defect in the administration of justice.

That Mr. Calderon Carlisle, however, recommended, as the best course for the owners of the vessel in question to pursue, that they should move the Supreme Court at once to advance their appeal. That if the motion should be successful, the hearing of the appeal would come on immediately, and the Court would either dismiss the appeal for want of power to entertain it, or would decide the question of law involved.

That in the former case application should, in Mr. Carlisle's opinion, be made at once for a writ of prohibition, which would raise the question of law forthwith, and in a safer and more convenient form than on the appeal.

That if, however, the Supreme Court should refuse the motion to advance the appeal, Mr. Carlisle recommended that the appeal should be withdrawn in order to allow of an application for a writ of prohibition being made forthwith (see Sir. J. Pauncefote's No. 143 of the 7th November, 1890.)

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the course recommended by Mr. Calderon Carlisle was one which, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, might advantageously be followed; and that he was to add that your Lordship would, at the same time, be glad to be favoured with any general observations which we might have to offer on the present aspect of the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

That, upon the best consideration we can give to the Memorandum of Mr. Carlisle of the 29th October, 1890, we are of opinion that his advice therein contained as to the procedure to be followed should be accepted and acted upon, subject to this qualification, that the appeal should not be abandoned unless the application for a prohibition is entertained and considered upon the merits, as, upon the information before us, it is by no means clear that there is ground for prohibition; and it may be that the question is one which arises on the merits, and which the Court had jurisdiction to entertain.

Royal Courts of Justice, December 19, 1890.

My Lord,

Case of the "W. P. Sayward," seized by the United States authorities in 1887 when engaged in seal-fishing in Behring's Sea.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the case of the British vessel "W. P. Sayward," seized by the United States' authorities in 1887 when engaged in seal-fishing in Behring's Sea.

That a Report was furnished by us on the 5th instant on the Memorandum dated the 29th October last by Mr. Calderon Carlisle, the Legal Adviser of Her Majesty's Legation at Washington, as to the course which should, in his opinion, be pursued for bringing the question of law involved in the Behring's Sea controversy before the Supreme Court of the United States.

That the views of the Canadian Government in regard to Mr. C. Carlisle's opinion would be found in a letter from the Colonial Office dated the 8th instant.

That on the 10th instant a telegram was addressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington embodying the views of Her Majesty's Government in the terms recommended by us after our conference on the previous day with Mr. Davidson, Legal Assistant to the Foreign Office, and Mr. Bramston, Legal Assistant Under-Secretary of the Colonial Office, as to the procedure to be adopted at this stage of the proceedings.

That a further despatch had now been received from Sir J. Pauncefote, in which he stated that Mr. C. Carlisle strongly deprecated the proposed application to the Supreme Court of the United States to advance the appeal of the owners of the "W. P. Sayward" against the decision of the District Court of Alaska, and giving in some detail reasons which neither your Lordship nor ourselves had hitherto had the opportunity of considering.

That Mr. C. Carlisle urged that the United States' Attorney-General, acting under instructions from his Government, would probably resort to every expedient to prevent the question of jurisdiction coming before the Supreme Court for decision, and that he anticipated that for that purpose the Attorney-General might oppose the motion on the ground that the question at issue was about to be referred to arbitration, or was otherwise in course of arrangement, as stated in the President's recent Message, and that therefore no necessity existed to advance the appeal from a public point of view.

That, in that event he apprehended the probability of an unseemly discussion in Court as to the diplomatic situation of the case.

That Mr. Carlisle, moreover, pointed out that the United States' Attorney-General might utterly defeat the object of the motion by consenting to a reversal of the Decree of the District Court "on the ground that the evidence of the killing of seals in Behring's Sea was admitted by his Government to be insufficient," a point which might also be taken by the Supreme Court itself in order to escape from the embarrassment of having to give a decision opposed to the contentions of the United States' Government on a matter of national importance.

That, in his view, no such risks would attend the course which he had strongly recommended, namely, the immediate abandonment of the appeal, and an application for a writ of prohibition, as the surest mode of securing a decision on the point in dispute between the two Governments.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would, at our earliest possible convenience, favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the considerations put forward in Sir J. Pauncefote's last despatch modified, and, if so, to what extent, the opinions previously given by us on the question on which the instructions to Sir J.

Pauncefote of the 10th instant were founded; and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the present aspect of the case.

We have again taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Objections urged by Mr. Carlisle to application for leave to expedite the appeal have great force.

That we are of opinion that the objections urged by Mr. Carlisle (as stated in Sir Julian Pauncefote's despatch of the 5th December) to the application for leave to expedite the appeal have great force.

Application for writ of prohibition should be made.

We have no means of forming an independent judgment as to how far they are well founded, but, in face of them, we are of opinion that the application to expedite the hearing of the appeal should not be made; but in lieu thereof an application for a writ of prohibition should be made.

We adhere to the view that unless it is clear that the question of law will be determined upon its merits on the application for the writ of prohibition the appeal should not be abandoned.

We have, &c.

Behring's Sea controversy. Case of the "W. P. Sayward."

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of this date stating that, with reference to Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 17th instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a telegram from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington reporting the substance of observations made by Mr. Calderon Carlisle on the opinion given in our Report of the 5th instant as to the course of procedure to be pursued for bringing the question of law involved in the Behring's Sea controversy in connection with the case of the "W. P. Sayward" before the Supreme Court of the United States.

We have considered the telegram from Sir J. Pauncefote, No. 99, of the 18th December, 1890, and have the honour to

Report—

That we are of opinion that Mr. Carlisle's advice as to procedure should be accepted and acted upon.

BEHRING'S SEA: Your Lordship's despatch No. 255.

Behring's Sea. "W. P. Sayward" case.

Law Officers' Report seen by Carlisle. He respectfully submits: First, as regards qualification laid down under law and practice here, application for prohibition cannot be made while appeal pending. Secondly, as regards grounds of prohibition, want of jurisdiction apparent on record in proceedings of District Court, which are nullified by reason of place of alleged offence, place of seizure, British character of vessel, and true construction of Acts of Congress. Thirdly, in view of above, it is not perceived how any question arising on merits which Court had jurisdiction to entertain could defeat prohibition. British cases understood to decide that facts necessary to jurisdiction of inferior Courts may be examined on application for prohibition.

Gaslight Company and Everton Elstone and Rose Thompson and Ingham.

United States' Supreme Court has examined such facts on application for prohibition. Devoe Manufacturing Company 1808. Canadian Deputy Minister of Justice has arrived to confer with Carlisle. Latter asks to be favoured with further observations of Law Officers on above points. Supreme Court adjourns on Monday until 5th January.

It is not desirable to issue or renew licences to reside abroad, but that in any case in which the question arises, a certificate should be issued under section 7 of "The Naturalization Act, 1870." Not necessary that a naturalized alien, to whom such certificate is granted, should have the qualification as to previous residence, or service under the Crown, which would be required if he were a non-naturalized alien applying for a certificate under the Act of 1870. No. 1.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, March 5, 1891.

Order in Council for carrying into effect a Treaty concluded on the 20th and 25th June, 1890, between Her Majesty and the Orange Free State, for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 12th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of an Order in Council for carrying into effect a Treaty, concluded on the 20th and 25th days of June, 1890, between Her Majesty and the President of the Orange Free State, for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals, the ratifications of which were exchanged on the 16th December last.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the draft Order in Council into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether it might properly be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was, at the same time, to request that we would give special consideration to the question whether it was necessary to make express reference in the Order in Council to the provision contained in Article XVIII of the Treaty to the effect that its stipulations should not be applicable to Her Majesty's South African Colonies and possessions.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Approve draft Order in Council, as amended.

That the draft Order in Council, as amended by us, may, in our opinion, properly be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

We have inserted words* at the end of the draft Order to prevent any question as to the application of the Acts in the South African Colonies.

We have, &c.

Draft Order in Council.

Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873.

WHEREAS by the Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, it was amongst other things enacted that, where an arrangement has been made with any foreign State with respect to the surrender to such State of any fugitive criminals, Her Majesty may, by Order in Council, direct that the said Acts shall apply in the case of such foreign State; and that Her Majesty may, by the same or any subsequent Order, limit the operation of the Order, and restrict the same to fugitive criminals who are in or suspected of being in the part of Her Majesty's dominions specified in the Order, and render the operation thereof subject to such conditions, exceptions, and qualifications as may be deemed expedient; and that if, by any law made after the passing of the Act of 1870 by the Legislature of any British possession, provision is made for carrying into effect within such possession the surrender of fugitive criminals who are in or suspected of being in such British possession, Her Majesty may, by the Order in Council applying the said Acts in the case of any foreign State, or by any subsequent Order, suspend the operation within any such British possession of the said Acts, or of any part thereof, so far as it relates to such foreign State, and so long as such Law continues in force there and no longer:

Canadian Extradition Act of 1886.

And whereas by an Act of the Parliament of Canada passed in 1886, and entitled "An Act respecting the Extradition of Fugitive Criminals," provision is made for carrying into effect within the Dominion the surrender of fugitive criminals:

Order in Council of November 17, 1888, suspending operation of Imperial Extradition Acts in Canada so long as the Canada Extradition Act of 1886 remains in force.

And whereas by an Order of Her Majesty the Queen in Council, dated the 17th day of November, 1888, it was directed that the operation of the Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, should be suspended within the Dominion of Canada so long as the provision of the said Act of the Parliament of Canada of 1886 should continue in force and no longer:

And whereas a Treaty was concluded on the 20th and 25th days of June, 1890, between Her Majesty and the President of the Orange Free State, for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals, which Treaty is in the terms following:—

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India, and his Honour the President of the Orange Free State, in the name of the Government of that Republic, having judged it expedient, with a view to the better administration of justice and to the prevention of crime within the two countries and their jurisdictions, that persons charged with or convicted of the crimes or offences hereinafter enumerated, and being fugitives from justice, should, under certain circumstances, be reciprocally delivered up;

His Excellency Sir Henry Brougham Loch, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George, Knight Commander of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath, Governor and Commander-in-chief of the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope, Her Majesty's High Commissioner for South Africa, &c., acting on behalf and in the name of Her said Majesty;

And his Honour Francis William Reitz, President of the Orange Free State, acting on behalf and in the name of the Government of the Orange Free State,

Have agreed upon and concluded the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

The High Contracting Parties engage to deliver up to each other, under the circumstances and conditions stated in the present Treaty, those persons who, being accused or convicted of any of the crimes or offences enumerated in Article II, committed in the territory of the one Party, shall be found within the territory of the other Party.

2. Manslaughter.
3. Administering drugs or using instruments with intent to procure the miscarriage of women.
4. Rape.
5. Unlawful carnal knowledge, or any attempt to have unlawful carnal knowledge, of a girl under 16 years of age, if the evidence produced justifies committal for those crimes according to the laws of both the Contracting Parties.

6. Indecent assault.
7. Kidnapping and false imprisonment, child-stealing.
8. Abduction.
9. Bigamy.
10. Maliciously wounding or inflicting grievous bodily harm.

13. Perjury or subornation of perjury.
14. Arson.

17. Obtaining money, valuable security, or goods by false pretences; receiving any money, valuable security, or other property, knowing the same to have been stolen or unlawfully obtained.
18. (a.) Counterfeiting or altering money, or bringing into circulation counterfeited or altered money.

    (b.) Forgery, or counterfeiting or altering, or uttering what is forged, counterfeited, or altered.

    (d.) Assault on board a ship on the high seas, with intent to destroy life or to do grievous bodily harm.
23. Dealing in slaves in such manner as to constitute a criminal offence against the laws of both States.

The extradition is also to be granted for participation in any of the aforesaid crimes, provided such participation be punishable by the laws of both Contracting Parties.

Extradition may also be granted at the discretion of the State applied to in respect of any other crime for which, according to the laws of both the Contracting Parties for the time being in force, the grant can be made.

ARTICLE III.

Either Government may, in its absolute discretion, refuse in any case to deliver up its own subjects to the other Government.

ARTICLE IV.

The extradition shall not take place if the person claimed on the part of Her Majesty's Government, or the person claimed on the part of the Government of the Orange Free State, has already been tried and discharged or punished, or is still under trial in the territory of the Orange Free State or in the United Kingdom respectively, for the crime for which his extradition is demanded.

If the person claimed on the part of Her Majesty's Government, or on the part of the Government of the Orange Free State, should be under examination for any other crime in the territory of the Orange Free State or in the United Kingdom respectively, his extradition shall be deferred until the conclusion of the trial and the full execution of any punishment awarded to him.

ARTICLE V.

The extradition shall not take place if, subsequently to the commission of the crime, or the institution of the penal prosecution or the conviction thereon, exemption from prosecution or punishment has been acquired by lapse of time, according to the laws of the State applied to.

ARTICLE VI.

A fugitive criminal shall not be surrendered if the offence in respect of which his surrender is demanded is one of a political character, or if he prove that the requisition for his surrender has, in fact, been made with a view to try or punish him for an offence of a political character.

ARTICLE VII.

A person surrendered can in no case be kept in prison or be brought to trial in the State to which the surrender has been made, for any other crime, or on account of any other matters, than those for which the extradition shall have taken place, until he has been restored, or has had an opportunity of returning to the State by which he has been surrendered. This stipulation does not apply to crimes committed after the extradition.

ARTICLE VIII.

The requisition for extradition shall be made through Her Majesty's High Commissioner for South Africa on behalf of the United Kingdom and Her Majesty's Colonies or foreign possessions, not excluded from this Treaty by Article XVIII, and through the Consul-General of the Orange Free State at London on behalf of the Government of the said State.

The requisition for the extradition of an accused person must be accompanied by a warrant of arrest issued by the competent authority of the State requiring the extradition, and by such evidence as, according to the laws of the place where the accused is found, would justify his arrest if the crime had been committed there.

If the requisition relates to a person already convicted, it must be accompanied by the sentence of condemnation passed against the convicted person by the competent Court of the State that makes the requisition for extradition.

A sentence passed in contumaciam is not to be deemed a conviction, but a person so sentenced may be dealt with as an accused person.

ARTICLE IX.

If the requisition for extradition be in accordance with the foregoing stipulations, the competent authorities of the State applied to shall proceed to the arrest of the fugitive.

ARTICLE X.

A fugitive criminal may be apprehended, under a warrant issued by any Police Magistrate, Justice of the Peace, or other competent authority in either country, on such information or complaint, and such evidence, or after such proceedings as would, in the opinion of the authority issuing the warrant, justify the issue of a warrant if the crime had been committed or the person convicted in that part of the dominions of the two Contracting Parties in which the Magistrate, Justice of the Peace, or other competent authority exercises jurisdiction; provided, however, that in the United Kingdom the accused shall, in such case, be sent as speedily as possible before a Police Magistrate in London. The criminal shall, in accordance with this Article, be discharged, as well in the Orange Free State as in the United Kingdom, if within the term of forty-five days a requisition for extradition shall not have been made by the Diplomatic Agent of his country in accordance with the stipulations of this Treaty.

The same rule shall apply to the cases of persons accused or convicted of any of the crimes or offences specified in this Treaty, and committed on the high seas on board any vessel of either country which may come into a port of the other.

ARTICLE XI.

The extradition shall take place only if the evidence be found sufficient, according to the laws of the State applied to, either to justify the committal of the prisoner for trial, in case the crime had been committed in the territory of the same State, or to prove that the prisoner is the identical person convicted by the Courts of the State which makes the requisition, and that the crime of which he has been convicted is one in respect of which extradition could, at the time of such conviction, have been granted by the State applied to; and no criminal shall be surrendered until after the expiration of fifteen days from the date of his committal to prison to await the warrant for his surrender.

ARTICLE XII.

In the examinations which they will have to make in accordance with the foregoing stipulations, the authorities of the State applied to for said extradition shall admit as valid evidence the depositions or statements of witnesses taken in the other State, under oath or under solemn affirmation to tell the truth, according as it legislation may provide, or the copies of these depositions or statements, and likewise the warrants issued and sentences pronounced in the State which demands the extradition, the certificates of the fact of the condemnation, or the judicial documents which prove it, provided the same are authenticated as follows:—

1. A warrant must purport to be signed by a Judge, Magistrate, or officer of the other State.

2. Depositions or affirmations, or the copies thereof, must purport to be certified, under the hand of a Judge, Magistrate, or officer of the other State, to be the original depositions or affirmations, or to be true copies thereof, as the case may require.

3. A certificate of, or a judicial document stating the fact of a conviction, must purport to be certified by a Judge, Magistrate, or officer of the other State.

4. In every case such warrant, deposition, affirmation, copy, certificate, or judicial document must be authenticated either by the oath of some witness, or by being sealed with the official seal of the Minister of Justice, or some other Minister of the other State; but any other mode of authentication for the time being permitted by law in the State where the examination is taken may be substituted for the foregoing.

ARTICLE XIII.

If the individual claimed by one of the two High Contracting Parties, in pursuance of the present Treaty, should be also claimed by one or several other Powers on account of other crimes or offences committed upon their respective territories, his extradition shall be granted to that State whose demand is earliest in date.

ARTICLE XIV.

If sufficient evidence for the extradition be not produced within two months from the date of the apprehension of the fugitive, or within such further time as the State applied to, or the proper Tribunal thereof, shall direct, the fugitive shall be set at liberty.

ARTICLE XV.

All articles seized which were in the possession of the person to be surrendered at the time of his apprehension shall, if the competent authority of the State applied to for the extradition has ordered the delivery of such articles, be given up when the extradition takes place; and the said delivery shall extend not merely to the stolen articles, but to everything that may serve as a proof of the crime.

ARTICLE XVI.

All expenses connected with extradition shall be borne by the demanding State.

ARTICLE XVII.

The present Treaty shall apply to crimes and offences committed prior to the signature of the Treaty.

ARTICLE XVIII.

The stipulations of the present Treaty shall not be applicable to the South African Colonies and possessions of Her Britannic Majesty.

ARTICLE XIX.

With the exceptions mentioned in the preceding Article, the stipulations of the present Treaty shall be applicable to all the Colonies and foreign possessions of Her Britannic Majesty, so far as the laws for the time being in force in such Colonies and foreign possessions respectively will allow.

The requisition for the surrender of a fugitive criminal who has taken refuge in any of such Colonies or foreign possessions shall be made to the Governor or chief authority of such Colony or possession by the chief Consular officer of the Orange Free State in such Colony or possession.

Such requisition may be disposed of, subject always as nearly as may be, and so far as the law of such Colony or foreign possession will allow, to the provisions of this Treaty, by the said Governor or chief authority, who, however, shall be at liberty either to grant the surrender or to refer the matter to his Government.

Her Britannic Majesty shall, however, be at liberty to make special arrangements in the British Colonies and foreign possessions for the surrender of Orange Free State criminals who may take refuge within such Colonies and foreign possessions, on the basis, as nearly as may be, and so far as the law of such Colony or foreign possession will allow, of the provisions of the present Treaty.

Requisitions for the surrender of a fugitive criminal emanating from any such Colony or foreign possession of Her Britannic Majesty shall be governed by the rules laid down in the preceding Articles of the present Treaty.

ARTICLE XX.

The present Treaty shall come into force ten days after its publication, in conformity with the forms prescribed by the laws of the High Contracting Parties. It may be terminated by either of the High Contracting Parties by a notice not exceeding one year and not less than six months.

The Treaty shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Bloemfontein as soon as possible.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same, and have affixed thereto the seal of their arms.

Done in duplicate, at Cape Town, this 20th day of June, 1890.

Done in duplicate, at Bloemfontein, this 25th day of June, 1890.

And whereas the ratifications of the said Treaty were exchanged at Bloemfontein on the 16th day of December, 1890.

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, and in virtue of the authority committed to her by the said recited Acts, doth order, and it is hereby ordered, that from and after the day of * , 1891, the said Acts shall apply in the case of the Orange Free State pursuant to the arrangement made by the said Treaty with the President of the Orange Free State.

Provided always, and it is hereby further ordered that the operation of the said Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, shall be suspended within the Dominion of Canada so far as relates to the Orange Free State and to the said Treaty, and so long as the provisions of the Canadian Act aforesaid of 1886 continue in force, and no longer; and provided also that the operation of the said Extradition Acts 1870 and 1873 shall not extend to the South African Colonies and possessions of Her Majesty so far as relates to the Orange Free State and to the said Treaty.

No. 2.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received March 16.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, March 14, 1891.

Delagoa Bay Railway case. Terms of the "Compromis Lié" proposed to be submitted to the Court of Arbitration.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the terms of the

"Compromis Lié," which it was proposed to submit to the Court of Arbitration at Berne in the matter of the Delagoa Bay Railway case.

To Sir G. Petre, No. 10, Africa, 6th February, 1891.

That it would be seen (telegram to Sir George Petre No. 10, Africa, of the 6th February, 1891) that Her Majesty's Government had objected to the draft "Compromis Lié," drawn up by the Portuguese Government, on the ground that it laid down Rules of Procedure for the guidance of the Arbitrators, whereas Her Majesty's Government contended that the framing of such Rules was a matter entirely within the competence of, and should be left exclusively to, the Arbitrators themselves, and that the object of the "Compromis Lié" was simply to record the agreement of the parties to abide by the award of the Arbitrators, and to state the terms of reference.

That the Portuguese Government, in reply, had expressed their readiness to instruct their Representative at Berne to concert the terms of an amended draft with his British and United States' colleagues, if the Government of the United States expressed views similar to those held by Her Majesty's Government (Sir G. Petre, No. 24, Africa, of 10th February, 1891).

Sir G. Petre, No. 24, Africa, 10th February, 1891.

That in a despatch No. 8 of the 12th ultimo, Mr. Scott, Her Majesty's Minister at Berne, entered at some length into the whole question, and suggested, moreover, a modification of Article VIII of the Portuguese draft, with a view to place the full competence of the Arbitrators to take cognizance of all the circumstances and issues in the case beyond the possibility of doubt.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take that despatch, together with the other papers transmitted with his letter, into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion:—

1. As to whether we concurred generally in the line of argument adopted by Mr. Scott, and considered that it might properly be approved.

2. Whether the words suggested by Mr. Scott, "auront pleine compétence pour connaître" (or words to a similar effect), should be substituted for the following words, "statueront sur leur propre compétence pour connaître," &c., which appeared in Article VIII of the Portuguese draft of the "Compromis Lié."

That your Lordship would, further, be glad to receive any general observations which we might have to offer in connection with the case.

We were also honoured with a further note from Sir Philip Currie, dated the 20th ultimo, inclosing a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Berne, containing additional observations in regard to the terms of the "Compromis Lié."

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Opinion as to laying down rules of procedure for the guidance of the Arbitrators.

That we concur generally in the line of argument adopted by Mr. Scott, and consider that it may be properly approved.

We are further of opinion, for the reasons stated in Mr. Scott's despatch, that it is very desirable that the words "aura pleine compétence pour connaître" should be substituted for the words "statuera sur sa propre compétence pour connaître" in Article VIII.

We have, &c.

Proposed Arbitration in case of.

19th ultimo relative to the proposed arbitration on the claim of the Delagoa Bay Railway Company against the Portuguese Government, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us an extract from a letter from Mr. Scott, Her Majesty's Minister at Berne, in which he suggested that he should be furnished with definite instructions as to the limits within which he should confine diplomatic intervention on behalf of the claimants.

Mr. Scott, No. 5, Africa, 13th August, 1890.

That the notes in which the Portuguese and British Ministers at Berne requested the Swiss Government to undertake the selection of three eminent Swiss jurists to constitute a Tribunal of Arbitration would be found in Mr. Scott's despatch No. 5, Africa, of the 13th August, 1890.

The "Compromis Lié."

That the preamble of the "Compromis Lié," which was before us, contained the terms of reference as agreed upon between the Governments.

That a reference to the correspondence at pp. 86, 88, 106, and 122 of the Confidential print, already transmitted to us, would show that the Portuguese Government had constantly maintained that the arbitration was between the Governments of Portugal on the one hand, and of Great Britain and the United States on the other, and not between the Portuguese Government on the one hand, and the Delagoa Bay Railway Company and the United States' claimants on the other. That Her Majesty's Government had, however, never assented to that definition, and that it had never been their intention to do more than, in the first place, to secure for the Company a hearing before an independent and impartial tribunal, furnished with full powers to adjudicate upon the matters in controversy between that Company and the Portuguese Government, and, secondly, to see that the case of the Company was fairly placed before the Board of Arbitration. That they did not, however, propose to incur any responsibility for the details of the case submitted by the Company, or for the conduct of that case when once it had been submitted to the Arbitrators.

That it was presumed that, when the hearing of the case had been concluded, the Arbitrators would make known their decision and award to the Swiss Federal Government, at whose immediate instance they had consented to undertake the investigation, and that the Federal Government would then communicate that award to the Governments respectively interested.

That the question now arose whether Her Majesty's Minister at Berne should not be instructed in that sense.

That Sir Philip Currie was accordingly to inquire whether, taking into consideration Mr. Scott's remarks and all the circumstances of the case, we considered that he might properly be directed to suspend diplomatic intervention when once the case of the Delagoa Bay Railway Company was placed before the Arbitrators.

That there would, however, appear to be no objection to his continuing to the parties interested such unofficial advice and assistance as they might stand in need of.

To Law Officers, 9th March, 1891

We were also honoured with a further letter from Sir Philip Currie, dated the 9th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a paraphrase of a telegram from Her Majesty's Minister at Berne, from which it would appear that the Portuguese Government were disposed to insist that the respective Governments which invited arbitration should be responsible for the cases and arguments submitted by the parties primarily interested.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take that telegram into our consideration, in conjunction with the other papers and questions recently submitted to us in connection with the Delagoa Bay Railway arbitration case, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which it would be right and proper for Her Majesty's Government to pursue in the matter.

We have also the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Sir Philip Currie's note of the 10th instant, inclosing a further despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Berne with reference to the proposed arbitration.

We have taken these papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

H. M.'s Govt. cannot now dispute the contention of the Portuguese Govt. that the arbitration is between the respective Governments.

That, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government cannot now dispute the contention of the Portuguese Government, that the arbitration is between the respective Governments, and that the Delagoa Bay Company is not in any way to be entitled to be considered as one of the parties to such arbitration. The payment of 28,000*l.* was made by the Portuguese Government, and accepted by Her Majesty's Government, upon those terms (see No. 159, p. 86, Confidential print, 1890).

Her Majesty's Government will, therefore, be responsible for the conduct of the case founded on the claims of the British Company, and the suggested suspension of intervention, when the claims have been submitted to the Tribunal, might involve the suspension of the whole arbitration. These considerations appear to us to make it the more important that the Rules of Procedure should be left to the decision of the Tribunal. In our opinion, it will be necessary that the claims of the Delagoa Bay Company should be carefully considered by Her Majesty's Government before they are submitted to the Arbitrators.

No. 4.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, March 25, 1891.

Delagoa Bay Railway case.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 20th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 14th instant on the instructions to be sent to Her Majesty's Minister at Berne relative to the terms of the "Compromis Lié," which it was proposed to submit to the Court of Arbitration in the matter of the Delagoa Bay Railway case, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further despatch from Mr. Scott, commenting on the instructions which the United States' Minister had received from his Government, and inclosing copy of a draft "Compromis Lié" drawn up tentatively at Washington for his assistance.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the despatch into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our observations thereon, and our opinion as to whether, having regard to its terms, any alteration should be made in the instructions about to be sent to Mr. Scott in conformity with the recommendations contained in our previous Report on the terms of the draft "Compromis Lié" suggested by the Portuguese Government.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

See Law Officers' Report of 14th March, 1891.

That we are of opinion that there is no necessity for any alteration in the instructions proposed to be sent to Mr. Scott.

As regards the American draft "Compromis Lié," we agree substantially with the criticisms thereon by Mr. Scott.

The terms of the proposed clause 3, "The Arbitrators shall have the power to decide all questions as to their competence," are open to the same objections as those taken to the words, "statuera sur sa propre compétence," referred to in the second paragraph of our Report of the 14th instant.

The words "if any" should certainly not be inserted in clause 4, and the proposed delay of one year in the payment of the amount awarded seems excessive; if any period is inserted, it should be less than twelve months.

If desired, there might be a preliminary meeting to enable the Arbitrators to settle any minor points of procedure, but beyond that we are not in favour of any unofficial meetings.

THE OCEANA GROUP

[Colonial Office.]

No. 5.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Knutsford.—(Transmitted in Colonial Office Letter of April 23, 1891.)

As to extension of the British Protectorate in South Africa.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, April 17, 1891.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bramston's letter of the 12th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to inform us that the rapid development of events in South Africa to the south of the Zambesi, the introduction of large numbers of European miners and others into territories which were not part of Her Majesty's dominions nor under her protection, the actual occurrence of disorders within the existing Protectorate, and the danger of difficulties and disorder arising in Mashonaland and elsewhere within the British sphere of influence, had made it imperative that some extension of Her Majesty's authority in the territories above mentioned should be secured.

That the first step in that direction would be the extension of the Protectorate, and that in order to examine into the nature and extent of the jurisdiction and authority which Her Majesty possessed within a Protectorate, both as regards the subjects of civilized Powers and as regards the native Rulers and inhabitants of the protected territory, your Lordship had caused to be prepared a Memorandum upon the subject which had been laid before Lord Salisbury and approved by him, and was now submitted for our consideration, together with the first draft of an Order in Council for giving effect to the views expressed in the Memorandum.

That the draft might probably receive further additions before it assumed its final shape for our consideration, but that it was believed that, as now drawn, it would sufficiently explain the principles on which Her Majesty's Government proposed to act, if, in our opinion, they would, after declaring a Protectorate, possess the legal powers for so acting.

Draft Order in Council for giving effect to the views expressed in the Memorandum.

That the broad outline of the draft Order was that, subject to such limitations as might be imposed by instructions, the powers and jurisdiction of Her Majesty would be delegated to the High Commissioner, with power to legislate by Proclamation for giving effect to those powers and jurisdiction, in respect, amongst other things, of the administration of justice, the raising of revenue, and generally the government of all persons who, for the time being, were entitled to Her Majesty's protection, and subject to her jurisdiction, while at the same time preserving, as far as the efficient exercise of those powers and jurisdiction permitted, all laws and customs regulating the civil relations of the natives among themselves.

That Mr. Bramston was to add that the Order, if passed, would be supplemented by instructions directing the High Commissioner as to the manner in which, and the extent to which, he was to exercise the authority committed to him.

That Mr. Bramston was further to inform us that while Her Majesty's Government had reason to believe that, under existing arrangements with regard to South Africa, other civilized Powers would acquiesce in, if they did not hold themselves entitled to demand, the exercise of control and jurisdiction by this country in those territories for which it had declared itself to be responsible, it was fully understood that, in the event of any foreign Power objecting to the powers and jurisdiction which it was proposed to exercise, Her Majesty's Government must either remove such objection, or, on grounds of policy, take the responsibility of disregarding it.

That, in addition to the draft Order in Council and Memorandum, Mr. Bramston was to inclose the following documents referred to in the latter paper:—

Law Officers' Report to Foreign Office, 29th June, 1887, with the previous Reports mentioned in it.

General Act of Berlin Conference, 1885.

Charter of the Royal Niger Company, 10th June, 1886.

Charter of the East Africa Company, 1888.

Debate in German Reichstag, 3rd February, 1891.

General Act of Brussels Conference, 2nd July, 1890.

Law Officers' Report to Colonial Office, 11th July, 1890, with Order in Council, 30th June, 1890.

That Mr. Bramston was to request that we would be good enough to take the papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion—

1. Whether the views expressed in the Memorandum were sound, and might be lawfully acted upon by Her Majesty's Government.

2. If so, whether the principles embodied in the draft Order were correct.

That Mr. Bramston was also to request that we would assist your Lordship by any observations upon the subject generally that might appear to us to be desirable.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Views expressed in the Memorandum substantially correct.

That, in our opinion, the views expressed in the Memorandum are in substance correct.

The third paragraph appears to qualify the statement contained in our Report of the 29th June, 1887, but that statement does not in fact require qualification, as we were dealing with the question of exercising jurisdiction by virtue of the authority derived from the assumption of a Protectorate, and no one has doubted that the consent of a foreign Power can confer jurisdiction over its subjects.

In our opinion, paragraph 23 is somewhat too large in its terms, and should refer only to such foreign Protectorates as have been recognized by the General Acts of the Berlin Conference 1885, and the Brussels Conference 1890.

We think it desirable that the argument set forward in paragraphs 17, 18, and 19 should be even more distinctly limited to cases within these General Acts than it is by the opening words of paragraph 17 as now drawn.

Annex 1.

Memorandum as to the jurisdiction and administrative powers of a European State holding Protectorates in Africa.

Memorandum as to the Jurisdiction and Administrative Powers of a European State holding Protectorates in Africa.

1. THIS question must be considered:—
I. With reference to other European States and their subjects.
II. With reference to the native Rulers and peoples of the protected territories.

I.—With reference to European States.

I.—With reference to European States.

2. Nothing will be found in the earlier writers upon international law in reference to Protectorates of the kind now in question, that is to say, where a civilized Power takes under its protection an uncivilized territory to which Europeans resort in greater or less numbers, and where, inasmuch as the native Rulers of the territory are incapable of maintaining peace, order, and good government among Europeans, the protecting Power maintains Courts, police, and other institutions for the control, safety, and benefit of its own subjects and of the natives.

3. The Law Officers, in their Report to the Foreign Office of the 29th June, 1887, state that "no Power has any right, according to international law, to exercise jurisdiction over the subjects of another Power, unless they are residing within its own territorial limits." It is clear, however, that this statement only means that jurisdiction cannot be exercised without the consent of the other Power, for the Report cites and approves the opinions of previous Law Officers that Her Majesty can, by Treaty with native Chiefs, obtain civil and criminal jurisdiction over subjects of other civilized Powers, but that it should not be exercised without the assent of the Power concerned.

4. The consent of nations is one of the two foundations of international law; and Vattel (edit. 1834, by Chitty, p. lxv) says: "These three kinds of the law of nations, the voluntary, the conventional, and the customary, together constitute the positive law of nations. For they all proceed from the will of nations: the voluntary from their presumed consent, the conventional from an express consent, and the customary from tacit consent; and as there can be no other mode of deducing any law from the will of nations, there are only these three kinds of positive law of nations."

5. If, therefore, it can be shown that the nations of Europe have by formal agreement, or by acquiescence which implies consent, or by undisputed usage, recognized the principle that their subjects are judiciable by another nation beyond the territorial limits of the latter, a foundation seems to be laid sufficiently strong to uphold jurisdiction over foreigners in British Protectorates in Africa.

6. It will be remembered that in 1885, in the General Act of the Conference of Berlin, Great Britain by Article XXX, France by Article XXXI, and the other Signatories by Article XXXII, undertook on all those portions of the Niger, its affluents, branches, or outlets, which are or may be under their respective sovereignty or protection, to protect foreign merchants and all trading nationalities as if they were their own subjects.

By Article XXXIV the Signatory Powers (i.e., all the European Powers and the United States of America) undertake to notify to each other any future taking possession of a tract of land on the coasts of the African Continent, or the assumption of a Protectorate there; and by Article XXXV they recognize the obligation to insure the establishment of authority in the regions occupied by them on the coasts of the African Continent, sufficient to protect existing rights, and, as the case may be, freedom of trade and of transit under the conditions agreed upon.

It is obvious that the obligations assumed by these Articles involve the exercise of coercive authority, and as natural justice, which is the other of the two foundations of international law, forbids punishment without trial, it may be urged that they involve an implied—if not an actual—consent as regards Protectorates to the establishment of Courts exercising jurisdiction over the nationals of each of the Signatories, and to the exercise of administrative authority over them.

7. In the year following the Berlin Conference, a Charter, dated the 10th July, 1886, was granted by Her Majesty to the Company known as the Royal Niger Company, which provides for the administration of justice over the peoples of the specified territories and the inhabitants thereof; prescribes that there is to be no differential treatment of subjects of any Power as to settlement or access to markets, but that foreigners alike with British subjects are to be subject to administrative dispositions in the interests of commerce and of order, and requires that the Company shall observe the stipulations of the General Act of the Berlin Conference and all other Treaties.

Under this Charter the Company maintains order and a civil administration, and has established Courts of Justice, with civil and criminal jurisdiction over foreigners, and none of the Signatories of the General Act have, it is understood, disputed this jurisdiction, while in the Hoenigsberg case Germany practically admitted it by appealing to Her Majesty's Government against the decision, on the ground that the locus in quo was outside the British Protectorate (see debate in Reichstag, 3rd February, 1891, F.O. 3628 | 91).

8. In the year 1888 a Charter was granted to the East Africa Company containing similar provisions as to the administration of justice over the peoples of the territories and the inhabitants thereof, as to the treatment of foreigners, and as to subjecting foreigners to administrative dispositions. In this case no foreign nation has, so far as is known, made any protest; the field of the Company's operations, however, has not been specifically declared a Protectorate, unless on that part of the coast which belongs to Zanzibar, and it is understood that there foreign countries enjoy extra-territoriality, which would exclude the Company's jurisdiction.

9. All the German possessions in Africa are Protectorates, and in them jurisdiction is asserted over foreigners without protest from any Power, so far as is known, except Great Britain.

10. The recently published draft Portuguese Charter to the Mozambique Company confers power to administer justice, but it would appear that Portugal claims to possess the full dominion and sovereignty of the territories mentioned in the Charter.

11. It is understood that all the Powers represented at the Berlin Conference of 1884-85, with the exception of Great Britain, maintained that a Protectorate included the right of administering justice over the subjects of other civilized Powers. It would seem, therefore, that if Great Britain were now to adopt this principle in her own Protectorates, the whole body of European Powers and the United States of America are precluded from denying her right to do so; in other words, have consented to the principle.

12. To sum up, it appears that if the exercise of jurisdiction and of administrative control over foreigners in countries not within the dominions of the State claiming the jurisdiction and administration were in principle contrary to the rules of international law, it might, by the consent of the body of civilized nations, be adopted as a new principle of that law. But such exercise of jurisdiction is not in principle opposed to the rules of law, for, as the Law Officers have advised, where the protecting State has obtained jurisdiction from the Ruler of the protected country, it may lawfully exercise it over foreigners if their own Government consents. And all the civilized nations whom it is necessary to consider have expressly given their consent as regards Protectorates on the Niger; have so acted at the Berlin Conference that their consent in other cases may be presumed; and as no protest has been made in respect of the exercise of this jurisdiction in German Protectorates, their tacit consent may also be inferred. So that the three kinds of consent specified by Vattel—voluntary or presumed consent, conventional or express consent, and customary or tacit consent—all appear to have been given by foreign nations in respect of the exercise of coercive jurisdiction and administrative powers over their nationals in British Protectorates.

13. Such would appear to be deductions from principle and from the action of civilized Powers at and since the Berlin Conference, but the position is confirmed in a remarkable way by the proceedings of the Brussels Conference of the 2nd July, 1890. The Ist Article of the General Act of that Conference commences thus:—

"The Powers" (including Great Britain) "declare that the most effective means for counteracting the Slave Trade in the interior of Africa are the following:

"(1.) Progressive organization of the administrative, judicial, religious, and military services in the African territories placed under the sovereignty or Protectorate of civilized nations."

And it proceeds (paragraphs 2 to 7) to prescribe the establishment of occupied stations, roads, railways, inland steam navigation, telegraph lines, expeditions and flying columns, and restrictions on the importation of fire-arms and ammunition.

This is a declaration that the civilized Powers of the world recognize, as a principle of international law, that the protection of an uncivilized territory carries with it many of the most important attributes of a sovereign State, and that the subjects of civilized Powers are, within such territory, to have the benefit of, and be subject to, all administrative and judicial institutions established by the protecting Power to the same extent as the subjects of that Power.

II.—With reference to the Rulers of protected territories.

14. This branch of the question touches the origin of the jurisdiction which it is sought to exercise, and may be examined under two heads: (a) where the protected Ruler has, (b) where he has not, expressly given to Her Majesty jurisdiction over all White persons within his territory.

15. As regards (a) no discussion is necessary; the grant of jurisdiction, as the Law Officers have advised, carries the right to try foreigners if their Government consents; and, as shown above, the general consent of foreign Governments appears to have been given implicitly, if not in express terms.

16. But as to (b) other considerations arise. In cases of protection between civilized nations, the weaker or protected nation usually obtains a guarantee of its territory by the stronger or protecting Power, reserving to itself the full right of administering its own Government; such an arrangement in no way derogates from the sovereignty of the protected Power. But sovereignty is not indivisible, as was shown in the Protectorate of England over the Ionian Islands, and as is shown by the principle of extra-territoriality conceded to European Powers in Turkey, China, Zanzibar, and elsewhere; by the general power of administration in Cyprus granted by Turkey to England, and by the grant of jurisdiction to England in South Africa by Montsioa, Mankaroane, and Khama. In all these cases the protected Power abandons a portion of its sovereignty in favour of another Power; there is, therefore, nothing in the nature of sovereignty which would prevent the relation of protector and protected, as exercised in South Africa, from effecting ipso facto a transfer of a portion of the sovereignty of the protected Ruler.

17. When Great Britain or any other European Power assumes the Protectorate of an uncivilized African territory, it necessarily excludes other Powers from holding relations, except through itself, with the Rulers of the protected territory, and so far it assumes a portion of what may be called the external sovereignty of those Rulers. At the same time the protecting Power becomes responsible to other Powers for the safety of their nationals, and as such Powers would not be able to appoint Consuls in these territories, and as no Native Courts exist for the protection of foreigners, the protecting Power can only discharge its responsibility to the country of a sufferer either by forcibly inflicting some personal punishment on the offender, or by establishing Courts for the trial of such cases; and as the individual foreigner may claim protection against a wrong done to him, it necessarily follows that he accepts the liability to control for any wrong done by himself.

18. In all these countries the protecting Power exercises a certain amount of control over the internal affairs of the country inconsistent with the continuance of full sovereignty in the native Rulers, and it is apprehended that by accepting a Protectorate the native Ruler surrenders to the protecting Power so much sovereignty as is necessary for giving effect to the protection granted. This protection includes the repression of crime and disorder among White men, which the native Chief is of himself powerless to repress, and the establishment of a judicial system for dealing with such crime appears to be one of the attributes of sovereignty which the protecting Power acquires.

19. To conclude, the matter may be re-stated thus:—

As the protector stands between the protected State and foreign Powers, both as the sole channel of communication, and as shielding the protected State from their attacks, foreign Powers must seek from the protector redress for any injuries which, either directly or in the persons of their subjects, they suffer from the protected State. The Powers must also seek from the protector that justice for their subjects which they cannot get from the local Courts of an uncivilized State, but might get through their Consuls if these were not excluded.

The protector must, therefore, have power to secure subjects of foreign Powers from injury within the protected State. Whether it exercises that power directly, or through the medium of the Local Government of the protected State, is immaterial as regards any foreign Power.

But the protector must also, correlative with its duty of protecting subjects of foreign Powers from injury and supplying them with justice, have a right, as against those Powers, to keep their subjects, when resorting to the protected State, from injuring others, and to punish them if they are wrong-doers. The protector must be responsible to foreign Powers for the proper exercise of this right, but if it is exercised through a proper Court the question whether it is exercised directly or through the medium of the Local Government of the protected State is immaterial as between the protector and the foreign Power, and is merely an internal question as between the protector and the protected State; and the mode of exercise of the right may vary infinitely with the various circumstances of the protected States.

A foreign Power, therefore, which is excluded from holding direct communication with the protected State, cannot complain if the protector of that State exercises jurisdiction over the subjects of the foreign Power who resort there. And in the absence of any special agreement it seems, to say the least, consistent with the principles of international law that when the Crown has assumed a Protectorate in the sense before mentioned over an uncivilized State, it should have power to legislate for and punish persons resorting there who are not natives of that State.

20. This position is strengthened not only by Article I of the General Act of the Conference of Brussels, 1890, but also by the provisions of Article XXXIV of the General Act of the Conference of Berlin, 1885, which provides that a Power who assumes a Protectorate on the coasts of Africa is to notify it to the other Powers who signed the Act, in order that they may complain if necessary.

21. The latter Article, which must now, it is presumed, be considered as international law for the uncivilized countries on the African coast, shows that, by the proclamation of a Protectorate over those countries, the rights of other European Powers are either excluded or limited; and a Power which makes no objection when the Protectorate is signified must be presumed to have assented to such exclusion or limitation. This Article must be construed so as to enable the protector to give effect to the undertaking in Articles XXX and XXXV of the said General Act to protect foreign subjects, and maintain authority sufficient to protect existing rights and the freedom of trade.

As to the machinery for exercising partial sovereignty.

As to the Machinery for exercising partial Sovereignty.

22. If the above view is correct, it will be seen that the partial sovereignty is obtained by cession, express or implied, from the native Ruler, and it is apprehended that it may be exercised by the same methods as if the Ruler had ceded his whole country to Her Majesty—that is to say, by Letters Patent or Orders in Council—and the Law Officers have already approved, in June 1890, of an Order in Council vesting in the High Commissioner the power of regulating the exercise of ceded sovereignty by means of legislative Proclamations, which would therefore seem to be the appropriate method for meeting the case now under discussion, i.e., of part of the sovereignty of the country being impliedly ceded, owing to the nature of the relations existing between the protected and the protector.

23. It must be remembered that if Her Majesty's Government claim to exercise jurisdiction over foreigners by the above methods, they will, if not expressly estopped by their acceptance of the General Act of the Brussels Conference, be necessarily precluded from claiming that British subjects are exempt from jurisdiction in foreign Protectorates. But it is understood that no such exemption is claimed for this country.

Annex 2.

South Africa.

Order of the Queen in Council providing for the exercise of Her Majesty's Jurisdiction in certain Territories of South Africa.

At the Court at , the day of , 1891.

Dated 1891.

Present:

The Queen's Most Excellent Majesty in Council.

Preamble.

WHEREAS by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means Her Majesty has power and jurisdiction in the territories of South Africa, situate within the limits of this Order as hereinafter described:

Recites "Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890."

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise in Her Majesty vested, is pleased by and with the advice of her Privy Council to order, and it is hereby ordered as follows:—

Territorial limits of jurisdiction.

1. The limits of this Order are: The parts of South Africa bounded by British Bechuanaland, the German Protectorate, the Rivers Chobe and Zambesi, the Portuguese possessions, and the South African Republic.

Powers of High Commissioner.

2. The High Commissioner may, on Her Majesty's behalf, exercise all powers and jurisdiction which Her Majesty, at any time before or after the date of this Order, had or may have within the limits of this Order, and to that end may take, or cause to be taken, all such measures, and may do, or cause to be done, all such matters and things within the limits of this Order as are lawful, and as in the interests of Her Majesty's service he may think expedient, subject to such instructions as he may from time to time receive from Her Majesty or through a Secretary of State.

Appointment of officers.

3. The High Commissioner may appoint so many fit persons as, in the interest of Her Majesty's service, he may think necessary to be Deputy Commissioners, or Resident Commissioners, or Assistant Commissioners, or Judges, Magistrates, or other officers, or may define, from time to time, the districts within which such officers shall respectively discharge their functions.

Powers of officers.

Every such officer may excise such powers and authorities as the High Commissioner may assign to him, subject, nevertheless, to such directions and instructions as the High Commissioner may from time to time think fit to give him. The appointment of such officers shall not abridge, alter, or affect the right of the High Commissioner to execute and discharge all the powers and authorities hereby conferred upon him.

Removal of officers.

The High Commissioner may remove any officer so appointed.

Proclamations by High Commissioner.

4. In the exercise of the powers and authorities hereby conferred upon him, the High Commissioner may, amongst other things, from time to time by Proclamation provide for the administration of justice, the raising of revenue, and generally for the peace, order, and good government of all persons within the limits of this Order, including the prohibition and punishment of acts tending to disturb the public peace.

Proviso: native laws or customs.

The High Commissioner, in issuing such Proclamations, shall respect any native laws or customs by which the civil relations of any native Chiefs, tribes, or populations under Her Majesty's protection are now regulated, except so far as the same may be incompatible with the due exercise of Her Majesty's power and jurisdiction.

Publication of Proclamations.

5. Every Proclamation of the High Commissioner shall be published in the Gazette, and shall, from and after the expiration of one month from the commencement of such publication, and thereafter until disallowed by Her Majesty or repealed or modified by any subsequent Proclamation, have effect as if contained in this Order.

Her Majesty may disallow Proclamations wholly or in part.

6. Her Majesty may disallow any such Proclamation wholly or in part, and may signify such disallowance through a Secretary of State, and upon such disallowance being publicly notified by the High Commissioner in the Gazette the provisions so disallowed shall, one month after such publication, cease to have effect, but without prejudice to anything theretofore lawfully done thereunder.

Jurisdiction conferred upon Courts of British Bechuanaland. (Section 9 of "Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890.")

7. The Courts of British Bechuanaland shall have in respect of matters occurring within the limits of this Order the same jurisdiction, civil and criminal, and appellate, as they respectively possess from time to time in respect of matters occurring within British Bechuanaland, and the judgments, decrees, orders, and sentences of any such Court made or given in the exercise of the jurisdiction hereby conferred may be enforced and executed, and appeals therefrom may be had and prosecuted in the same way as if the judgment, decree, order, or sentence had been made or given under the ordinary jurisdiction of the Court.

But the jurisdiction hereby conferred shall only be exercised by such Courts, and in such manner and to such extent, as the Governor of British Bechuanaland shall by Proclamation from time to time direct.

Saving for other jurisdictions.

8. Subject to any Proclamation made under this Order any jurisdiction exercisable otherwise than under this Order, whether by virtue of any Statute or Order in Council, or of any Treaty, or otherwise, and whether exercisable by Her Majesty, or by any person on her behalf, or by any Colonial or other Court, or under any Commission, or under any Charter granted by Her Majesty, shall remain in full force.

Evidence.

9. Judicial notice shall be taken of this Order, and of the commencement thereof, and of any Proclamation made under this Order, and published in the Gazette, and of any Treaties affecting the territories within the limits of this Order, and published in the Gazette, or contained in papers presented to both Houses of Parliament by command of Her Majesty.

Commencement of Order.

10. This Order shall be published in the Gazette, and shall thereupon commence and come into operation; and the High Commissioner shall give directions for the publication of this Order at such places, and in such manner, and for such time or times as he thinks proper for giving due publicity thereto within the limits of this Order.

Revocation of Orders in Council of 27th January, 1885, and 30th June, 1890.

11. The Orders in Council of the 27th day of Jannary, 1885, for the establishment of civil and criminal jurisdiction in Bechuanaland, and of the 30th day of June, 1890, providing for the exercise of Her Majesty's jurisdiction in certain territories in South Africa, shall continue in force until the commencement of this Order, and be thereupon revoked, but without prejudice to anything lawfully done thereunder, and any Proclamation theretofore issued under the said Orders shall continue in operation until repealed or altered by any Proclamation of the High Commissioner under this Order.

Power reserved to Her Majesty to revoke, &c., present Order.

No. 6.

The Marquis of Salisbury to the Lord Chancellor.

[In reply to the following reference, the Lord Chancellor reported on the 20th April as on p. 18:—]

My Lord, Foreign Office, March 21, 1891.

Delagoa Bay Railway arbitration. As to its being between the two Governments.

I SEND you some papers with respect to the Delagoa Bay arbitration, which I have had for greater convenience type-written. The cause of my asking you to take the trouble to look at them is an opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown, which you will find among these papers, and the important paragraph of which I have marked in red.

When the Portuguese Government confiscated the Delagoa Bay Railway, and with it the investment of certain British subjects whose status they had practically recognized, we insisted on the injustice of their proceedings, and, in conjunction with the United States' Government, required them to send the matter to arbitration. In doing so, we sought for redress to British investors against an injustice inflicted by the Portuguese Government. But we did not say that the injustice was to Her Majesty's Government, or claim for them redress, by arbitration or otherwise. This intermediate position was the only one possible to us. We could not leave the matter on one side, or the British investors would have had no redress. We could not, on the other hand, put ourselves in the place of the British investors without making ourselves responsible for the justice of all the claims they put forward, and for the conduct of the proceedings by which they were to be redressed. So, up to the other day, we imagined the matter to stand. We had required the Portuguese Government to submit to arbitration, but it was arbitration of the claims of a Company upon them, not of the claims of Her Majesty's Government. But now the Law Officers tell us that because the Portuguese Government have taken the opposite view, and we have not contested it, we are bound to accept the position that the arbitration is between the two Governments. They found themselves on a passage, which you should consult, in a letter from the Foreign Minister of Portugal. They say that we accepted the 28,000*l.* conveyed in that letter upon the terms that the arbitration was between the respective Governments. I cannot see in the correspondence any trace of such an admission, still less of such an agreement on our part, and I am at an entire loss to know on what basis the Law Officers found that opinion. There is nothing in the papers to sustain it. There can be nothing in any doctrine of law to uphold it, for the law of arbitration current in this or any other country has no bearing upon an international proceeding; and the law of arbitration as between nations is so modern and founded upon so few cases, that it can contain no tradition or prescription to sustain the contention of the Law Officers.

It is primarily on this question that I ask your judgment.

But there is another more difficult one of mixed law and expediency behind it. If we were now ostentatiously to put forward our contention that we are not parties to the arbitration, it is quite possible that Portugal might wrap herself in her dignity and decline to go on, and her vis inertiæ, which has already been abundantly proved, might mean in practice several years' delay. On the other hand, I am very unwilling to admit in any formal manner that we are a party to it. That some of their claims are just I have no doubt. But we could not safely indorse them all, nor could we, without interminable discussion and delay, establish for ourselves those items on which we could insist, and still less force, the Company to coincide in the repudiation of that which they have solemnly averred. Again, acceptance of the position which the Portuguese desire to assign to us would almost inevitably force us to conduct the arbitration in a far more expensive manner, and that expense would have to be met. The Company would lustily cry out if asked to pay for an assistance they did not want, and I imagine there is very little chance of obtaining such a contribution from the Treasury.

On all grounds, therefore, I desire very much to follow the road we were formerly following, leaving to the Portuguese to put what construction they please upon our position and that of our clients, but, in practice, ourselves restricting our part to so much intervention as might be necessary to secure full hearing and due arbitration for the Company, and no more. I should carefully avoid any language tending to commit the Government either to a full approval of all the Company's claims, or to any liability for any of the Company's expenses.

Memorandum by the Lord Chancellor.

Delagoa Bay arbitration.

IT seems to me that some confusion has arisen from not comprehending the nature of the real dispute between the nations, and what was to be referred when the respective Governments agreed to arbitration.

Mr. Petre, 30th January, 1890.

Mr. Petre's despatch of the 30th January, 1890, appears to give the true clue upon which Mr. Petre reports that the position which the Government (that is to say, the Portuguese Government) still maintains is that while fully understanding that they would have to meet the Company's claim for compensation, the amount is to be settled either, and in preference, by direct negotiation between them and the properly accredited agents of the Company, or, failing that, by arbitration.

Mr. Petre, 21st March, 1890.

Again, in the despatch of the 21st March, 1890 (Inclosure in No. 33), Mr. Petre leads up to the final arrangement by saying—

"I am directed to inform the Portuguese Government that unless provision be made for the prompt settlement of the claims of British subjects interested in the railway, Her Majesty's Government will unite with the Government of the United States in demanding arbitration by an impartial Government."

There is doubtless language in the correspondence which fairly gives rise to the contention that the arbitration when agreed upon was to be of an international character, and so I suppose it was; but the word "international" requires exposition. It is international in this sense, that once the Portuguese Government have agreed with Her Majesty's Government and with the Government of the United States that the claims of a private Company should be referred to an agreed Tribunal, the decision of that agreed Tribunal will bind internationally all three of the parties. But it does not follow, and I should deprecate very much Her Majesty's Government assuming to themselves the character of plaintiffs, as if they represented the claiming Company. Their right of diplomatic intervention, and I think all that the Company could ask, was an insistance that the claims of British subjects should be submitted to a Tribunal which should impartially determine those claims.

But I find no suggestion in the papers for assuming that Her Majesty's Government ever claimed the right to insist on any particular amount which is here the whole question in dispute, inasmuch as the Portuguese Government have from the first admitted that they were bound to make some compensation for the rights of the British subjects which are admitted to have been infringed.

Once it is understood that the arbitration is partly of an international character for the reasons I have pointed out the language which is used becomes quite intelligible, without at all assuming that Her Majesty's Government ever undertook the responsibility of urging the particular amount claimed, the extent of which it must have been quite well known and understood that the British Government could have no knowledge of.

H. M.'s Govt. should not commit themselves either to a full approval of all the Company's claims or to any liability for any of the Company's expenses.

I therefore have no difficulty in advising the Secretary of State to restrict the intervention of the Government to such as may be necessary to secure a due hearing and due arbitration for the Company, and no more, and should strongly advise him to avoid any language tending to commit the Government either to a full approval of all the Company's claims, or to any liability for any of the Company's expenses.

(Signed) HALSBURY.

P.S.—I wish to add that the advance of 28,000*l.* certainly imposes on the British Government the position of stakeholder, and if the Arbitrators were to hold that this sum was more than the award to be ultimately made, the Government would be under an obligation to restore the excess to the Portuguese Government. Perhaps this matter is what has produced the view which the Law Officers have taken of the despatch of Senhor Ribeiro (Inclosure in No. 159), 25th July, 1890, and to that extent, and to that extent only, I agree that there is for the purpose an actual direct obligation between the two Governments.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Knutsford.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, April 30, 1891.

Exercise of jurisdiction by Her Majesty within British Protectorates in Africa.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bramston's letter of the 23rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acknowledge the receipt of our report of the 17th April respecting the exercise of jurisdiction by Her Majesty within British Protectorates in Africa.

That Mr. Bramston was to acquaint us that, since the date of our report it had become known that certain persons were preparing to cross from the South African Republic into the territories of Lobengula, and other places within the field of operations of the British South Africa Company, and that it was reported that they intended to set up a Republic in such territories and places. That it would not be possible for Her Majesty's Government to assent to the establishment of such a Republic, and that the Government of the South African Republic had been informed that the territory of Lobengula, our ally, was under the protection of Her Majesty. That that Chief had also been informed by the High Commissioner that he, the High Commissioner, governed on behalf of Her Majesty, and would punish white persons in his territory if necessary.

That under those circumstances, which your Lordship considered did in fact constitute a foundation for the exercise of Her Majesty's jurisdiction under "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," Mr. Bramston was to invite our opinion specifically on the accompanying draft Order in Council, of which the first draft formed one of the inclosures in the letter from the Colonial Office of the 11th March last, and which, it was therein stated, might receive further additions before it assumed its final shape for our consideration.

That the only additions which your Lordship had considered it necessary to make were a new clause, No. 7, together with certain alterations in the recital and in clauses 4 and 5.

That a copy of the first draft was also inclosed.

That the first recital, referring to the territories in question as being under the protection of Her Majesty, was omitted, as it had not as yet been decided formally to declare a Protectorate over them, and that the 7th clause was added to meet the case (which has already occurred) of an offence being committed outside British Bechuanaland, and all the parties and witnesses being present within that possession.

Africa Order in Council, the 30th June, 1890, Confidential, 5967*.

That Mr. Bramston was to add that there was pressing need for the issue of the Order in Council, and that your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our views, at our earliest convenience, upon the accompanying draft, which, it would be observed, was an expansion of the Order of the 30th June, 1890, upon which we reported on the 11th July last.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

To give validity to Order in Council, territories comprised therein should be declared to be under protection of the Queen.

That, in our opinion, it is necessary, in order to give validity to the Order in Council in so far as it may affect the subjects of other Powers, that the territories comprised therein should be declared to be under the protection of Her Majesty the Queen.

The right to exercise within any foreign country jurisdiction over the subjects of other civilized States must depend upon the territorial sovereignty or upon the consent of such States. We have already advised th in the regions of South Africa where British Protectorates have been established, the provisions of the General Acts of the Berlin and Brussels Conferences are sufficient to justify the exercise of jurisdiction over the subjects of those Powers which were parties to those General Acts. But we find no such consent in relation to territories which have not been declared to be under British protection. In other respects we consider the terms of the draft Order may be approved.

Nyassaland Districts. Proposed Notification placing them under the Protectorate of H. M.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of a Notification which it was proposed to publish in the "London Gazette," placing the territories therein defined as the "Nyassaland Districts" under the Protectorate of Her Majesty.

British Protectorate over the Niger Districts. Notifications of 5th June, 1885, and 18th October, 1887.

That the Notification was drawn in general accordance with those published in the "London Gazette" on the 5th June, 1885, and 18th October, 1887, relating to the British Protectorate over the Niger Districts, of which copies were inclosed.

That it was proposed to make the Protectorate date from the 21st September, 1889, that being the date of the declaration by Her Majesty's Representative of the Protectorate over the adjacent countries of the Makololo, Yao, and Machinga, as defined in the annexed paper, marked (D).

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the terms of the draft into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether they were right and proper for notifying the Protectorate.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Approves form of Notification adopted on 18th October, 1887.

That in our opinion there is grave objection to the dating back of a Protectorate, unless the date notified is that upon which, in fact, Her Majesty obtained by Treaty, or declared by Proclamation, such Protectorate.

In our opinion, the better form of the Notification is that adopted on the 18th October, 1887, which simply states that the territories described are under the Protectorate of Her Majesty.

We have, &c.

Stoppage of "Norseman," "Agnes," and "Shark," under Sir J. Willoughby, by Portuguese at Beira (Pungwe Bay).

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 29th May last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy of a statement sworn before Her Majesty's Vice-Consul at Delagoa Bay on the 20th April last by Captain Sir John Willoughby, Bart., now serving with the local rank of Major, as second in command of the British South Africa Company's forces in Mashonaland, and a copy of a letter addressed by him on the 28th April to the High Commissioner for South Africa.*

* Inclosure in Vice-Consul Smith-De la Cour's No. 13; Inclosure in British South Africa Company's letter of May 23; "Africa No. 2 (1890)," No. 34, p. 30; and No. 36, p. 30.

1891

That the statement described the circumstances in which the party under command of Sir John Willoughby, which was being conveyed in the British vessels "Norseman," "Agnes," and "Shark," all flying the British flag, up the River Pungwe with a cargo of food supplies and road-making tools, and the British mail for the British sphere in Mashonaland, was forcibly stopped on the 18th April by the authorities at Beira, a Portuguese port at the mouth of the river.

Grounds upon which this was done.

That it would be seen that, though Sir John Willoughby offered to pay the proper dues on goods in transit, and all clearance charges, the Customs authorities declined them on the ground that the river was not open; that he gave the Governor-General full notice of the objects of his Mission, and of his intention to carry out his instructions; but that when he eventually started he was followed by three vessels of war, all cleared for action, and that a shot was fired from one of them across the bows of his leading vessel to enforce his discontinuing his journey. That after he had stopped a rifle-shot was fired from the "Liberal," but that although the bullet was seen to strike the water, there was practically no evidence to show that it was aimed at any of Sir John Willoughby's vessels. That subsequently the "Agnes" was boarded by a party of armed soldiers, who took possession of her and her lighters. That the British flag on board the "Shark" was hauled down by the Portuguese, and the Portuguese flag hoisted in its place.

Steps taken to obtain release of vessels.

That on receipt by telegram of intelligence of the action of the Portuguese authorities, Her Majesty's Government at once demanded that the vessels and lighters should be released, on the ground that, under the modus vivendi of the 14th November, 1890, the transit of merchandize from the Pungwe to the British sphere of influence was guaranteed.

That it should be observed that, immediately after the signature of the modus vivendi, the King of Portugal had issued a Decree (of which a copy was inclosed), declaring that the transit between the port of Beira (Pungwe Bay) and the sphere of British influence should be carried on under the same conditions as those provided by Article 70 of the Decree of the 30th July, 1877, for the transit to the regions situated beyond the confluence of the Rivers Zambesi and Shiré—that was to say, at a tariff not exceeding 3 per cent. ad valorem on the goods in transit; that that was the amount of duty offered by Sir John Willoughby, and refused; that, though he was in error in stating that the 3 per cent. duty was fixed under the modus vivendi, he was right in tendering, and the Portuguese authorities were wrong in refusing, that amount of duty which had been prescribed by the Royal Decree.

That the Portuguese Minister at this Court called on your Lordship on the 22nd April and endeavoured to excuse the action of the Portuguese officer in command, on the ground that he dreaded a collision between Sir John Willoughby's party and a body of Portuguese soldiers, who appeared to have been in a state of exasperation, and for whose conduct their commanding officer was consequently not able to answer.

That his Excellency insisted that the sole motive for the officer's action had been fear for the consequences to Sir John Willoughby's party if it had proceeded.

Release of vessels ordered.

That on the 24th April, Her Majesty's Representative at Lisbon telegraphed that positive orders had already been sent to the Governor-General at Mozambique to afford facilities at once for transit to British territories of Her Majesty's mail, of passengers only carrying arms for personal defence, and of merchandize on payment of an ad valorem duty of 3 per cent.; and, further, to allow vessels under foreign flags to ascend the Pungwe as far as a place called Maponda, where a military station would be established for police purposes.

Vessels cleared on payment of fine under protest.

That in spite of that, it was not till the 18th May that Her Majesty's Government received a telegram from Her Majesty's Vice-Consul at Delagoa Bay, stating that the "Agnes" and lighters had been cleared from the Custom-house on payment of a fine under protest.

Should compensation be demanded? If so, on what grounds?

That Sir T. V. Lister was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether, under the circumstances therein set forth, Her Majesty's Government were entitled to demand compensation from the Portuguese Government for the acts complained of, and, if so, on what especial grounds such a demand would, in our opinion, most advantageously be based.

That your Lordship would, at the same time, be glad to be favoured with any general observations upon the local aspect of the case which we might be good enough to offer.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government are entitled to demand compensation from the Portuguese Government for the acts complained of, on the ground that the Portuguese officials had no right to arrest and detain a British vessel carrying lawful cargo in respect of which a tender had been made of the only amount which it can be pretended they were entitled to exact.

Grounds on which compensation should be demanded.

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received March 18.)

[In answer to the following reference, the Law Officers reported on the 16th March as on p. 23:—]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

(A.)

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, February 4, 1891.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquis of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted in the margin,* which relate to a Law recently passed in the Argentine Republic, entitled "the Excise Law." A translation of this Law, as originally submitted to the Argentine Legislature, is inclosed in Mr. Pakenham's despatch No. 46, Commercial, of the 22nd ultimo. The Message of the President of the Argentine Republic presenting this Law to the Legislature will be found in my other letter of this day's date, marked (B).

Excise Law of the Argentine Republic.

It is to be presumed that the Law passed, in the form so translated, without amendment. Clause 5 of this Law enacts that Insurance Companies located (literally "rooted") without the Argentine Republic, but with branches in that State, shall pay a tax of 7 per cent. on the premiums for policies issued in the Republic.

It is to be presumed that no such tax is levied on the premiums of Insurance Companies "located" in the Argentine Republic, and that the word "located" is used in such a sense that "Company located in England" means "Company incorporated under English law."

Certain British Insurance Companies have protested against the application to them of the above-mentioned "Excise Law," and the question arises whether it constitutes an infraction of the Treaty of 1825 between Great Britain and the Argentine Republic, which State was then called the United Provinces of Rio de la Plata. A copy of the Treaty is inclosed. Article IX thereof stipulates, among other things, that British subjects shall in the Argentine Republic "be exempted . . . . . from all forced loans . . . . ; neither shall they be compelled to pay any ordinary taxes whatsoever greater than those that are paid by native subjects or citizens."

Protest of certain British Insurance Companies against the Law as an infraction of the Treaty of 1825 between Great Britain and the Argentine Republic.

It will be observed that these stipulations are made in favour of British subjects, and that Joint Stock or other Corporations are not mentioned in the Treaty. Corporations are not, however, usually mentioned in the national or most-favoured-nation clauses of Commercial Treaties, although trading Corporations and Joint Stock Companies had long been in existence at the time of the signature of most of the British Commercial Treaties now in force, including the Treaty with the Argentine Republic.

The capital of British Companies, i.e., of Companies incorporated under English law, is not necessarily subscribed by British subjects; and a Company, although it may conveniently, for many purposes, be considered in the abstract as having a personal existence, and as being clothed with an artificial, as opposed to a physical, personality, cannot be said to have any true nationality.

Nationality, strictly speaking, is an attribute of physical persons only, and an artificial person, although capable in contemplation of English law of possessing domicil, either British or other, can hardly be said to possess a national status. British domicil would not, however, entitle a physical person to claim for himself or his property the benefits of the above-mentioned stipulations of the Treaty between Great Britain and the Argentine Republic; and, under these circumstances, it is not easy to see in what manner an artificial person can occupy a more advantageous position in this regard by reason merely of his domicil being British.

No precedent has been discovered in the records of this Department which would be of assistance in considering this matter, with the exception of one of doubtful validity, which will shortly be referred to. At the same time it does not appear that any nation has hitherto assumed in practice that incorporated Companies are outside the pale of the provisions of the ordinary Commercial Treaties: nor would it be desirable, as a matter of policy, that such an assumption should be made, for the proportion of the trade of all countries carried on by Corporations, and the proportion of the capital of all countries held by Corporations, is now very large and is daily increasing. There can, moreover, be no doubt that the British and other Governments have constantly made international representations on behalf of Companies incorporated under their respective laws and domiciled in the dominions of the State making such representations, without inquiring as to the nationality of the persons who had subscribed the capital of such Companies.

The precedent of doubtful validity mentioned above is contained in the inclosed despatches from and to Her Majesty's Minister at Athens.* In the despatch to Sir H. Rumbold it is assumed that under a Treaty with Greece (copy of which is inclosed), containing stipulations similar to those in the Treaty with the Argentine Republic now in question, national treatment could not be claimed for a British Company in a matter of taxation in Greece, for the reason that it had been found necessary to conclude Special Conventions with regard to Joint Stock Companies, in addition to the usual Commercial Treaties, and that, therefore, those Treaties could not be held to confer the right to national treatment in certain matters to British Companies, although it conferred that right in those matters on British subjects. The Agreement subsequently concluded in 1888 with Greece by Great Britain merely provides for the reciprocal recognition in the one country of the corporate existence of Companies legally constituted in the other. It does not appear that national treatment had been in this case refused on the ground that Greek law did not recognize the corporate existence of a Company created under foreign law.

A copy of the Agreement with Greece is inclosed. It is similar to the other Joint Stock Agreements or Declarations referred to in the above-mentioned despatch to Her Majesty's Minister at Athens. The inclosed despatches† respecting the earliest in date of these instruments, that, namely, with France, confirms the view that they relate exclusively to the reciprocal recognition of incorporated Companies. The fact that it has been found necessary to conclude such Agreements does not, therefore, appear to have any bearing on the question of the application to Corporations of the favourable treatment provided by Treaties for persons. A copy of the Joint Stock Companies Agreement with France is also inclosed for purposes of comparison.

Commercial Treaty of 1853 between the United States and the Argentine Republic.

It appears from a telegram from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington that the Government of the United States, in the absence of precise information as to the nature of the discrimination made by the Argentine Law now in question, has protested against it on general grounds of equity. A copy of the Commercial Treaty of 1853 between the United States and the Argentine Republic is inclosed. Article X of that Treaty provides national treatment in matters of taxation for United States' citizens in the Argentine Republic in terms similar to those quoted above from Article IX of the Treaty between Great Britain and the Argentine Republic.

It may be presumed from the terms of the Argentine Law now under consideration that Argentine law does not refuse to recognize the corporate existence of Companies constituted abroad. The questions raised appear, therefore, to be limited to the application to incorporated Companies of Treaty stipulations regarding persons.

I have the honour to request you to take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether—

1. British Companies, i.e., Companies incorporated under English law, are in the Argentine Republic entitled to the benefit of the treatment provided in the Treaty between Great Britain and that State for British subjects.

2. Whether, in the event of your reply on the first point being in the affirmative, the provisions quoted above from Article IX of that Treaty, or any other provisions of that Treaty, are infringed by the new Argentine Excise Law in such a manner and to such extent as to justify Her Majesty's Government in protesting against the application of that Law to British Companies.

3. Whether, in the event of your reply on the first point being in the negative, Her Majesty's Government would be justified in protesting against the application of the Law now under consideration to British Companies, either on equitable or other grounds.

4. Whether the view expressed above as to the scope and meaning of our International Agreements in relation to Joint Stock Companies with France and with Greece, and consequently of other existing Agreements similar to those with France and Greece, which it has not been thought necessary for the main purposes of this reference more particularly to deal with, and as to their bearing on the points submitted to you in question No. 1, is correct or not.

The opinions you may express on these points will doubtless be sufficient to show whether British Companies can claim most-favoured-nation treatment in matters of commerce under Article III of the Treaty, it being assumed that the business of an Insurance Company is "commerce" within the meaning of the Treaty; but I am also to request you to favour Lord Salisbury with any further observations which you may have to offer generally in connection with the case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) JAMES FERGUSSON.

We have taken the papers which were inclosed in Sir James Fergusson's letter of the 4th ultimo, and also the further despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Buenos Ayres, which was forwarded to us on the 11th instant, into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to Think H. M.'s Govt. should protest against application of section 5 of the new Excise Law to British subjects.

Report—

That, in our opinion, British subjects carrying on, in the Argentine Republic, a business of life insurance would not be the less entitled to the national treatment granted by the Treaty of 1825, because they were in fact agents for a Company established under English law, but where the persons acting as agents are Argentine citizens or foreigners, the fact that they represent a British Company does not entitle them, or the Company, to invoke the assistance of Her Majesty's Government in asserting for them the right to the privilege given by the Treaty. In our opinion, the imposition of a special tax of 7 per cent. upon premiums received by Argentine citizens, on behalf of a foreign Company, would not be a violation of the Treaty, but if a special tax were imposed in the case of British subjects carrying on, in the Argentine Republic, the trade of life insurance, whether on their own behalf, or as representing a British Company, there would, in our opinion, be a violation of Article IX of the Treaty, and, having regard to the general terms of section 5 of the new Excise Law, we think Her Majesty's Government should protest against the application of that clause to British subjects.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, February 4, 1891.

Gentlemen,

New Argentine Stamp Law.

Treaty between Great Britain and the Argentine Republic of February 1825.

WITH reference to my other letter of this day's date (marked A) respecting the new Argentine Excise Law, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquis of Salisbury, to request your advice on a clause of the new Argentine Stamp Law. A translation of this Law is annexed,* as also a copy of the Commercial Treaty now in force between Great Britain and the Argentine Republic.

The points about to be submitted to you involve the question of the application to incorporated Companies of Treaty stipulations regarding persons, and depend, necessarily, on the opinion which, on that point, you may express in reply to my other letter above mentioned.

Discrimination between private and State Banks.

The second clause of the Stamp Law provides that banks of deposit, other than those incorporated under the Law establishing the National Guaranteed Banks, shall pay a special tax not levied on the National Guaranteed Banks. The President's Message (paragraphs 16 and 19) submitting the Law to the Legislature, which is inclosed herewith,† speaks of the tax as one on private banks as distinguished from the National Bank and the Provincial Bank of Buenos Ayres. The private banks established in the Argentine Republic are believed to be chiefly foreign.

I have the honour at the same time to submit to you, for your consideration and opinion, the 1st section of clause 1 of the new "Law of Licences" in the Argentine Republic. A translation of that Law is annexed.

The section in question provides that certain licence taxes shall be paid, and that certain guarantee funds shall be found by all Insurance Companies which have not at least 50 per cent. of their capital employed in the Argentine Republic, and which have not a Board of Directors resident in that Republic.

The Law does not state in so many words that these enactments as to licence taxes and guarantee funds apply exclusively to foreign Companies; but the provision is such that its application to any Argentine Company is exceedingly improbable: no Argentine Insurance Company is at all likely to have more than 50 per cent. of its capital employed outside the Republic; and it is stated in the inclosed letter from the London Fire Offices Committee that foreign Companies only will be liable to the imposts created by the new Law. Her Majesty's Government are not, however, in possession of any further or more definite information as to the incidence of these taxes.

The Argentine Laws now submitted to you were transmitted to Lord Salisbury in Mr. Pakenham's despatch No. 46, Commercial, of the 22nd ultimo, which is inclosed in my other letter of this day's date, and it is probable that the protest made by the Government of the United States, mentioned in that letter, refers to the Laws now under consideration, as well as to the Argentine Law regarding the tax on the premiums of foreign Insurance Companies.

I have the honour to request you, in connection with the opinions you may express on the points submitted to you in my other letter above referred to, to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion—

1. As to whether the discrimination between private and State banks made by clause 2 of the new Argentine Stamp Law is, in the circumstances of the case, such that Her Majesty's Government would be justified in protesting on the ground of infraction of any provision in the Treaty between Great Britain and the Argentine Republic, or on general grounds of equity, against the application of that Law to British banks: (a) on the assumption that the private banks are not all foreign, and that one Argentine bank at least is assessed to the tax; (b) on the assumption that all the banks assessed are foreign banks, and that no foreign bank prove able to establish an exemption in such a way as to enable British banks to claim a similar exemption under the most-favoured-nation treatment provided under clause 3 of the Treaty.

2. As to whether the provisions above referred to of the Licence Law do, in fact, involve such a discrimination between foreign and Argentine Insurance Companies as to constitute an infraction in practice of the Articles of the Treaty between Great Britain and the Argentine Republic providing national treatment in matters of taxation, and whether the provisions in question violate the spirit of the Treaty though framed so as to avoid breaking the letter thereof, and are, consequently, of such a nature that a protest should be made against them, lest they come to form a precedent by the extension of which the Treaty may, in regard to the taxation of Companies, be made of no practical effect; and

3. As to whether, in the event of your reply to the latter part of question 2 being in the affirmative, the argument there suggested might properly be made use of in regard to the taxation of private banks referred to in question 1, should it appear that the banks liable under the Law are all foreign banks.

We have taken the matters referred to in Sir James Fergusson's letter of the 4th ultimo into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

H. M.'s Govt. not justified in protesting against clause 2 of the new Argentine Stamp Law.

1. That, in our opinion, the discrimination between private and State banks made by clause 2 of the new Argentine Stamp Law would not justify a protest by Her Majesty's Government either on the ground of the violation of the Treaty of 1825, or on the general grounds of equity.

Requirement of guarantee funds from Insurance Companies could be justified by consideration of public interest.

2. Although the effect of the requirement of guarantee funds from Insurance Companies, having less than half their capital employed in the Republic, and having no Board of Directors resident therein, will probably affect only foreign Companies, it could be justified, and perhaps was prompted, by the consideration of the public interest that persons receiving premiums and undertaking contracts of insurance ought to possess funds which could be reached by the Tribunals of the country in which that business is carried on.

The question as to licence duty depends on considerations dealt with in our Report of the 16th instant.

My Lord,

Military service in the Argentine Republic and Uruguay. Liability of British subjects to. Cases of Mr. J. S. Grant and Mr. Hoskin.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 15th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the status in the Argentine Republic of Mr. J. S. Grant, born of British parents, but in Argentine territory.

That Mr. J. S. Grant was stated to be the son of a British-born subject, W. B. Grant, deceased, who never divested himself of his British nationality; but that as Mr. J. S. Grant was born on Argentine soil he was an Argentine citizen by Argentine law.

That he had applied, with a view apparently of escaping the provisions of the Argentine law with regard to military service, for a certificate of naturalization as a British subject.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to make the following observations with reference to Mr. Grant's case:—

1. That Mr. Grant, being the son of a natural-born British subject, was himself a British subject by English law.

2. That, under those circumstances, it would naturally be quite contrary to the usual practice to issue to him a certificate of British naturalization, and that, moreover, even if an exception were to be made in his favour, it would appear that it would not avail to change his status as an Argentine citizen according to Argentine law, and thus relieve him from military service in the Argentine Republic.

3. That Article IX of the Treaty between Great Britain and the United Provinces of Rio de la Plata of the 2nd February, 1825, provided that the subjects and citizens of the two Contracting Parties should be exempted from all compulsory military service whatsoever, by sea or land, and from all forced loans or military exactions or requisitions. That that Treaty was still in force, but that if Her Majesty's Government were to appeal to it in the present case, the reply would, no doubt, be that though Mr. Grant was a British subject by English law, he was an Argentine citizen by Argentine law, and was therefore not exempted, under the Treaty, from military service in the Argentine army.

4. That the law of this country conferred British nationality on all persons born on British soil, and that although children born in Her Majesty's dominions of alien parents might, under certain circumstances, renounce their British nationality on attaining 21 years of age, it had been held that up to that age the quality of British subject attached to them without possibility of renunciation.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was also to inclose a correspondence between the Foreign Office and Mrs. Hoskin, relative to the case of her grandson in Uruguay, which was of precisely the same character as that of Mr. Grant in the Argentine Republic.

That it was possible that the difficulty, which in both of those States arose in connection with liability to military service, might be overcome by arrangement on terms of reciprocity between the respective Governments; and that your Lordship was disposed to think that proposals might be made to the two Governments for the conclusion of Conventions or Declarations to the effect that in the Argentine Republic and in Uruguay all persons who by English law were deemed to be British subjects, and in the United Kingdom all persons who by Argentine and Uruguayan law respectively were deemed to be Argentine and Uruguayan citizens, should be exempt from military service.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would inform your Lordship whether, in our opinion, that course might properly be adopted, or whether better means (and, if so, what) existed of meeting the difficulty which had arisen; and that we would also furnish your Lordship with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Approve making reciprocal arrangement suggested.

That, in our opinion, the best means of meeting the difficulty which has arisen would be the making of the reciprocal arrangement suggested.

It is clear that certificates of naturalization cannot be granted, and that if granted they would not effect the object desired.

Royal Courts of Justice, July 22, 1891.

My Lord,

Draft Copyright Convention proposed to be submitted to the Austro-Hungarian Government for negotiation.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a draft Copyright Convention which it was proposed to submit to the Austro-Hungarian Government for negotiation.

That the aim of the draft Convention was to follow as closely as might be, consistently with the provisions of English law, the form of a Copyright Convention recently concluded between Austria-Hungary and Italy, of which a copy was inclosed.

That the draft Convention had been submitted to, and approved by, the Board of Trade and Colonial Office.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the provisions of the draft Convention were consistent with English law; and whether it was such as might properly be submitted to the Austro-Hungarian Government for negotiation.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Approve draft Convention.

That, in our opinion, the proposed Convention is consistent with the principles of English law.

We have made some suggestions for the improvement of its drafting.

CHILE.

No. 13.

Royal Courts of Justice, February 20, 1891.

My Lord

Importation into Chile of arms and munitions of war from this country prohibited by Chilean Government.

That the Chilean Minister at this Court had, as would be seen from his note inclosed with the papers, notified that his Government had prohibited the introduction into Chile of arms, ammunition, and all sorts of war materials during the revolution now in progress in that country; and that he requested that Her Majesty's Government would bring that prohibition to the notice of the authorities at English ports from which shipments of such war material were likely to be made, and more especially at the ports of Glasgow, Liverpool, and Southampton.

That the inclosed Memorandum by Sir E. Hertslet would doubtless be found of use as affording an indication of the line of action pursued by Her Majesty's Government in former instances when somewhat similar requests had been made, but that it was to be noted that the precedents therein quoted all related to occasions on which two countries had been actually at war with each other.

That those precedents were not, therefore, wholly applicable to the circumstances of the case now under consideration, where there was no question at present of hostilities between two recognized belligerents, but rather of a rebellion by the one party against the constituted authority of the other.

That your Lordship was disposed to think that such a notification as was now requested by the Chilean Government might be desirable both in the interests of British shippers, and also as an act of courtesy to a friendly Power.

That your Lordship would not, however, propose that any such notification should do more than state that an intimation had been received by Her Majesty's Government from the Government of Chile of their decision to prohibit the importation into that country of the articles named.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion as to whether any notification of the nature proposed might properly be published by Her Majesty's Government, and, if so, with what qualifications or explanations we considered it desirable that it should, having regard to the special circumstances of the case, be made.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Notification may properly be inserted in "London Gazette."

That in our opinion a notification may properly be inserted in the "London Gazette," stating that Her Majesty's Government has been informed by the Chilean Government that the importation into Chile of arms, ammunition, and war material of every description is absolutely prohibited *during the continuance of the present civil hostilities in which the Chilean Government is engaged.

We do not consider it necessary that any further caution or explanation should be given.

We have, &c.

My Lord,

Chilean insurrection. French Government requested by revolutionary party to stop the departure of three iron-clads built in France for the Chilean Government.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the insurrection now raging in Chile, and more particularly to a request addressed by the President of the Chilean Chambers, who was the Head of the revolutionary party, to the French Government, asking them to stop the departure of three iron-clads built in France for the Chilean Government, and then ready to leave the ports where they were constructed.

That it appeared, from information received from the French Embassy in London, that one of those vessels was coming to an English port for equipment before going to Chile; and that the French Government had asked, confidentially, to be informed of the manner in which a similar request to that made to them by the Head of the Chilean insurrectionary party would by viewed by Her Majesty's Government.

That it would be seen, from the accompanying despatches received from Her Majesty's Minister in Chile, under what circumstances the revolution was brought about, and what was the nature of the declarations issued by the Heads of the rival parties, defining their relative positions.

That, so far as Her Majesty's Government was aware, the status of the revolutionary party in Chile had not been recognized by any of the Great Powers. That it certainly had not been recognized by this country. That hitherto the only steps taken by Her Majesty's Government in regard to the matter had been at the request of the Chilean Government. That, acting on the opinion expressed in our Report of the 20th February last, a notice was inserted in the "London Gazette" on the 23rd February intimating that Her Majesty's Government had been informed by Señor Antúnez, the Chilean Minister in this country, that the importation into Chile of arms, ammunition, and war material of every description was absolutely prohibited during the continuance of the present civil disorders in the Republic.

That a letter was also addressed on the 19th February by the Chilean Consul at Glasgow to Her Majesty's Collector of Customs at that port, relative to instructions he had received from his Government to see that all vessels clearing for Chilean ports should have their manifests viséd by him at his Consulate during the present political troubles in the Republic. That he asked that publicity should be given at the Custom-house to a Notice to that effect, and that he might receive assistance from the Customs authorities at Glasgow to prevent the shipment of any ammunition of war whatsoever to Chile.

That he was informed, in reply, by the Board of Customs in London that the Notice to which he referred should be put up in the Long Room at the Custom-house, but that they could not enable him to inspect the manifest of any ship or the specifications relating to its cargo, and that any information on those points could only be obtained by him on application to the Bill of Entry Office.

Importation of arms and munitions of war into Chile during the revolution prohibited by the Chilean Government.

That Señor Antúnez, the Chilean Representative in London, having been asked whether he had received any instructions from his Government on that point, replied that he had been directed to make it known that the Chilean Government had prohibited the importation of arms and munitions of war into Chile during the revolution, and to exert due diligence in ascertaining that such shipments to Chile did not take place from the ports under the jurisdiction of the Governments to which he was accredited.

That from the telegrams last received from Her Majesty's Minister at Santiago, and from the Commander of Her Majesty's naval forces on the Pacific Station, it appeared that the Opposition forces had had a considerable success near Iquique, where the Government troops were completely defeated on the 7th ultimo.

That your Lordship had received a telegram purporting to be from the Delegates of the National Congress, and requesting you to prohibit the purchase of arms in this country for President Balmaceda. That your Lordship did not propose to return any reply to that communication.

That the French Ambassador called at the Foreign Office on the 17th ultimo for an answer to the inquiry of his Government in regard to the request from the Head of the insurgent party in Chile, as above described, for the detention of the vessels of war constructed in French ports on behalf of the Chilean Government.

That his Excellency was informed that, in your Lordship's opinion, the answer must necessarily depend on the facts of the case, but that, so far as those facts were known to Her Majesty's Government, it did not appear to them that they or the French Government, as a Government, were aware that the Head of the insurrectionists in Chile possessed any status at all beyond that appertaining to a rebel against the recognized Government of the Republic.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and inform your Lordship whether the circumstances of the case, as explained therein and in the accompanying papers, required that any steps, and, if so, of what nature, should be taken by the authorities in this country in the event of one of the ships destined for the Chilean Government arriving in a British port to receive her equipment, or of a request analogous to that already addressed to the Government of the French Republic by the Head of the insurrectionary party in Chile being made to Her Majesty's Government under present circumstances.

That your Lordship would also be glad to be furnished with any general observations which we might have to offer on the subject.

We were also honoured with a further letter from Sir Thomas Sanderson, dated the 28th ultimo, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 23rd March relative to the question of detention of iron-clads built in France for the Chilean Government, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Mr. Augosto Matti, a Chilean Senator, and Mr. Augustin Ross, of Valparaiso, asking that a torpedo-boat, offered to Senator Balmaceda, the President of Chile, by Jarrow's building-yard at the Isle of Dogs, might not be allowed to leave for Chile; and that Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request us to favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which should be taken with respect to that request in connection with the circumstances already laid before us in his letter of the 23rd ultimo.

We have taken all the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Are of opinion that at present no sufficient ground exists for any action on the part of Her Majesty's Government with respect to ships or ammunition intended for dispatch to Chile.

Memorandum.

Export duties levied by the Chilean insurgent authorities from the shippers of nitrate at ports in their possession.

THE Chilean insurgent authorities have levied from the shippers of nitrate at ports in their possession export duties on that article.

The Presidential Government have tried to meet this by decreeing that vessels should only receive permission to load nitrate on condition of previous payment of the export duty by the shippers at Valparaiso.

They seem to have been prepared to admit that compensation was due to shippers who had also, under compulsion, paid the duty to the insurgents, but that this compensation was a matter to be subsequently decided by the regular Tribunals.

But they have now adopted a fresh measure. They have declared all ports north of Caldera (being in possession of the insurgents) to be closed to commerce; they hold owners and shippers of nitrate responsible for the export duty, and declare vessels and cargoes, disregarding the closure of the ports, as liable to seizure and confiscation.

At the same time, it seems that the insurgents are threatening with their displeasure and possible seizure any steam-packets who omit to visit their usual ports of call on the northern coast.

The measures for consideration appear to be:—

1. A protest through our Minister against any attempt by the Chilean Government to punish vessels for calling at ports which are in the effective possession of the insurgents, and which the de jure Government have no longer the power to close by Decree.

2. An intimation through our Admiral to the insurgents that we will not tolerate any attempt to put compulsion on British vessels to visit ports in insurgent occupation.

3. A protest through our Minister at Santiago against any levy of duties on British subjects on account of nitrate, on which duty has already been paid under compulsion to the insurgents.

4. Advice to British merchants and ship-owners that duties should not be paid to the insurgents except on compulsion and under protest, but that if insisted on, it may then be paid.

And that Her Majesty's Government in such cases will remonstrate against the duty being levied a second time by the Chilean Government.

CHILEAN REVOLUTION.—SHIPPING OF NITRATE.

Memorandum by the Law Officers of the Crown.

As to its being safe for merchants to pay duties to the insurgent authorities.

The question whether it is safe for merchants to pay duties to the insurgent authorities cannot be answered in terms.

Where the insurgent forces are in possession of a port and refuse to allow nitrates to be shipped unless certain dues are paid, the merchants must decide for themselves (making payment—if at all—under protest), and the Chilean Government, if it should re-establish its authority, will not be liable to make compensation.

British vessels pursuing their ordinary course of trading should be protected from molestation either by the Government or the insurgent fleet.

But the Chilean Government has no power to close by Decree ports which are in the actual possession of the insurgent forces, and the right of British vessels to call, or not to call, at such ports as their owners may see fit must be asserted both against the Chilean Government and the insurgents.

Nor can the claim of the Chilean Government that all ships exporting nitrates shall call and pay dues at Valparaiso be admitted.

In our opinion, the measures it is proposed to take are proper and advisable, and instructions should be given to the Admiral to protect British vessels, pursuing their ordinary course of trading, from molestation either by the Government or the insurgent fleet.

My Lord,

Seizure of the British vessel "Kilmorey," belonging to Messrs. Kerr, Newton, and Co., when discharging coal at Guayan, by Chilean ships of war in the hands of the party opposed to President Balmaceda.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin* relative to the seizure of the British vessel "Kilmorey," belonging to Messrs. Kerr, Newton, and Co., of Glasgow, when discharging coal at Guayan, by Chilean ships of war in the hands of the party opposed to President Balmaceda.

That the position of affairs in Chile since the outbreak of the revolution was explained to us in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 23rd ultimo.

That the circumstances under which the "Kilmorey" was seized were given in the inclosed letter from Messrs. Kerr, Newton, and Co., and that the action taken by Her Majesty's naval authorities in Chilean waters was contained in the passages marked in the accompanying Report from Admiral Hotham of the 12th February, at pp. 4, 12, and 19.

That your Lordship proposed to reply to Messrs. Kerr, Newton, and Co.'s representations in the terms of the letter of which the draft was inclosed.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was, however, in the first instance, to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the proposed reply to the owners of the "Kilmorey" was, under the circumstances, fit and proper, and also with any observations which we might have to offer on the case generally.

We were also honoured with a note from Sir Thomas Sanderson, dated the 13th instant, inclosing a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Santiago respecting the "Kilmorey" and other British vessels which had been seized or threatened with seizure by the revolted Chilean fleet.

Annex.

Draft of Letter from Foreign Office to Messrs. Kerr, Newton, and Co.

Foreign Office, April , 1891.

Gentlemen,

I AM directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 4th instant relative to the seizure of your vessel, the "Kilmorey," by certain Chilean ships of war which have fallen into the hands of the party in opposition to President Balmaceda.

In reply, I am to state that a Report on the state of affairs on the Chilean coast has been received from Admiral Hotham, commanding Her Majesty's naval forces on the Pacific Station, in which he mentions what has occurred with regard to your ship.

It appears that on arriving at Iquique, to which place the "Kilmorey" had been taken by the "Aconcagua," a Chilean transport, under the orders of the "Esmeralda," Admiral Hotham sent for her master, and that an arrangement was made with the Chilean fleet to purchase the cargo of the "Kilmorey" on terms with which he (the master) expressed himself satisfied.

Commodore Montt, who was in command of the insurgent fleet, offered, in satisfaction for the seizure of the English and German colliers "Kilmorey" and "Rajah," by one of the transports belonging to the Chilean insurgent navy:—

1. A salute of twenty-one guns to the English and German flags.
2. A promise of indemnity for any losses or damages which either the ships or the consignees of the cargoes might have sustained in consequence of the seizure.

This offer was accepted by Admiral Hotham, and the unfortunate incident was thereupon treated on both sides as closed.

Lord Salisbury does not, therefore, consider that, for the present at any rate, and until the course of events in Chile becomes more clearly defined, any further action can advantageously or properly be taken by Her Majesty's Government in the matter.

I am, &c.

No. 17.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received May 6.)

Royal Courts of Justice, May 5, 1891.

My Lord,

Refusal of Chilean Government to grant clearances to ports in the possession of the insurgents.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 2nd instant stating that, with reference to our Memorandum of the 9th ultimo respecting the Decree of President Balmaceda declaring the northern ports of Chile in the possession of the insurgent forces to be closed to trade, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us correspondence, as marked in the accompanying list, relative to the refusal of the Chilean Government to grant clearances to those ports.

That it would be seen that the answer which had been returned to complaints on the subject was that Her Majesty's Government did not deny the right of the Chilean Government to refuse facilities to vessels for visiting the ports in question; that that was one of the inconveniences to neutral commerce arising out of the present state of affairs; and that ship-owners must themselves decide what course they should take under the circumstances.

Inquiry of the Ship-owners' Association as to protection of their vessels by H. M.'s Government.

That the Ship-owners' Association now inquired, in their letter of the 30th ultimo, whether vessels leaving the port of Valparaiso without clearances would be protected by Her Majesty's Government from seizure, or other hostile action on the part of the Chilean Government.

That your Lordship apprehended that the answer to that question must be that, while Her Majesty's Government would do what was in their power to protect British vessels engaged in legitimate trade from illegal interference, they could not undertake to shield them from any legal action to which they might be liable, while within Chilean jurisdiction, or upon their return to it, for having sailed with a false clearance, or without clearance at all. But that upon that point your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion.

Detention of vessels of Messrs. Peter Denniston and Co. As to H. M.'s Government supporting their claim on Chilean Government for compensation.

That, on the other hand, Messrs. Peter Denniston and Co., in their letter dated the 30th April, had stated their intention of conforming to the orders of the Chilean Government, and that they inquired whether Her Majesty's Government would present and support their claim on the Chilean Government for compensation on account of the consequent detention of their vessels.

That attention was drawn to the same question by Mr. Williamson, M.P., in his letter of the 30th ultimo, and that he had personally suggested that the Chilean Government should be called upon to pay daily the expenses which are being incurred by the masters and owners of the vessels detained at Valparaiso.

That in reference to that point Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request our special attention to Article XVII of the Treaty of Commerce between Great Britain and Chile of the 4th October, 1854, which appeared to bear upon the case.

That your Lordship had thought it right, without entering into the legal question, to telegraph to Her Majesty's Minister at Santiago instructing him to warn the Chilean Government of the remonstrances and claims to which their action was giving rise. That a copy of the telegram was inclosed.

That a telegram had been received from Mr. Kennedy (telegram No. 15, 1st May) stating that similar claims were being made at Valparaiso, and asking for instructions. That a copy of this telegram was also inclosed.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion—

1. As to the answer to be returned to applications that Her Majesty's Government would protect vessels sailing from the southern ports of Chile to the northern ports in possession of the insurgents, under clearances granted by the Chilean authorities for some other port, or without any clearance at all.

2. As to whether compensation could properly be claimed from the Chilean Government, either under Article XVII of the Treaty of the 4th October, 1854, or otherwise, on account of the detention of vessels which remained in the southern ports of Chile in consequence of their inability to obtain clearances for the ports in the north to which they had been chartered; what answer should be returned to applications to present and support such claims; and what instructions should be sent to Her Majesty's Minister at Santiago on the subject.

That your Lordship would also be glad to be furnished with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the papers into our consideration and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Approve terms of proposed answer to letter of Ship-owners' Association.

That we approve the terms of the answer which it is proposed to send to the letter of the Ship-owners' Association.

Article XVII of Commercial Treaty of 1854 only applies to vessels detained in ports closed by the Government.

In our opinion, Article XVII of the Treaty of Commerce only applies to vessels detained in the ports which have been closed by the Government, and not to those vessels which are lying in ports still open and which are free to leave but are, for reasons of political necessity, refused clearances to certain other ports of the Chilean territory.

Should any claim be made by ship-owners under this Article it would, if supported by Her Majesty's Government, and admitted by the Chilean Government, have to be dealt with by arbitration, in respect of amount, in the manner provided by the latter part of the Article. Apart from this Article we are of opinion that no ground is shown for a claim against the Chilean Government being made or supported by Her Majesty's Government.

As to dealing with any claim by arbitration.

My Lord,

Refusal of Chilean Government to grant clearances for foreign ports or the high sea to British or German merchantmen unless pledge was given not to call at ports in possession of the insurgents.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of this date, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 2nd instant on the subject of the refusal of the Chilean Government to grant clearances to British vessels for ports in the possession of the insurgents, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further telegram* from Her Majesty's Minister at Santiago, reporting that the Chilean Government declined to grant clearances for foreign ports or the high sea to British or German merchantmen unless a written pledge was given that they would not call at ports in the possession of the insurgent forces.

That Mr. Kennedy asked whether the Chilean Government had any right to exact such a pledge.

That your Lordship desired to be favoured with our opinion as to the instructions to be sent to Mr. Kennedy in reply.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

Chilean Government not entitled to exact any such pledge.

That the Chilean Government is not entitled to exact any such pledge as is mentioned in the telegram from Mr. Kennedy as a condition of granting clearances for foreign ports or the high sea; and that, in our opinion, the Chilean Government should be promptly informed that Her Majesty's Government will require full compensation to be paid for any loss inflicted upon British subjects by the detention of vessels in consequence of such pledge not being given.

My Lord,

As to infraction by the Chilean Govt. of the exclusive privileges of the Nitrate Railways Company.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 1st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relating to questions which had arisen between the Nitrate Railways Company and the Chilean Government, in regard to the infraction, on the part of the latter, of the exclusive privileges which it was alleged were vested in the Company for the construction of railways in the nitrate districts of Tarapacá.

* Mr. Kennedy, Telegraphic, May 4, 1891.

That your Lordship had already had occasion to consult us on the question, and that two Reports from us dated the 10th February and 28th April of last year, together with the correspondence to which they referred, would be found with the further papers now submitted to us.

That in the month of May last Mr. Kennedy, Her Majesty's Minister at Santiago, was directed to maintain the protest he had previously made on the 13th February against the proposed violation of the Company's rights by the Government of Chile, which had invited tenders for the construction of a railway between Aqua Santa and Caleta Buena, in the Province of Tarapacá.

That he was also told to obtain a legal opinion as to the right of the Council of State to take the matter out of the hands of the ordinary legal Tribunals (see from Mr. Kennedy No. 15 of the 15th February, and to him Nos. 25 and 26 of the 2nd May, 1890).

That the grounds on which the Chilean Government justified their proceedings were given in Señor Mackenna's note to Mr. Kennedy of the 20th March (Inclosure 2 in his despatch No. 23 of the 25th March, 1890).

That in reply to the instructions above referred to, Mr. Kennedy stated that, inasmuch as the Company were engaged in a suit in defence of their privileges before the Supreme Court, and for other political reasons, he concurred with the Company's lawyer and agent in thinking that any direct diplomatic representation should be deferred (see his despatch No. 30 of the 6th May), and that your Lordship acquiesced in that view.

That a copy of the "demanda," or suit, of the Nitrate Railways Company before the Supreme Court would be found in Mr. Kennedy's despatch No. 39 of the 7th May, which also contained observations on the legal and political bearings of the case.

That in the months of April and August 1890 information reached Her Majesty's Government that further Decrees had been issued by that of Chile inviting tenders for the construction of railways in the Province of Tarapacá.

That Mr. Kennedy, however, in a despatch No. 68 of the 17th September, still held the opinion that any further representation to the Chilean Government should be postponed, and that the action of the Supreme Court should not be disturbed. That he also said that the majority of the highest legal authorities in Chile were of opinion that the question at issue between the Company and the Government had been finally settled (whether justly or not was another matter), and that the Government Decree of the 29th January, 1886, declaring the forfeiture of the Company's privileges could not be cancelled (see inclosures in Mr. Budd's letter of the 19th December, 1889).

But that on the 7th September last Mr. Kennedy reported, in his despatch No. 76, that he had decided, after consultation with Mr. Limmick, the Company's agent at Valparaiso, that the time had arrived when it would be desirable to address a note to the Chilean Government stating that Her Majesty's Government maintained the protest recorded in his Memorandum of the 13th February, 1890, and would hold the Chilean Government liable for any damage which the Company might suffer through wrongful action on the part of the Executive, unless it could be shown that the Company had proper and adequate legal remedies open to it for obtaining redress.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to call our special attention to the despatches from Mr. Kennedy marked (N), (O), (P), (Q), (R), in which he reported the substance of communications he had had with a late Minister of Public Works and with two of the late Ministers for Foreign Affairs in Chile, with Señor Zeyen, the Legal Adviser, and Mr. Limmick, the agent of the Company, as to the attitude of the Chilean Government towards the claims of the Nitrate Railways Company and the Constitutional power of the Council of State to interfere with their privileges.

That it appeared from a despatch from Mr. Kennedy, No. 1 of the 2nd January, 1891, that he had recently taken the opinion of Señor Martinez, a lawyer of repute as an authority on Chilean Constitutional law, on the question whether the action of the Council of State in taking the matter out of the hands of the ordinary legal Tribunals was in accordance with Chilean Constitutional law, and whether, by the Chilean Constitution, the Council of State had the right of reviewing, and, if they thought fit, overruling the decision of the Supreme Court.

That a communication, dated the 24th March, 1891, had now been received from Mr. Budd, on behalf of Colonel North and the Directors of the Nitrate Railways Company, stating that one of the customers of the Railway Company, whose contract was about to expire, had made a contract with the owners of the Aqua Santa Line for the carriage of their produce over that line instead of over that of the Nitrate Railways Company. That the Directors of the Company expressed the hope that Her Majesty's Minister at Santiago might be instructed to make a further strong protest against the continued evasion of their rights.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether, having regard to the circumstances mentioned therein and the accompanying correspondence, Mr. Kennedy should be instructed to address any further protest to the Chilean Government, and, if so, in what terms such a remonstrance should be couched.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, Mr. Kennedy should not be instructed to address any further remonstrance to the Chilean Government at the present time.

Are of opinion that no further remonstrance should be addressed to the Chilean Govt. at the present time.

It appears clear that the intervention of the Council of State was justified by the Chilean Constitution, and that further proceedings by the Nitrate Railways Company are now pending before the Tribunals. The final determination as to the propriety of further diplomatic action must be postponed until those proceedings have come to an end.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Knutsford.

Royal Courts of Justice, August 19, 1891.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Robert Herbert's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit, for our consideration, a copy of a despatch from the Governor of Queensland, covering copies of a Proclamation which had been issued by his Government at the request of the Consul-General for Chile,* prohibiting the export, during the civil war in Chile, of arms and ammunition to Chilean ports from Queensland, except for the Government of Chile.

Proclamation of Governor of Queensland prohibiting export during civil war in Chile of arms and ammunition to Chilean ports, except for the Govt. of Chile.

That the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, to whom a copy of the Proclamation was communicated, had, in the letter of which a copy was inclosed, raised a question as to the legality of the Proclamation, which was issued under the powers conferred on the Governor by section 147 of the Queensland Customs Act of 1873.

L. O. Report No 1* of September 10, 1873.

That a copy of the Report of our predecessors on a similar Proclamation, issued by the Governor of Ceylon in 1873, was also inclosed, with a copy of the Ceylon Customs Act of 1869, under section 95 cf which the Proclamation in question was issued.

That your Lordship would be glad if we would take the papers into our early consideration, and report whether the Proclamation issued by the Government of Queensland was bad in law, as being confined to a particular place.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

The Proclamation is not valid in law.

That, in our opinion, the Proclamation is not valid in law. The powers given by section 147 of the Queensland Act must be exercised without discrimination as to the persons or localities to which the goods, if exported, would be sent. That is a political question, and not one of Customs administration.

Foreign Office to the Solicitor-General.

Dear Sir Edward, Foreign Office, August 19, 1891.

Payment of export duties on nitrates to Government and to insurgents.

LORD SALISBURY directs me to consult a legal authority on the inclosed papers; and as Davidson is in Switzerland, and the Attorney-General (who advised on the case before) is in the Orkney Islands, I have recourse to you.

It is about this Chilean insurrection, which was "made to do us harm."

It was decided that, when export dues had been levied by and paid under protest to the insurgent (or Congressional) authorities on cargoes of nitrate loaded in ports in their occupation, a subsequent demand for the same duties by the Presidential or Government authorities at Valparaiso should be contested; but met, if insisted upon, by a bond, leaving the question of principle for subsequent decision.

But, in this case, the circumstances were reversed.

The vessel was lading at Tocopilla, a port in the possession of the insurgents.

A Presidential gun-boat came in, and the insurgent authorities at once ran away.

The gun-boat levied dues on the nitrates, which were in course of being loaded, and then retired.

The insurgent authorities reappeared and also levied the dues.

The Attorney-General considered that the levy of dues by the gun-boat was altogether irregular. We protested at Santiago, and we appear to have obtained a surrender of the dues levied on the nitrates not actually loaded at the time, being about nine-tenths of the total sum.

But the demand of the insurgents for the dues was eventually conceded under protest, and a bill at ninety days given by the agents of the shippers for the amount.

The bill is now about to be presented for acceptance and payment, and the parties ask us what they are to do.

It appears to me that, having given the bill under protest by their agents, they can only now redeem their promise, and accept and pay under protest.

But this is the point on which I am to request your opinion, or, rather, I am to ask you what answer we should give to the inquiry of tho Anglo-Chilean Nitrate and Railway Company on the subject.

Believe me, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

The Solicitor-General to Foreign Office.—(Received August 20.)

Dear Sir Thomas, Thorncote, Staines, August 20, 1891.

The Nitrate Company must accept and pay the draft which their agents, with the help of the British Government, induced the Congressional authorities to take in lieu of cash.

THE Nitrate Company must accept and pay the draft which their agents, with the help of the British Government, induced the Congressional authorities to take in lieu of cash. They can, of course, make any protest they please. I gather, from a comparison of the figure stated in Evans' letter of the 22nd June (4,100*l.*) with the amount of the draft now presented for acceptance (3,227*l.*), that the Congressional authorities have allowed for the portion of the dues exacted by the gun-boat and retained by the Government; and, if so, the Company will only have paid the duties to which the goods are liable. However this be, they are bound to honour the draft, and they will only have themselves to blame if their hesitation to do so should involve them in any future difficulties.

Orders issued by agents of the Congressional party in Chile for the cessation of all loading of guano at the Island of Lobos Afuera.

That it appeared that the Commander of the war-ship "Esmeralda," under the directions of the Congressional Junta established at Iquique, called at the island which had been temporarily ceded by Peru to the Government of Chile under Article IX of the Treaty of Ancon, dated the 20th October, 1883.

That he then superseded the Governor by an agent of the insurrectionary party, issued the orders above alluded to, and blew up the mole and landing-stage used for facilitating the loading of guano vessels.

That complaints had been received from Messrs. Browne and Watson, owners of the British barque "Ada Browne," that their vessel was compelled to sail before she had completed her full cargo of guano.

That it appeared to your Lordship that the inconvenience caused to the owners of the "Ada Browne" and of other British vessels similarly situated, was due to the existence of a revolution in Chile which the recognized Government of the country had hitherto failed to suppress.

Claims on account of losses sustained by the owners of British shipping.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether, under the circumstances, any claim could properly be advanced by Her Majesty's Government against the Provisional Government at Iquique, or eventually against the Government of Chile, for the losses sustained by the owners of British shipping through the above-mentioned acts of the Congressional party, and with any other observations we might have to offer upon the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

H.M.'s Govt. cannot support claims.

That, in our opinion, no claim can properly be advanced in a case of this kind either against the Chilean Government or against the Provisional Government at Iquique.

Conveyance of a consignment of silver specie from Chile by H.M.'s ship "Espiègle."

That on the 12th ultimo Señor Ross, the Agent in London of the Congressional party in armed opposition to the President of Chile, wrote to the Foreign Office (paper A) stating that a report had reached him that a quantity of silver bullion had been shipped at the instigation of the President on board Her Majesty's ship "Espiègle," and that that bullion was consigned in the first instance to the River Plate en route for Europe.

Chilean Law of 1887 relative to bullion guarantee of the national paper currency.

That Señor Ross stated that, by a Chilean Law of the 14th March, 1887, copy and translation of which he inclosed, it was provided that an annual sum of money should be set apart for the purchase of silver dollars or silver bars to be deposited, and kept on deposit, in the Mint at Santiago as a guarantee for the payment of a part of the National Debt issued in the form of national paper currency.

That, according to the information received by Señor Ross, it was the silver bullion thus deposited which President Balmaceda had now taken from the Mint at Santiago and was shipping to Europe for the purpose of selling it and investing the proceeds in munitions of war.

That Señor Ross stated his conviction that Her Majesty's Government could not knowingly be a party to such an attempt on the part of Señor Balmaceda to divert, by the direct intervention of one of Her Majesty's ships of war, this bullion guarantee from the purposes to which it was solemnly dedicated by the Chilean Law of 1887. That Señor Ross trusted that, if the bullion were really on board the "Espiègle," Her Majesty's Government would not allow it to be transhipped at Monte Video or anywhere else, or to be sold, or in any way diverted from the legal and constitutional purpose for which it was destined, especially as the proceeds would be applied to the purchase of munitions of war to be used against one of the contending parties in Chile.

That Señor Ross also stated that the United States' Government had a few months before refused to convey this silver bullion for Señor Balmaceda.

That in two further letters, dated the 17th and 18th ultimo (papers B and D), Señor Ross informed the Foreign Office that the "Espiègle" had arrived at Monte Video on the 15th and had landed 1,000,000 silver dollars.

That a letter was addressed to the Admiralty on the 17th August requesting that inquiry might be made into the truth of these reports.

That on the 20th ultimo the Lords Commissioners communicated to your Lordship (paper F) a telegram received from Monte Video from the commanding officer of Her Majesty's ship "Espiègle," stating that the treasure was shipped by the Chilean Government with the knowledge of the Senior Naval Officer and the approval of the British Minister, was delivered to the Chilean Minister, landed on the 17th ultimo and lodged in the London and River Plate Bank.

That the telegram added that the Chilean Minister stated that the bullion was to be devoted to the purchase of the Italian steamer "Aquila," then at Monte Video.

That on the 28th ultimo, your Lordship inquired of Her Majesty's Minister at Santiago by telegraph to whom the specie belonged, and whether he had authorized its conveyance by Her Majesty's ship "Espiègle. (Paper H.)

That no reply had yet been received from Mr. Kennedy, owing, no doubt, to the serious events which had occurred in Chile in the last few days, and the consequent interruptions of regular communication.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was, however, to direct our attention to a telegram which appeared in the "Times" of the 2nd September (paper I), purporting to give a circumstantial account of what took place in connection with the conveyance of the bullion, and to an extract of a Report from the Senior Naval Officer on the coast of Chile, dated the 24th July, and just received (paper O), stating that the "Espiègle" had been detained at Coronel, by the telegraphic request of Her Majesty's Minister at Santiago, to ship bullion from the Santiago Government to Monte Video.

That the hostilities in Chile had now resulted in the defeat of President Balmaceda, Seizure of the "St. Mary's Bay" outside the 3-mile limit by harbour authorities of Valparaiso.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 8th September last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Admiralty,* detailing the circumstances under which the British barque "St. Mary's Bay" was seized outside the 3-mile territorial limit by the harbour authorities of Valparaiso.

That the Admiralty also inclosed despatches from Captain St. Clair, the Senior Naval Officer on the coast of Chile, detailing his action to obtain the release of the "St. Mary's Bay."

That the Board of Admiralty had been told that your Lordship considered that Captain St. Clair's proceedings, as reported therein, should be approved.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request us to take the papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship, for future guidance in similar cases, with our opinion as to whether the Chilean authorities were legally justified, under the circumstances, in seizing the "St. Mary's Bay" beyond the 3-mile limit, and also with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Arrest not illegal.

That in arresting and bringing back the barque "St. Mary's Bay" into the port of Valparaiso the Chilean authorities did not, in our opinion, infringe any principle of international law.

A private ship of British nationality is, whilst lying within a foreign port, bound to obey the Regulations of that port, and for an infraction of such Regulations the port authorities may pursue the ship into the open sea, and there arrest her, provided that the pursuit is promptly undertaken whilst the ship is still within territorial waters, or has only just escaped from them.

Royal Courts of Justice, February 16, 1891.

My Lord,

Diplomatic privilege. Sir H. Macartney's case.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 19th ultimo, referring to our Report of the 21st August, 1888 (No. 12, China), and stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Chinese Minister at this Court, in which he expressed the hope that Sir H. Macartney's name might be replaced on the list annually furnished to the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex under the Statute of VII Anne, cap. 12.

That the circumstances under which the names of the English Secretaries to the Eastern Legations in this country were removed from the list were set forth in the annexed printed copy of our above-mentioned Report.

That in conformity with the opinion expressed by us in that Report, the annexed note was addressed to the Chinese Minister,* informing him that Sir H. Macartney's name could not be replaced on the Sheriffs' list.

That since the date of that note, legal proceedings were commenced by the vestry of St. Marylebone to enforce payment of parish rates in respect of a house in that parish structurally distinct from the Chinese Legation building, and occupied as a private dwelling-house by Sir H. Macartney, who had declined to pay the rates usually chargeable thereon, on the ground that he was entitled to diplomatic privilege in that regard.

That Sir H. Macartney's goods in the house were seized under distraint, and the amount having been subsequently paid by him under protest, an action was brought by him in the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice to recover the amount so paid.

That the case was heard before Mr. Justice Mathew, sitting without a jury, on the 18th February, 1890, and that on the 24th February the learned Judge delivered a considered Judgment, to the effect that Sir H. Macartney was, under the circumstances, entitled to diplomatic privilege, although he was a British subject, and although his name was not then borne upon the Sheriffs' list.

That the written Judgment, as given in the "Times" of the 25th February, 1890, was annexed, and that the case would also be found reported in the April number of the Law Reports for last year (24 Q. B. D., 368-371).

Should H.M.'s Govt. decline to replace his name on the Sheriffs' list?

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was now to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether, in view of the decision above alluded to, Sir H. Macartney's name ought to be replaced on the Sheriffs' list, or whether in our view any satisfactory and sufficient reason (and if so what reason) could still be alleged by Her Majesty's Government for declining so to replace it.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to add that your Lordship, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, and more especially to the fact that your Lordship's action in another case of a similar kind would probably have to be guided by the course adopted in the present instance, was not desirous of replacing Sir H. Macartney's name upon the list, if Her Majesty's Government could with propriety avoid so doing.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was also to request that, in advising your Lordship upon that particular point, we would, at the same time, be good enough to add any general observations on the case which we might be desirous of offering for your Lordship's assistance.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Reply to query.

That, in our opinion, having regard to the decision of Mr. Justice Mathew, and to the fact that the Chinese Minister has been invited to make an official request for the reinstatement of Sir H. Macartney's name upon the list, it is not desirable that Her Majesty's Government should refuse such request.

* To Lew Ta-jên, September 13, 1888.

We, however, maintain the opinion we expressed in our previous Report, and advise that the concession of this privilege to an English Secretary should be confined to the present case, and that no future appointments should be recognized, except upon conditions which will prevent British subjects from claiming similar diplomatic privileges or immunities.

Should a favourable opportunity arise of reviewing Mr. Justice Mathew's Judgment, we think the question should be again submitted to judicial decision.

Proposed extension of the episcopal jurisdiction of the Bishop of British Honduras over the regions between British Honduras on the north and the Isthmus of Panamá on the south, Port Limon inclusive being the southern boundary of such extension.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin,* relative to the proposed extension of the episcopal jurisdiction of the Bishop of British Honduras, which Bishopric was at present vacant.

That it would be seen from Mr. Lee's letter of the 24th July last that it was proposed by the Provincial Synod of the Church of England in the West Indies that the jurisdiction of the Bishop of British Honduras should be extended by a further Order of the Archbishop and Bishop of London over the regions between British Honduras on the north and the Isthmus of Panamá on the south, Port Limon inclusive being the southern boundary of such extension.

That in Mr. Lee's letter of the 3rd November he inclosed a draft of the intended Order providing for such extension of jurisdiction.

That that draft had been approved by the Bishop of Jamaica, who was in England, and who was the superintending Bishop of the Honduras Diocese (vacante sede).

That it was proposed to address the Circular of which the draft was inclosed to Her Majesty's Consular officers in the countries which would be included in the new jurisdiction to be exercised by the Bishop of British Honduras in the territories indicated in the first paragraph of Sir T. Sanderson's letter to us.

That the question of the extension of the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Gibraltar was reported on by the Law Officers of the Crown on the 7th October, 1869.

That the Memorandum marked (C) showed what took place when the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Gibraltar was extended over the countries bordering on the Mediterranean in 1869, and later when the British Chaplains in South America were placed under the superintendence of the Bishop of the Falkland Islands in 1874.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the Order conferring the proposed increase of spiritual jurisdiction on the new Bishop of Honduras, and the Circular to Her Majesty's Consuls in Central America, were such as your Lordship could properly approve their issue, having regard to all the circumstances of the case.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to Approve instructions to H. M.'s Consuls.

Report—

That, in our opinion, the proposed Order has no legal validity, and will not confer any authority or jurisdiction whatever.

If, however, the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London are desirous of issuing it, we see no reason why Her Majesty should be advised to withhold her approval; and we think that, in the circumstances, the instructions to Her Majesty's Consuls are appropriate.

Case of the Queen v. Francesco Gambin, a British subject, convicted of murder of T. Lestan, an Austro-Hungarian subject.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. Villiers Lister's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Sir H. Fawcett, Her Majesty's Consul-General at Constantinople, and Judge of the Supreme Consular Court for the Ottoman dominions,[*] forwarding, in pursuance of the Ottoman Order in Council, 1873, a copy of the Judgment, together with the Minutes and notes of evidence, in the case of the Queen v. Francesco Gambin, a British subject.

That the prisoner in question was, as would be seen from the above documents, indicted for the murder on the 8th September last of one Teresina Lestan, an Austro-Hungarian subject, and was on the 19th of the same month tried in Her Britannic Majesty's Chief Consular Court for Egypt, sitting at Alexandria, before Sir Charles Cookson and a jury, and convicted of the full offence with which he was charged.

Ottoman Order in Council, 1873.

That judgment of death was thereupon recorded against him, and that the papers had now been forwarded to the Secretary of State, through the Supreme Court, in accordance with the provisions of section 267 of the Ottoman Order in Council, 1873, for your Lordship's direction respecting the punishment to be actually imposed.

Petition from his mother praying for remission of sentence.

That Sir T. Villiers Lister was also to inclose a Petition from the mother of the prisoner praying for a remission of his sentence,[†] which she had erroneously been given to understand had already been commuted to twenty years' imprisonment.

That your Lordship, as then advised, was disposed to think that the case presented no such circumstances of extenuation as would justify you in directing the imposition of less than the maximum penalty prescribed by the Order in Council, and that your Lordship therefore proposed, in the event of our concurring in the view above expressed, to direct that the actual sentence to be imposed should be twenty years' imprisonment with hard labour.

But that, before taking any action in the matter, your Lordship would be glad to learn whether we agreed in that view; or whether we considered, on the other hand, that the circumstances of the case would be more suitably met by the infliction of any other shorter and, if so, what term of imprisonment.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That we concur in the view that the case presents no such circumstances of extenuation as would justify the infliction of less than the maximum term of imprisonment.

Postal Convention with France. Memo. on points for which legislation is necessary.

THE Attorney-General and I have further considered the Postal Convention with France, and have put our observations in the form of a Memorandum, which I now inclose, together with other papers relating to the matter.

(Signed) EDWARD CLARKE.

Inclosure in No. 27.

Memorandum by the Law Officers of the Crown, January 2, 1891.

(Confidential.)

IN consequence of the questions which have arisen respecting this Convention, and the legislation necessary to give effect thereto, we have thought it well to reconsider the matter, and to enumerate the provisions of the Convention which require legislation, and the difficulties which may be raised in Parliament respecting certain of them.

In the following observations, we refer to those Articles only which require legislation in order that they may have effective operation.

Article III. Legislation is necessary in order to enable the postal authorities to compel French ships sailing from ports of the United Kingdom and Ireland to receive and carry letters at the charges named in Article IV.

L. O. Report, December 3, 1890.

Legislation is also necessary if it is considered desirable to take powers to punish in the United Kingdom or Ireland a captain of a ship, British or foreign, who has refused to receive mails in a French port, as suggested by us in our Report of the 3rd December, 1890.

Mr. Jenkyns, in his Memorandum of the 18th December, observes that, assuming that French legislation provides punishment for such refusal, a captain might be punished twice; but it must be remembered that the ship may leave and not return again to the French port. We think it would be better to insert a proviso, that it should be an answer to any proceedings in the United Kingdom or Ireland that the captain had already been fined or punished for the same offence.

Article V. This Article requires legislation. There are, however, several matters arising thereon which require careful consideration.

We assume that the words of the first paragraph are intended to include all detention of the ship by civil process, or for the purpose of execution of civil or criminal process. We agree that the language used is not accurate to embrace all such proceedings, but, looking to the succeeding clauses, we think the French would have ground for arguing that the words were intended to have a wide operation.

As framed, the Article does not purport to interfere with arrest without warrant on suspicion of a felony on board a French ship in a port of the United Kingdom or Ireland, nor does it purport to interfere with the execution of a writ of habeas corpus. Having regard to the questions which have been raised in connection with French vessels we think that, assuming the Convention to be sanctioned by legislation, the French will contend that the only persons who can be arrested are those for whose arrest a warrant has been issued.

This may raise serious questions as to political offenders and persons suspected of felony, and we do not see how objections upon these matters are to be met if raised in debate.

A further difficulty arises with regard to the two concluding paragraphs of this Article relating to the bond or security. How is it to be enforced or put in suit? What evidence of the existence of the security is to be sufficient to enable the captain to demand release of his ship? It must be remembered that claims in respect of collision are very serious; they often amount to sums far exceeding the statutory limits of 8*l*. and 15*l*. per ton respectively—in many cases, upwards of 50,000*l*.

The ship-owning interest in the House of Commons will certainly require very distinct information as to how the security of the ship is to be replaced, and, in our opinion, very clear provisions must be inserted in the Bill specifying exactly the circumstances under which, and the evidence upon which, the vessel is to be released.

Solicitor-General to Sir James Fergusson, February 5, 1890.

Articles VI, VII. As pointed out by the Solicitor-General in his letter to Sir James Fergusson of the 5th February, 1890, if these Articles are to override local Acts of Parliament respecting harbour Regulations, payment of dues, embarking or disembarking of passengers, they necessitate legislation.

We must further point out that, in the case of Colonies, there probably are local laws in force which must be repealed or varied, in order to give effect to the Convention.

Article X. This Article cannot be carried into effect without legislation. At present, by virtue of 3 & 4 Vict., cap. 96, sections 35 and 36, a captain can carry shipowners' letters, and this is regarded as a very valuable privilege in the case of cargo-carrying ships.

7 Wm. IV; 1 Vict., cap. 33; 1 Vict., cap. 36.

There is a prohibition against inward-bound ships carrying letters other than exempt letters, and the master is bound to collect them (7 Wm. IV, 1 Vict., cap. 33, sec. 2; 1 Vict., cap. 36, sec. 2); but it is doubtful whether this applies to outward-bound ships, and legislation is necessary to make this clear.

If the Postal Acts have not been applied to the Colonies, it is probable that legislation for the Colonies may also be necessary.

If the Article is to have effective operation some penalty must be imposed on passengers or crew declining to give up letters to the captain.

We must further point out that some legislative definition of "letters" will be necessary. Is the word to include parcel post packets and all postal packets, or only packets which go by letter post and post-cards?

Articles III, V, VI, VII, and X of the Postal Convention between Her Majesty and the President of the French Republic. Signed at London, August 30, 1890.

ARTICLE III.

The commanders of British and French merchant-ships sailing from the ports of France or Algeria for the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, on the one part, and the commanders of British and French merchant-ships sailing from the ports of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland for France or Algeria, on the other part, shall be bound to take charge of the mails which the post-offices at the ports of departure may have to deliver to them.

ARTICLE V.

When the packets employed by the French Postal Administration and by the British Postal Administration are national vessels owned by the State, or vessels belonging to Companies subsidized for the execution of postal service, such packets cannot be diverted from their destination, nor be liable to seizure, embargo, or "Arrêt de Prince."

Passengers on such packets, who may not desire to go on shore during the vessel's stay in a port of either State, cannot be on any account taken from on board.

Nevertheless, the local authorities may claim the expulsion from on board of persons wanted in pursuance of a regular warrant for any crimes or offences who may have taken refuge or embarked in mail-boats, and, in case of necessity, searches may be carried out on board such vessels by the competent authorities. The individuals in question shall then be handed over to them.

It is, however, agreed that the authorities cannot proceed on board unless they have previously given notice, at least one hour before the search, to the Consulate or Vice-Consulate, in order that the Consul or Vice-Consul, or his delegate, may be present at the searches in question. The letter giving notice shall be addressed to the Consul or Vice-Consul, and shall state the exact hour, and if the Agents neglect either to appear in person or to be represented, the proceedings shall go on in their absence.

The execution of such measures shall not delay the departure of the vessel for more than an hour after the time of departure fixed in the time-tables of the Company, which must be duly communicated by the respective Companies to the authorities of each port of call.

The present Article shall not apply to packets intrusted with a mail service and belonging to Companies subsidized by either State until a bond has been entered into, once for all, by the said Companies to satisfy, after due hearing and definitive decision, the legal consequences of any liability incurred either by the captains of their packets or by the Companies themselves.

The aforesaid bond must be guaranteed by a security within the jurisdiction of the Tribunals of the country in which the bond may have been entered into.

ARTICLE VI.

The packets of the two Administrations shall be at liberty to take on board, or land at the port of the two countries at which they touch, whether regularly or accidentally, specie and gold and silver bullion, as well as passengers, of whatever nation they may be, with their wearing apparel or baggage, on condition that the captains of those packets shall submit to the Sanitary, Police, and Customs Regulations of those ports concerning the arrival and departure of travellers and merchandize.

ARTICLE VII.

The packets of the two Administrations may enter and leave the ports of the two States at any hour of the day or night. They may also, if they think proper, without anchoring, embark or disembark the mails and passengers, in the roads or at the entrance of the harbours, so long as they observe the Regulations referred to in the preceding Article.

ARTICLE X.

The captains of the packets engaged in the conveyance of the respective mails of the two Administrations are forbidden to take charge of any letter not included in those mails, with the exception, however, of despatches of their Governments. They must take care that no letters are conveyed illegally by the crews or passengers, and they must give information in the proper quarter of any infringement which may be committed in this respect.

Lobster factories in Newfoundland.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bramston's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that we should remember that the question of granting compensation to the owners of certain lobster factories in Newfoundland was discussed at a meeting at the Colonial Office which we attended last summer, but that no action was then taken.

That it had since been reported that other factories had been or were being erected, possibly with a view to being closed by Her Majesty's officers, and thereupon being made the subject of a claim for damages; and that Mr. Bramston was directed by your Lordship to transmit, for our consideration, the draft of a despatch which you proposed to address to the Governor of Newfoundland respecting factories begun since the commencement of the modus vivendi of last year

That your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with any observations which we might have to offer on the draft, especially as to whether, in paragraph 5, Her Majesty's Government were sufficiently guarded against any admission of present liability, and as to how far the proposed notice would protect Her Majesty's Government against claims for compensation.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to—

Report—

Approve draft despatch to the Governor of Newfoundland.

That, in our opinion, the draft despatch submitted to us may properly be sent to the Governor of Newfoundland. The language of paragraph 5 appears to us sufficiently to guard Her Majesty's Government against an admission of present liability. The proposed notice will not protect Her Majesty's Government against claims for compensation if it should be decided that factories have been closed without legal authority, but we think it desirable that such notice should be given, as its effect will probably be to check the erection of such factories.

Downing Street, February , 1891.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acquaint you that it has been brought to the notice of Her Majesty's Government that since the publication of the temporary arrangement entered into with the Government of France last year with respect to lobster factories on that part of the coast of Newfoundland on which the French have certain rights of fishing, several new lobster factories are being erected or are in contemplation.

2. As you are aware, the French Government have always maintained that such factories, being buildings of a more or less permanent character, come within the definition of "fixed settlements," and that they are entitled to call upon Her Majesty's Government to remove them, under the Declaration attached to the Treaty of Versailles 1783.

3. Whether this construction is well founded or not is one of the questions which will shortly have to be decided; and, in the meantime, Her Majesty's Government are undoubtedly bound to prevent British subjects from interrupting the prosecution of the legitimate fishery of the French, and consequently in all Crown grants on that part of the coast a reservation is required of the rights guaranteed to the French by the various Treaties and engagements entered into by the Government of Great Britain.

4. These circumstances are well known in Newfoundland, and Her Majesty's Government cannot admit that they are under any legal liability to pay compensation to the owners of factories which, in pursuance of engagements with the Government of France, they may be called upon to close as interfering with the rights guaranteed to French subjects. Prior, however, to March last, when the temporary arrangement with France was published, there had been, in spite of the frequent complaints of the French Government, practically but little interference with the working of the numerous factories erected and worked by British subjects; and, encouraged by this immunity, many new factories were constructed in 1889 and the earlier part of 1890, the operations of some of which were interfered with under that arrangement, although a large number were allowed to pursue the fishery.

5. The question of the legal right of Her Majesty's Government to give effect to that arrangement is now before the Courts, but some time must necessarily elapse before a final decision can be given.

The Governor of Newfoundland is to give public notice that Her Majesty's Government will not entertain any claims for compensation in respect of factories erected since 12th March,

Her Majesty's Government, therefore, in view of the circumstances mentioned above, though they cannot admit any legal claim to compensation on the part of persons whose factories had to be closed, or who had expended money and entered into contracts, subsequently to the 1st July, 1889, and before the publication of the modus vivendi, which that arrangement prevented them from executing, think it desirable that you should appoint a Commission to inquire into all such cases, with the exception of those which form the subject of the legal proceedings referred to, and report for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government what was the actual loss (if any) sustained in each case through the enforcement of the provisions of the modus vivendi.

While, however, they are willing to examine into the cases mentioned, it being possible that in some instances persons proposing to erect factories may not have had sufficient notice that such factories were liable to be closed, no such consideration occurs in the case of persons who have erected factories since the 12th March, 1890; and I request that you will give public notice that all persons erecting or having erected lobster factories since that date, will do so, and have done so, at their own risk, and that Her Majesty's Government will not entertain any claims for compensation in respect of such factories if it should be found necessary to close them pending a permanent settlement of the Fishery question.

I have the less hesitation in desiring you to issue this notice, as from the reports which I have received on the lobster industry it seems clear that the fishery is being exhausted by over fishing, and there is reason to think that factories are being unduly multiplied on the coast.

I have, &c.

No. 29.

Royal Courts of Justice, June 16, 1891.

My Lord,

As to interpretation of Article II of the Anglo-French Agreement of 11th March, 1891, respecting Newfoundland Fisheries Arbitration.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to a question which had been raised by the French Ambassador at this Court as to the interpretation of Article II of the Agreement of the 11th March, 1891, between Great Britain and France, for referring to arbitration certain questions connected with the Newfoundland fisheries, and as to the modus operandi by which the decisions of the Commission of Arbitration were to be enforced.

That the Agreement above mentioned, after reciting that the Governments of France and Great Britain respectively had resolved to submit the solution of certain difficulties which had arisen on a portion of the coasts of Newfoundland to a Commission of Arbitration, contained a reciprocal engagement on behalf of the two Governments "in so far as each may be concerned to execute the decisions of the Commission of Arbitration" (Article II).

That it was averred by the French Ambassador, on behalf of his Government, that France had a right to look to Her Majesty's Government, and to them alone, for the satisfaction of her Treaty rights on the Newfoundland shore, and that Her Majesty's Government had no right to delegate that duty to any judicial Tribunal.

Objection of French Government to all judicial Tribunals as connected with the case.

That he objected especially to a Colonial Tribunal, on account of the prejudice by which he assumed its proceedings and decisions would be affected, but that generally his objection extended on principle to all judicial Tribunals, whether Colonial or Imperial, on the ground that, according to the modern practice, such Tribunals must be entirely independent of the Executive Government, which could have no influence nor power over their decisions.

That he alleged that if the views of such a Tribunal should be at variance with, and if its decision should consequently derogate from, the Treaty rights of France, Her Majesty's Government could not set aside such decisions when they had been delivered, and would consequently be unable to fulfil their Treaty obligations.

That he argued, therefore, that in proposing to assign the execution of the decisions of the Arbitration Commission to either a Colonial or Imperial judiciary, Her Majesty's Government were surrendering their freedom of action and their power of carrying out their international obligations into the hands of a power over which they have no control; and that he stated that it was impossible for the Government of the French Republic to regard such an arrangement as a satisfactory discharge of the engagement entered into by Great Britain towards France under Article II of the Arbitration Agreement above quoted.

That M. Waddington had pressed the above doctrine with great earnestness upon your Lordship, while the French Foreign Minister had made similar representations to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris (see Lord Lytton's No. 192, Confidential, of the 4th June), and that it appeared likely to prove a serious impediment to the further progress of the arbitration.

That it appeared, however, to your Lordship, that the views put forward by the French Government had no warrant in international law, and were, moreover, inconsistent with the preliminary declaration of M. Waddington (with which your Lordship found yourself quite in accord), that France had a right to look to Her Majesty's Government, and to them alone, for the satisfaction of her Treaty rights on the Newfoundland shore.

That your Lordship conceived that the one and only right which France had acquired under the Arbitration Agreement was a substantial and honest execution and performance on the part of the Imperial Government of the awards and decisions of the Commission.

That to that engagement Great Britain was, in any circumstances, and under any Government, effectively bound in international obligation to France, and that the latter Power had the fullest right to require from her a due performance of her pledge.

That in a note signed at the same time as the Agreement, your Lordship stated that "Her Britannic Majesty's Government reserves expressly the approval of the British Parliament before the above-mentioned Agreement is put into execution."

Contention of H. M.'s Govt. that France has no right to dictate to Great Britain as to the modus operandi for carrying out her engagements.

That that approval had been given by both Houses of Parliament, and that your Lordship had given the French Government full assurances and explanations on that point in your note to M. Waddington of the 1st instant; but that France, having received those assurances, had no right, as it appeared to your Lordship, to investigate the municipal arrangements by which Great Britain proposed to secure the performance of her international duty, nor to dictate to Great Britain the particular modus operandi which she must select for the carrying out of her engagements.

That the Arbitration Agreement contained no stipulation whatever with regard to methods or processes to be employed by either Government to ensure the execution of its provisions, and that the inference from that fact, as from the general principles of international law, would equally seem to be that each party was to be left entirely unfettered to choose such means as, in its judgment, were most suitable and effective for the purpose, while the other party retained the right of remonstrance or resistance if those means should, in practice, be found to be inefficacious or illusory.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to add that, so far as the Foreign Office was aware, Her Majesty's Government had made no admission either in the various Treaties and Agreements entered into with respect to Newfoundland prior to the Agreement under consideration, and still binding as between Great Britain and France, or in the diplomatic correspondence which had passed between the two Powers, which could be appealed to as modifying in this particular case those general considerations of international law which governed, as between nations, the discharge of their respective Treaty obligations.

That in case, however, of our wishing to consult the principal documents from which the obligations of Great Britain in the matter under consideration were derived, Sir Thomas Sanderson was more particularly to refer us to the following:—

Article XIII of the Treaty of Utrecht, 1713;

Article V of the Treaty of Paris, 1763;

Articles IV and V of the Treaty of Versailles, 1783, together with the Declarations attached thereto (see Hertslet's "Commercial Treaties," vol. i, pp. 237-245); and to—

Article XIII of the Treaty of Paris, 1814 (see Hertslet's "Treaties," vol. i, p. 253).

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the views indicated above as those which your Lordship was disposed to take upon the French contention were sound in international law, as applied to the particular circumstances of the case; or whether we considered that they might advantageously be modified or developed. That in the latter event your Lordship would be obliged for any suggestions or additions, either in the form of a Memorandum or otherwise, as was most convenient to ourselves, with which we might be good enough to favour you.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the views expressed by your Lordship, as stated in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter to us of the 13th June, and in your Lordship's letter to M Waddington of the 1st June, and that to Lord Lytton of the 10th June, are entirely sound in international law as applied to the case before us; and we do not feel it necessary to make any suggestion thereon or addition thereto.

We have, &c.

Memorandum by the Lord Chancellor.—(Received June 20.)

Entirely agrees with the L. O. Report.

I HAVE read and entirely agree with the Report of the Law Officers herein. The matter is of the greatest importance as a precedent. It would introduce topics of perpetual disagreement among Powers, the internal constitutions of which varied, and unless the broad proposition is adhered to, that one Power has simply the right to call upon the other Power to fulfil its Treaty engagements, I do not know where the assumed right of dictation or even remonstrance would end.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received July 22.)

My Lord,

Conditions under which British ships carry pilgrims between Tunis and the Hedjaz.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir James Fergusson's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers shown in the accompanying list relative to the conditions under which British ships were permitted to carry pilgrims between Tunis and the Mohammedan Holy Places in the Hedjaz. That those conditions were set forth in a Circular to foreign Consuls, copy of which was inclosed in Mr. Consul Drummond Hay's despatch No. 6, Commercial, of the 9th May.

Bearing of F. O. letter of 24th June respecting pilgrims from Algeria.

That, for certain general considerations in regard to the pilgrim traffic, Sir James Fergusson was to refer us to his other letter of the 24th June respecting the carriage of pilgrims from Algeria.

Convention which regulates British commerce.

That the treatment to be accorded to British commerce and navigation in Tunis was regulated by the Convention of the 19th July, 1875, between the Governments of Great Britain and Tunis, a copy of which was inclosed.

Differences between English and French pilgrim vessels.

That the British vessels that carried pilgrims from Tunis were stated to be usually large vessels proceeding to the East, which, on the outward voyage, owing to the lack of bulky outward freights from the United Kingdom, called at many Mediterranean ports for passengers and cargo.

That the French vessels that carried pilgrims were stated to be, on the contrary, small ships chartered ad hoc, which proceeded direct from Tunis to the Hedjaz.

Nature of Circular to Foreign Consuls. Is it opposed to Treaty?

That the question arose whether the prohibition (contained in the above-mentioned Circular) to carry pilgrims otherwise than direct to their destination was an infraction of the provisions of the aforesaid Treaty with Tunis. That the only Articles of the Treaty which seemed to have any bearing on the matter were the VIIIth, IXth, and XXXVth. That Article VIII provided that British ships should be free to carry on the coasting trade in Tunis; that it would, therefore, seem that it would not be competent to the Tunisian authorities to prohibit a British ship from taking pilgrims on board at one Tunisian port and then stopping at another Tunisian port either to take more pilgrims on board, or to perform any other operation of commerce or navigation. But that if it were not competent to the Tunisian authorities to prohibit a British ship from taking pilgrims on board at one Tunisian port unless on the condition that the ship should not stop at any other Tunisian port, all the less would it seem to be competent to those authorities, in the absence of any Treaty stipulation permitting such an extraordinary interference with the ship's freedom of navigation, to impose any condition as to the foreign ports at which the ship might, or might not, call; and that, in support of that view, it might also be noted that Article XXXV provided that a British ship arriving in any Tunisian port might not be made to change its destination.

French monopoly practically created.

That it must also be considered whether the different circumstances under which British and French ships respectively competed for the carriage of pilgrims constituted a practical monopoly in favour of French ships, and thus infringed Article IX of the Treaty, which provided against monopolies. That, in that connection, it might be observed that, although from the point of view of international law, Tunis was not an integral part of the dominions of the French Republic, but merely under French protection, yet there could be no doubt that French influence was paramount in the administration of Tunisian affairs, and that the desire to protect the interests of French ship-owners might have prompted the regulation now under consideration. That that was the more probable, as in Algeria the pilgrim traffic had, in so many words, been reserved to the French flag. That that question formed the subject of Sir James Fergusson's other letter of the 24th June.

Treaty, in cases of doubt, to be construed favourably to British subjects.

That it was to be observed that Article XLI of the Treaty stipulated that if any doubt should arise with regard to the interpretation or the application thereof, the interpretation most favourable to British subjects should be given to it in Tunis.

Is obligation to carry pilgrims direct to destination opposed to Treaty?

That Sir James Fergusson was to request us to favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the obligation to carry the pilgrims direct to their destination constituted an infraction of the above-mentioned, or of any other, Articles of the Treaty between Great Britain and Tunis against which Her Majesty's Government would be justified in protesting, and also with any observations which we might be good enough to offer on the case generally.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Circular is opposed to Treaty, and excludes British vessels from traffic.

That, in our opinion, the Circular is an infraction of the privileges to which British ships are entitled under the Convention of 1875. That Convention is, in case of doubt, to be read in Tunis in the sense most favourable to British subjects. The Tunisian Government is entitled to make regulations as to the carrying of disinfecting apparatus and of competent doctors by ships entering or leaving Tunisian ports and carrying pilgrims, but the requirement that pilgrims shall be carried direct has the effect of excluding British vessels from the trade, and is, in our opinion, a violation of Articles VIII and XXXV of the Convention.

Article IX has no application.

We are of opinion that Article IX has no application to this matter.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, July 20, 1891.

Right of British ships to carry pilgrims between Algeria and the Hedjaz.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir James Fergusson's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers shown on the accompanying list relative to the right of British ships to carry pilgrims between the ports of Algeria and the Mahommedan holy places in the Hedjaz.

That it was presumed that the pilgrim traffic did not differ in nature from any other form of passenger traffic, and that it was to be observed that neither the pilgrim nor the ordinary passenger traffic were specifically mentioned in the Treaties of Commerce and Navigation made by Great Britain with foreign Powers.

That it would seem that the right to ship and carry passengers for hire had been looked upon as an essential part of the rights and privileges of navigation just as much as the right to ship and carry cargo. That, indeed, the passenger traffic had always been one of the principal sources of profit in navigation, and that the shipping of passengers had always been one of the main objects for which ships were chartered, and for which they called at various ports.

Circular of Gov.-Gen. of Algeria.

That the question which formed the subject of the present reference arose on a Circular issued by the Governor-General of Algeria, a translation of which was inclosed in the letter of the 8th May from Lloyd's.

Seems to confine traffic to French shipping.

That the Circular announced that the Mussulmans of Algeria would be permitted to make the pilgrimage, provided they went and returned in French ships, which were bound to carry out certain sanitary provisions. That although the Circular was somewhat loosely worded, and might perhaps be taken as placing restrictions on the Mahommedans of Algeria rather than as imposing a disability on foreign ships, yet the inquiry contained in the latter part of the document, namely, whether the ship-owners to whom it was addressed would be disposed to carry pilgrims on the conditions specified, appeared to show that the real import of the Circular was a prohibition to foreign ships to participate in the pilgrim traffic, and appeared, therefore, to involve a difference of treatment between French and foreign ships in that particular.

Is it a question of "commerce" or "navigation"?

That for the purpose of determining the Treaty rights of Great Britain with regard to the present question, it was, in the first place, necessary to consider whether it was more properly to be classed under the heading of "commerce," or under that of "navigation."

That it was suggested, with regard to that distinction, that commerce, within the meaning of Commercial Treaties, was essentially the act of exchanging one thing for another for gain or convenience; that questions might therefore arise in connection with the pilgrim traffic which would be properly matters of commerce; and that, amongst others, the following might be cited as examples of acts of commerce, namely, questions connected with the fare or the form of contract for carrying the pilgrims, and dues levied thereon, the booking or selling of the passage tickets.

That, on the other hand, it was suggested that navigation, within the meaning of Treaties of Navigation, was the act of passing a ship from one port to another for gain or convenience; that it would therefore seem that the treatment to be accorded to a ship, or the conditions to be required of a ship, desiring to pass from an Algerian port to the Hedjaz with pilgrim passengers for gain was essentially a matter of navigation, and that, if that were admitted, no matters which could be classed as matters of commerce were raised by the question now under consideration.

Question of sanitary precautions.

That great latitude must, no doubt, be permitted in the interpretation of Treaties where matters of public health were involved; but that it would appear that, although a foreign ship, unlike a French ship, would cease to be under French jurisdiction when beyond French territorial waters, yet that all necessary sanitary precautions could be secured by requiring the fulfilment on board the foreign ship of certain conditions on departure from, or arrival at, a French port by provisions similar, for instance, to those of "The Indian Native Passenger Ships Act, 1887," sections 31 and 38.

That doubtless other analogous provisions might be cited from Imperial Acts regulating the carriage of emigrants and other passengers.

That the Acts did not, however, prohibit foreign ships from engaging in the carriage of any particular class of passengers.

Treaties regulating British shipping in Algeria.

That the treatment to be accorded to British ships in Algeria was regulated by the Convention of the 28th February, 1882, between Great Britain and France (of which a copy was inclosed), and by that of the 26th January, 1826, the Articles of which, as well as those of the Treaties with other Powers, would be found in the accompanying Return of the various national treatment clauses in Navigation Treaties, either at present or lately in force between Great Britain and foreign Powers.

That national treatment in regard to the passenger traffic was not, as had been stated, specifically mentioned in British Treaties of Commerce and Navigation.

Forms by which national treatment is secured in Treaties.

That there were two principal forms of Article in which national treatment in regard to navigation seemed to be secured.

That a typical example of the one form was Article I of the Treaty of 1862 with Belgium which, as regarded the matters now under consideration, was as follows:—" . . . . the subjects of each of them (the High Contracting Parties) shall throughout the whole extent of the territories and possessions of the other, enjoy the same rights, privileges. liberties, favours, immunities, and exemptions in matters of commerce and navigation, which are or may be enjoyed by native subjects."

That such an Article would certainly seem to preclude the withholding from British ships of the privilege or liberty to ship and carry pilgrims or other passengers from Belgian ports, or to be engaged in any other act of navigation if such privilege or liberty were granted to Belgian ships.

That similar Articles occurred in the Treaties with Colombia (1866), Ecuador (1880), Greece (1886), Italy (1883), Nicaragua (1860), Russia (1859), and others.

That a typical example of the other principal form was Article VII of the Convention with France of 1882, which, as regarded the matters now under consideration, was as follows:—" British ships . . . . shall . . . . in Algeria . . . . be treated in every respect as national ships."

That similar clauses occurred in the Treaties with Austria-Hungary (1868), Germany (1865), Paraguay (1884), Roumania (1880), Uruguay (1885), and others.

That it was to be observed that the two forms of Article did not ever occur in one and the same Treaty; and that, seeing that the importance to Great Britain of securing in all maritime countries national treatment in matters of navigation, including the right to carry passengers, must constantly have been present to the British negotiators of those Treaties, it would seem that the two forms of Article were certainly intended to be, and probably were, in those matters of identic import, and that Article VII of the Treaty with France did secure entire equality of treatment in all matters of navigation, including the passenger traffic.

Does Circular infringe Article VII of Treaty of 1882? If so, may H. M.'s Govt. protest?

That Sir James Fergusson had, therefore, the honour to request us to favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the above-mentioned Circular issued by the Governor-General of Algeria involved an infraction of Article VII of the Treaty of 1882, against which Her Majesty's Government should protest, and whether they would be justified, in view of the terms of that Article, or of any other provision of the Treaties above referred to between Great Britain and France, in demanding that British ships should be permitted to carry pilgrims on the same conditions as French ships.

That Sir James Fergusson had also the honour to request us to favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to offer on the case generally.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Circular opposed to Articles VII and VIII. H. M.'s Govt. should protest. Regulations which France is entitled to make.

That in our opinion the Circular involves an infraction of Articles VII and VIII of the Treaty of 1882 against which Her Majesty's Government should protest; and Her Majesty's Government would be clearly justified by those Articles in demanding that British ships should be permitted to carry pilgrims on the same conditions as French ships. France is entitled to make Regulations as to the carrying of disinfectors, and of competent doctors, upon ships leaving or entering Algerian ports with pilgrims, but these Regulations must apply equally under the Treaty to French and British vessels.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, August 1, 1891.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir James Fergusson's letter of the 31st July, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers shown in the accompanying list, relative to the proper construction to be placed on certain parts of section 3 of "The Mail Ships Act, 1891."

That we should perceive from the note from the French Embassy that the specific point on which M. Waddington was desirous of receiving your Lordship's assurance was whether his Government were warranted in interpreting sub-section (2) of section 3 of the Act as meaning that the obligation to furnish pecuniary security was only contemplated in default of satisfactory personal security being forthcoming.

That Sir J. Fergusson was accordingly to request that we would be good enough to take the question into our early consideration, and to report whether, in our opinion, your Lordship would be justified in assuring M. Waddington that his interpretation of the section in question was warranted by its words.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

"Mail Ships Act, 1891." Construction to be placed on certain parts of section 3.

That we are of opinion that under the terms of paragraph (a) of sub-section (2) of section 3 of "The Mail Ships Act, 1891," there must be given, in addition to the bond of the ship-owner and the personal security of the surety, such substantial security as the Court considers adequate.

We think the word "real" in paragraph (a) means substantial, as, for instance, the mortgage of a ship or other property.

It is clear that it does not, of necessity, mean the deposit of money or securities, because such deposit is, by paragraph (b), made an alternative method of providing security in substitution of that provided by paragraph (a).

[Section 3 of "Mail Ships Act, 1891."]

Regulation as to giving of security for ships engaged in postal service.

3.—(1.) Where the owner of any ships, British or foreign, applies to the High Court in England, and

(a.) Produces a certificate of a Secretary of State that such owner is subsidized for the execution of any postal service within the meaning of a Convention with a foreign State to which this Act applies, by reason of receiving from the foreign State, or from the Government of the United Kingdom or of a British possession, a bonâ fide subsidy for the postal service mentioned in the certificate, and

(b.) Produces sufficient evidence of the nature of the said service, and the number of, and the prescribed particulars respecting the ships engaged therein, and

(c.) Gives notice of the application to the Board of Trade,

The High Court, after hearing the owner, and the Board of Trade, if they wish to be heard, shall fix the nature and amount of the security which the owner ought to place under the control of the Court for the purposes of this Act as respects the ships engaged in that postal service, and fix the maximum number and tonnage of the ships to which the security is to apply.

(2.) The security shall be the bond of the owner guaranteed either—

(a.) By the personal security of a surety, accompanied by an adequate real security given by the surety; or,

(b.) By the payment or transfer into Court of cash, or of securities of the Government of the United Kingdom.

(3.) If the owner gives such security to the satisfaction of the High Court, then so long as the security is maintained and is sufficient to the satisfaction of the Court, and the number and tonnage of the ships for the time being actually engaged in carrying mails for the postal service in respect of which the security is given does not exceed the number and tonnage of the ships to which the security applies, the ships actually engaged in carrying mails for the said service shall be deemed to be exempted mail-ships, and be entitled to the exemptions and privileges given by this Act to exempted mail-ships; and the Board of Trade shall give the prescribed notices for informing the arresting authorities that the ships actually engaged in carying the mails for the said postal service are exempted mail-ships.

(4.) Notice of every application respecting any security given in pursuance of this section shall be given to the Board of Trade.

(5.) If at any time it appears to the Board of Trade that a security given as respects ships engaged in any postal service is from any cause (whether pending claims, variation of the conditions of the service, or otherwise) insufficient, the Board of Trade shall apply to the High Court, and that Court, if satisfied of such insufficiency, shall require the security to be made sufficient to the satisfaction of the Court within a reasonable time, and direct that in default the ships engaged in the postal service shall cease to be exempted mail-ships, and that the Board of Trade shall give the prescribed notices for informing the arresting authorities of such cessor.

(6.) The amount and nature of the security may be varied and the whole security may be withdrawn, and the income of the security may be disposed of, by order of the High Court from time to time on such application either of the ship-owners, or of the Board of Trade, or of any person appearing to be interested, and in such manner, and after such notice, and upon such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by Rules of Court, or, so far as the Rules do not extend, as the Court may think just.

(7.) Provided that before the security is actually withdrawn, the High Court shall be satisfied—

(a.) That the prescribed notice of the order for withdrawal has been given to the arresting authorities; and

(b.) That there is no pending claim for the purposes of which the security may be required;

And upon the prescribed notice of the order for withdrawal being given to an arresting authority, the ships shall, as respects that authority, cease, after the date specified in the notice, to be exempted ships.

(8.) Rules of Court may be made for carrying this section into effect, and in particular for regulating the nature, amount, and value of the security to be given, and the mode of giving security, and of giving notices to the arresting authorities, and for providing for the evidence of the exemption of ships under this section, and for the information to be given from time to time to the High Court respecting the ships to which the security applies, and for the jurisdiction of the High Court under this Act being exercised in Chambers.

Question as to effect, in the event of war, of Article IX of the Postal Convention of 30th August, 1890, between Great Britain and France.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. Villiers Lister's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to a question raised by the Postmaster-General of South Australia as to the effect, in the event of war, of Article IX of the Postal Convention of the 30th August, 1890, between Great Britain and France.

That the communication in which the question was raised would be found inclosed in the letter of the 12th August last from the Post Office.

That your Lordship had caused a draft (which was forwarded to us) of a reply to the Post Office to be prepared in the Foreign Office, and that Sir T. V. Lister was to request that we would take the terms of that draft into our consideration, and would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether (1) they were appropriate to the circumstances of the case; and, if not, (2) in what respects they might be advantageously modified or amended.

Postal Convention of 24th September, 1856, with France. Postal Conventions (with France) of 14th June, 1833; (with U. S. A.), 15th December, 1848.

That Sir T. V. Lister was to add that Article IX of the Convention of 1890 was not new; that it was practically identical in wording with Article XI of the Postal Convention of the 24th September, 1856, with France; and that similar Articles were also contained in the Postal Conventions of the 14th June, 1833, with France and of the 15th December, 1848, with the United States.

That it was believed that no special instructions were ever issued to Her Majesty's naval officers with regard to those Articles, but that inquiry was being made of the Admiralty upon that point.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Approve draft to P. O., and suggestion as to Article IX.

That, in our opinion, the draft submitted to us is appropriate to the circumstances of the case; but it appears to us that it might be well to point out, as stated in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 30th October, that the provisions of Article IX of the Convention are practically identical with those which have been inserted in the Postal Conventions of 1833, 1848, and 1856.

Sir, Foreign Office, November , 1891.

I AM directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to state to you, for the information of Her Majesty's Postmaster-General, that his Lordship has had under consideration, in consultation with the Law Officers of the Crown, the telegram inclosed in your letter of the 12th August, from the Postmaster-General of South Australia, inquiring what would be the effect of Article X of the Postal Convention between Great Britain and France of the 30th August, 1890. It is assumed, however, from the general purport of the inquiry, that the Article intended to be referred to is Article IX and not Article X.

Lord Salisbury is advised that the point raised in the telegram in question will be settled by the general law of nations and by the provisions of the Declarations of Paris of 1856; and that although the packets referred to in Article IX of the Convention of 1890, would, in the event of war, continue to be protected to the extent provided in that Article, neither troops nor munitions of war would be free from capture by reason of the stipulations of that Article.

I am to suggest that a reply, in the sense of my present letter, should be sent to the Postmaster-General of South Australia.

It may be added that the provisions of Article IX of the existing Convention are practically identical with those in the Postal Convention of the 24th September, 1856, with France, and that similar Articles were contained in the Postal Conventions of the 14th June, 1833, also with France; and of the 15th December, 1848, with the United States of America.

Renewal of licences to reside abroad to naturalized British subjects. Act of 1844. Mr. H. Meyer's request.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. Villiers Lister's letter of the 1st instant, stating that, with reference to our Report to the Home Department, dated the 5th February, 1890, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the correspondence noted in the accompanying list relative to Mr. Henry Meyer's request for a renewed licence to reside abroad, he having been naturalized in the United Kingdom under the Act of 1844 (7 & 8 Vict., c. 66).

That in accordance with the opinion expressed in our Report above referred to, Regulations were issued by the Foreign Office in March last to the effect that passports unlimited in point of time were thenceforward to be issued to all naturalized British subjects, irrespective of whether their certificates had been granted under the Act of 1844, or under the Act of 1870.

That we should observe that the annexed correspondence in Mr. Meyer's case terminated with a letter addressed by the Foreign Office to Messrs. Dixon and Co. on the 3rd September last, to the effect that it was no longer necessary that Mr. Meyer's licence to reside abroad should be extended.

That that opinion was expressed in accordance with the view contained in the letter dated the 14th August last from the Home Office.

That that Department had, however, taken the matter into further consideration, and now expressed the opinion of the Secretary of State to be that "in order to maintain the validity of a certificate granted since 1858 under the Act of 1844, a renewal of the original licence to reside abroad is still necessary when an original licence has expired; and that an original licence must still be granted when the holder of such a certificate wishes for the first time to take up a residence abroad." (See Home Office letter of the 22nd December, 1890.)

That under those circumstances your Lordship would be glad if we would take the papers submitted with Sir T. V. Lister's letter into our consideration in connection with our Report of the 5th February last, and would favour you with our opinion on the following points:—

L.O. Report of 5th February, 1890.

Queries.

1. Whether the view expressed by Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department in the letter from that Department of the 22nd December last, quoted above, was correct.

2. If so, whether we were still of opinion that passports unlimited in point of duration might properly be issued to all naturalized British subjects, irrespective of whether they had been naturalized under the Act of 1844, or under the Act of 1870; and

3. If our opinion should be in the affirmative on both the above points, whether, in order to remove any difficulty which might arise from the possession of a passport unlimited in point of duration by a naturalized British subject, whose licence to reside abroad had expired, it would, in our opinion, be desirable to introduce a Bill into Parliament for the purpose of conferring upon all aliens now living who had been naturalized in the United Kingdom previous to the Act of 1870, the same rights, privileges, and status as were conferred by that Act upon aliens naturalized thereunder.

That your Lordship would also be glad, at the same time, to be favoured with any further general observations which we might be good enough to offer upon the questions raised by the papers.

We have taken the matter into our consideration and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Replies to queries.

1. That without expressing any definite opinion as to the point raised in the letter from the Home Secretary of the 22nd December last, and as to Mr. Meyer's rights under his original certificate of naturalization, we are clearly of opinion that it is not desirable to issue or renew licences to reside abroad, but that in any case in which the question arises, a certificate should be issued under the last paragraph of section 7 of the Act of 1870.

It is not necessary that a naturalized alien to whom such certificate is granted should have the qualification as to previous residence, or service under the Crown, which would be required if he were a non-naturalized alien applying for a certificate under the Act of 1870, but as to residence or service under the Crown, after the date of such certificate the Secretary of State can impose the same terms as in the case of an original applicant.

2. There is no reason for maintaining the distinction between the two classes of naturalized subjects.

3. We see no occasion for legislation.

We have, &c.

"Newfoundland Copyright Act, 1890." Construction of.

WE have examined "The Newfoundland Copyright Act, 1890," and, being of opinion that its provisions ought to be construed as confined to works first published in Newfoundland, we think that Her Majesty's assent need not be withheld, but that the Act may be permitted to come into operation.

It should, however, be pointed out to the Newfoundland authorities that, if section 5 should be judicially interpreted to include works other than those first printed and published in Newfoundland, the Act would be inconsistent with the Imperial Statutes, and further legislation would be necessary.

8. No person shall be entitled to the benefit of this Act unless he has deposited at the Colonial Secretary's Office two copies of such book, map, chart, musical composition, photograph, print, cut, or engraving; and in case of paintings, drawings, statuary, and sculpture, unless he has furnished a written description of such work of art, and the Colonial Secretary shall cause the copyright of the same to be recorded forthwith in a book to be kept for that purpose in the manner adopted by him, or prescribed by the rules and forms made, from time to time, as herein provided.

Copies shall be deposited in Legislative Library.

9. The Colonial Secretary shall cause one of such two copies of such book, map, chart, musical composition, photograph, print, cut, or engraving, to be deposited in the Legislative Library of this Colony.

Not requisite to deliver any copy of second or subsequent book, unless containing important alterations.

10. It shall not be requisite to deliver any printed copy of the second or any subsequent edition of any book unless the same contains very important alterations or additions.

Insertion of necessary imprint on title-page.

11. No person shall be entitled to the benefit of this Act unless he gives information of the copyright being secured, by causing to be inserted in the several copies of every edition published during the term secured, on the title-page or on the page immediately following, if it is a book, or if it is a map, chart, musical composition, print, cut, engraving, or photograph, by causing to be impressed on the face thereof, or if it is a volume of maps, charts, music, engravings, or photographs, upon the title-page or frontispiece thereof, the following words, that is to say: "Entered according to the Act of the Legislature of Newfoundland, in the year , by , at the Colonial Secretary's Office;" but as regards paintings, drawings, statuary, and sculptures, the signature of the artist shall be deemed a sufficient notice of such proprietorship.

Interim copyright.

12. The author of any literary, scientific, or artistic work, or his legal representatives, may, pending the publication, obtain an interim copyright therefor, by depositing in the Colonial Secretary's Office a copy of the title or designation of such work intended for publication, which title or designation shall be registered in an interim copyright register at the said Department, to secure to such author aforesaid, or his legal representative, the exclusive rights recognized by this Act, previous to publication.

Application for registration; how made.

13. The application for the registration of an interim copyright, a temporary copyright, and of a copyright, may be made in the name of the author or of his legal representatives, by any person purporting to be the agent of such author or legal representatives; and any damage caused by a fraudulent or an erroneous assumption of such authority shall be recoverable in any Court of competent jurisdiction.

14.—(1.) The right of an author of a literary, scientific, or artistic work to obtain a copyright, and the copyright when obtained, shall be assignable in law, either as to the whole interest or any part thereof, by any instrument in writing, made in duplicate, and which shall be registered at the Colonial Secretary's Office on production of both duplicates and the payment of the fee hereinafter mentioned.

(2.) One of the duplicates shall be retained at the Colonial Secretary's Office, and the other shall be returned with a certificate of registration to the party depositing it.

Property of copyright when sold shall be in the vendee.

15. Whenever the author of a literary, scientific, or artistic work or composition which may be the subject of a copyright has executed the same for another person, or has sold the same to another person for due consideration, such author shall not be entitled to obtain or retain the proprietorship of such copyright, which is by the said transaction virtually transferred to the purchaser, and such purchaser may avail himself of such privilege unless a reserve of the privileges is specially made by the author or artist in a deed duly executed.

When certain exclusive rights shall be continued for a further term of fourteen years.

16. If at the expiration of the said term of twenty-eight years the author or any of the authors (when the work has been originally composed or made by more than one person) is still living, or if such author is dead and has left a widow or a child or children living, the same sole and exclusive right and liberty shall be continued to such author or to such authors still living, or, if dead, then to such widow and child or children, as the case may be, for a further term of fourteen years; but in such case within one year after the expiration of such term of twenty-eight years, the title of the work secured shall be a second time registered, and all other regulations herein required to be observed in regard to original copyrights shall be complied with in respect to such renewed copyright.

Renewal of copyright.

17. In all cases of renewal of copyright under this Act, the author or proprietor shall, within two months from the date of renewal, cause notice of such registration thereof to be published once in the "Royal Gazette."

Application to register copyright already registered.

18.—(1.) In case of any person making an application to register as his own the copyright of a literary, scientific, or artistic work already registered in the name of another person, or in case of simultaneous conflicting applications, or of an application made by any other person other than the person entered as proprietor of a registered copyright to cancel the said copyright, the person so applying shall be notified by the Colonial Secretary that the question is one for the decision of a Court of competent jurisdiction, and no further proceedings shall be had or taken by the Colonial Secretary concerning the application until a judgment is produced maintaining, cancelling, or otherwise deciding the matter.

(2.) Such registration, cancellation, or adjustment of the said rights shall then be made by the Colonial Secretary in accordance with such decision.

Publication without consent of author.

19. Every person who, without the consent of the author or lawful proprietor thereof first obtained, prints, or publishes, or causes to be printed or published, any manuscript not previously printed in Newfoundland or elsewhere, shall be liable to the author or proprietor for all damages occasioned by such publication, and the same shall be recoverable in any Court of competent jurisdiction.

Works becoming out of print, complaint may be lodged with Colonial Secretary.

20. If a work copyrighted in Newfoundland becomes out of print, a complaint may be lodged by any person with the Colonial Secretary, who, on the fact being ascertained to his satisfaction, shall notify the owner of the copyright of the complaint and of the fact; and if within a reasonable time no remedy is applied by such owner, the Colonial Secretary may grant a licence to any person to publish a new edition, specifying the number of copies and the royalty to be paid on each to the owner of the copyright.

Fees.

21. The following fees shall be paid to the Colonial Secretary before an application for any of the purposes herein mentioned is received, that is to say:—

	Dol.	c.

(2.) The said fees shall be in full for all services performed under this Act by the Colonial Secretary, or by any person employed by him under this Act.

(3.) No person shall be exempt from the payment of any fee or charge payable in respect of any services performed under this Act for such person, and no fee paid shall be returned to the person who paid it.

Nothing herein contained shall prejudice certain rights.

22. Nothing herein contained shall prejudice the right of any person to represent any scene or object, notwithstanding there may be copyright in some other representations of such scene or object.

Clerical errors may be corrected by the Colonial Secretary.

23. Clerical errors which occur in the framing or copying of any instrument drawn by any officer or employé in or of the Department shall not be construed as invalidating such instrument; but when discovered they may be corrected under the authority of the Colonial Secretary.

Copies or extracts.

24. All copies or extracts, certified from the Colonial Secretary's Office, shall be received in evidence without further proof, and without production of the originals.

The Colonial Secretary may make rules.

25. The Colonial Secretary may, from time to time, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, make such rules and regulations, and prescribe such forms as appear to him necessary and expedient for the purposes of this Act; and such regulations and forms circulated in print for the use of the public shall be deemed to be correct for the purposes of this Act; and all documents executed and accepted by the Colonial Secretary shall be held valid, so far as relates to all official proceedings under this Act.

Persons making false entries in registry books guilty of misdemeanour.

26. Every person who wilfully makes, or causes to be made, any false entry in any of the registry books of the Colonial Secretary hereinbefore mentioned, or who wilfully produces, or causes to be tendered in evidence, any paper which falsely purports to be a copy of an entry in any of the said books, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and shall be punished accordingly.

Persons fraudulently assuming to act as agents of others guilty of misdemeanour.

27. Every person who fraudulently assumes authority to act as agent of the author, or of his legal representative, for the registration of an interim copyright, a temporary copyright, or a copyright, shall be guily of a misdemeanour, and shall be punished accordingly.

Forfeiture for publishing, &c., after copyright is secured.

28. Every person who, after the copyright of any book is secured according to this Act, and during the term or terms of its duration, prints, publishes, or reprints, or republishes, or causes to be so printed or published, any copy or any translation of such book, without the consent of the person lawfully entitled to the copyright thereof, first had and obtained by assignment, or who, knowing the same to be so printed, publishes, sells, or exposes for sale, or causes to be published, sold, or exposed for sale, any copy of such book without such consent, shall forfeit every copy of such book to the person then lawfully entitled to the copyright thereof; and shall forfeit and pay for every such copy which is found in his possession, either being printed or reprinted, published, or exposed for sale contrary to the provisions of this Act, such sum not exceeding 1 dollar, and not less than 10 cents, as the Court may determine, which forfeiture shall be recoverable in any Court of competent jurisdiction, and a moiety of such sum shall go to the Receiver-General for the use of the Colony, and the other moiety shall belong to the lawful owner of such copyright.

Forfeiture for reproducing works of art after registration.

29. Every person who, after the registering of any painting, drawing, statue, or other work of art, and within the term or terms limited by this Act, reproduces in any manner, or causes to be reproduced, made, or sold, in whole or in part, any copy of any such work of art without the consent of the proprietor, shall forfeit the plate or plates on which such reproduction has been made, and every sheet thereof so reproduced, to the proprietor of the copyright thereof; and shall also forfeit for every sheet of such reproduction, published or exposed for sale contrary to this Act, such sum not exceeding 1 dollar nor less than 10 cents, as the Court determines, which forfeiture shall be recoverable in any Court of competent jurisdiction, and a moiety of such sum shall go to the Receiver-General for the use of the Colony, and the other moiety shall belong to the lawful owner of such copyright.

Forfeiture for selling or copying prints, maps, &c., after registration.

30. Every person who, after the registering of any print, cut or engraving, map, chart, musical composition, or photograph, according to the provisions of this Act, and within the term or terms limited by this Act, engraves, etches or works, sells or copies, or causes to be engraved, etched or copied, made or sold, either as a whole or by varying, adding to or diminishing the main design with intent to evade the law, or who prints or reprints, or causes to be so printed or reprinted, any such map, chart, musical composition, print, cut or engraving, or any part thereof, without the consent of the proprietor of the copyright thereof first obtained as aforesaid, or who, knowing the same to be so reprinted or printed without such consent, publishes, sells, or exposes for sale, or in any manner disposes of any such map, chart, musical composition, engraving, cut, photograph, or print, without such consent as aforesaid, shall forfeit the plate or plates on which such map, chart, musical composition, engraving, cut, photograph, or print has been copied, and also every sheet thereof so copied or printed as aforesaid, to the proprietor of the copyright thereof; and shall also forfeit for every sheet of such map, chart, musical composition, print, cut, or engraving found in his possession, printed or published, or exposed for sale contrary to this Act, such sum, not exceeding 1 dollar nor less than 10 cents, as the Court determines, which forfeiture shall be recoverable in any Court of competent jurisdiction, and a moiety of such sum shall go to the Receiver-General for the use of the Colony, and the other moiety shall belong to the lawful owner of such copyright.

Penalty.

31.—(1.) Penalties; how recoverable.

(2.) Every penalty incurred under this section shall be recoverable in any Court of competent jurisdiction, and a moiety thereof shall go to the Receiver-General for the use of the Colony, and the other moiety shall belong to the person who sues for the same.

No action shall be taken after two years.

32. No action or prosecution for the recovery of any penalty under this Act shall be commenced more than two years after the cause of action arises.

Repealing section.

33. The Act passed in the fifty-first year of the reign of Her present Majesty, chapter 20, entitled "An Act respecting Copyright," is hereby repealed.

No. 36.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, March 5, 1891.

Telegraphic communication between India and this country during time of war.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list in connection more particularly with the question, which Her Majesty's Government had now under consideration, of maintaining during time of war telegraphic communication between India and this country.

Convention of 1884 for protection of submarine telegraph cables.

That in the year 1884 a Convention for the protection of submarine telegraph cables was concluded at Paris.

That almost all the Powers of the world, including Great Britain, were parties to that Convention.

That it applied outside territorial waters to all legally established submarine cables landed on the territories, Colonies, or possessions of one or more of the High Contracting Parties (Article I), and that it made it a punishable offence to break or injure a submarine cable wilfully or by culpable negligence, in such manner as might interrupt or obstruct telegraphic communication either wholly or partially (Article II).

That the Tribunals competent to take cognizance of infractions of the Convention were declared to be those of the country or State to which the vessel, on board of which the offence was committed, belonged (Article VIII); and that prosecutions for infractions of the Convention were to be instituted by such State or in its name (Article IX).

That Commanders of vessels of war, if they had reason to believe that an infraction of the measures provided for in the Convention had been committed by a vessel other than a vessel of war, might demand proof of the nationality of the offending vessel, and that, whatever her nationality, they might place the facts on formal record for use before the competent Tribunal (Article X).

That Article XVI of the Convention stipulated that the Convention should remain in force for five years from a date to be agreed upon (which was actually fixed as the 1st May, 1888); that unless any of the High Contracting Parties should have announced, twelve months before the expiration of the said period of five years (which would expire on the 1st May, 1893), its intention to terminate its operation, it should continue in force for a further period of one year, and so on from year to year.

That it was also provided that if one of the Signatory Powers denounced the Convention, such denunciation should have effect only as regarded that Power.

That Article XV said:—

"It is understood that the stipulations of the present Convention do not in any way restrict the freedom of action of belligerents."

That the Act of Parliament (1885) (48 & 49 Vict., cap. 49), which, in so far as English Municipal law was concerned, confirmed and gave statutory effect to the provisions of the International Convention, contained a provision (section 13) that it should come into force on such day as might be fixed by a Notice in that behalf published in the "London Gazette;" and that such Notice duly appeared in the "Gazette" on the 1st May, 1888.

That Sir Philip Currie was to inclose a copy of that Act, to which a translation of the Convention was attached as a Schedule.

That it was enacted under section 3 of the Statute that any one who acted, or attempted to act, in contravention of Article II of the Convention—breaking or injuring of cables so as to interrupt or obstruct communication—should be guilty of a misdemeanour, and on conviction, "(a) if he acted wilfully, shall be liable to penal servitude for a term not exceeding five years, or to imprisonment with or without hard labour for a term not exceeding two years, and to a fine, either in lieu of, or in addition to, such penal servitude or imprisonment;" and

"(b.) If he acted by culpable negligence, shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months, without hard labour, and to a fine not exceeding 100*l*. either in lieu of, or in addition to, such imprisonment."

That section 3, paragraph 5, said: "Any person who within or (being a subject of Her Majesty) without Her Majesty's dominions, in any manner procures, counsels, aids, abets, or is accessory to the commission of any offence under this section, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and shall be liable to be tried and punished for the offence as if he had been guilty as a principal."

That in the case of any offence against the Act committed by a vessel or boat belonging to a vessel, the master—until some other person were shown to have been in charge—would be deemed to have been so in charge, and would be liable to the punishments prescribed by the Act, section 9.

That the Courts to try cases under the Act were the Superior Courts in the United Kingdom (which had jurisdiction to try the case wherever the offence might have occurred), or the Supreme Court in India, or a Court exercising in a British possession the like authority as the High Court of Justice in England (section 6, paragraph 5); and that the Act extended to the whole of Her Majesty's dominions, and to all places within the jurisdiction of the Admiral of England, and to all places where Her Majesty had jurisdiction (section 2).

That finally the Act provided that "if the Convention ceases to be binding on Her Majesty [this Act] shall cease to be of any effect."

That Her Majesty's Government had information that in 1885, when war appeared probable between Great Britain and Russia, arrangements were entered into between the Russian Government and certain persons in this country—not British subjects—to engage vessels for the special purpose of cutting the submarine telegraph cables connecting England with her Colonies and possessions so soon as war should be declared.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the following points:—

1. Whether, if this country became a belligerent without denunciation by Her Majesty of the International Convention, and without any infraction of its provisions by this country, it could be held "to cease to be binding on Her Majesty" within the meaning of the Act (section 13) so as to relieve private individuals from the penalties provided under the Act.

2. If this country were at war, to what punishments or penalties (if any) in respect of injuries done by them to submarine cables, would the following classes of persons be liable, either at common law or under the provisions of any other Act (see section 10 of the Act of 1885):—

(c.) British subjects on foreign, neutral, or other vessels within British territorial waters.

(d.) Neutral foreigners on foreign vessels within British territorial waters.

We have taken the matter into our consideration and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Breaking out of war without denunciation of the Convention would not interfere with Act of 1885.

1. That in our opinion the mere breaking out of war, without any denunciation of the Convention by this country, would not interfere with the operation of the Act of 1885.

In the event of the Convention being denounced

2. In the event of this country being at war, and the Act remaining in force, all four classes of persons mentioned in paragraphs (a), (b), (c), (d), would be subject to, and punishable under the Act. British subjects would also be liable to be punished for treason and, in the event of the Convention being denounced and the Act thereby ceasing to have effect, any persons of any nationality, within the dominions of any persons of any nationality within the dominions of the Queen might be punished under Act 24 & 25 Vict., cap. 97, section 37.*

the Queen (which includes persons on board a vessel sailing under the British flag), might be convicted and punished under the Act 24 & 25 Vict., cap. 97, section 37.*

Extent of privilege attaching to papers laid before Parliament by command of H. M.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir James Fergusson's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the general question of the extent of privilege attaching to papers laid before Parliament by command of Her Majesty.

Salonica Trade Report. Statements respecting "white shirtings" exported from Manchester to Turkey.

That, in the first place, Sir James Fergusson was to invite our attention to the paper marked (A), which was the Annual Trade Report of Her Majesty's Consul-General at Salonica, printed as it was first received at the Foreign Office, and on pp. 5 and 11 of which would be found certain observations and statements respecting goods known as "white shirtings" exported from Manchester to Turkey, and folded in such a manner as to induce incautious persons to purchase them, in the belief that they actually contained 40 and 42 yards of material respectively, whereas upon measurement each sample was found to be short of that quantity by a few yards, viz., 2 yards in the sample marked "Formosa," and 5 yards in that marked "Oriental."

That it had been thought desirable to eliminate certain portions of that Report before publication, and that a comparison of the paper (A) with pp. 4 and 10 of the paper marked (B) would indicate the amendments which had been effected in the Foreign Office with a view to avoid giving unnecessary offence, or the possibility of affording grounds for litigation on the part of the firm, or firms, concerned.

That it was usually the practice of the Foreign Office to communicate Reports which touched on the question of the cotton industry to the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, and that following that principle your Lordship had had prepared a letter to that body, forwarding the paper marked (B), and calling their attention to the observations contained therein on the subject of the short length pieces of cotton goods; that with regard, however, to the specimens which were referred to on p. 11, and which were forwarded to us, the letter stated that they were retained at the Foreign Office.

That it was possible, however, that the Manchester Chamber of Commerce might express a wish either that those samples might be transmitted to them, or that their representative might be permitted to inspect them at the Foreign Office. That, in view of that contingency, your Lordship would be glad to be fortified with our opinion as to whether such a request might properly, under the circumstances, be complied

* "37. Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously cut, break, throw down, destroy, injure, or remove any battery, machinery, wire, cable, post, or other matter or thing whatsoever, being part of, or being used or employed in or about any electric or magnetic telegraph, or in the working thereof, or shall unlawfully and maliciously prevent or obstruct in any manner whatsoever the sending, conveyance, or delivery of any communication by any such telegraph, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years with or without hard labour; provided that if it shall appear to any Justice, on the examination of any person charged with any offence against this section that it is not expedient to the ends of justice that the same should be prosecuted by indictment, the Justice may proceed summarily to hear and determine the same, and the offender shall, on conviction thereof, at the discretion of the Justice, either be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be imprisoned only, or to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour, for any term not exceeding three months, or else shall forfeit and pay such sum of money, not exceeding 10*l.*, as to the Justice shall seem meet.

["38. Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously, by any overt act, attempt to commit any of the offences in the last preceding section mentioned, shall, on conviction thereof before a Justice of the Peace, at the discretion of the Justice, either be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be imprisoned only, or to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour, for any term not exceeding three months, or else shall forfeit and pay such sum of money, not exceeding 10*l.*, as to the Justice shall seem meet."] with, notwithstanding the fact that the trade-mark stamped on the samples would doubtless enable the Chamber of Commerce to identify the firm which it was alleged was addicted to the practices complained of.

That your Lordship would at the same time be glad to be favoured with any observations we might think well to offer on the general question of the extent of privilege attaching to "Command Papers" as distinguished from those which, being ordered by Parliament to be printed, were entitled to absolute privilege under the Act 3 & 4 Vict., cap. 9.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Chamber of Commerce should be allowed to inspect the samples at the F. O.

That we see no objection to the proposed communication to the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, and are of opinion that the representative of that Chamber should be allowed to inspect the samples at the Foreign Office upon a request for such inspection being made by the Chamber.

Command papers have not absolute privilege.

Papers published by command have not the absolute privilege which attaches to those published by direction of the Houses of Parliament, and we think it would be well that Parliamentary authority should be more habitually obtained for the publication of documents which may raise questions of this nature. We do not, however, in the present instance, see any danger of legal proceedings being taken either against the Consul-General, or against publishers of the Consular Report in this country.

Bill to alter Extradition Act, 1870, so as to permit prisoner to be surrendered before he has completed term of detention.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 12th May last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to a Bill which it was proposed to introduce into Parliament for the purpose of amending section 3 (4) and section 11 of the Extradition Act of 1870.

That in December of last year the Belgian Minister at this Court inquired whether an extradition prisoner might, at his own request, be surrendered before the expiration of the period of fifteen days, mentioned in Article II of the Anglo-Belgian Treaty of the 21st June, 1876, and in section 3 (4) of "The Extradition Act, 1870," which was in the following words:—

"Section 3 (4). A fugitive criminal shall not be surrendered until the expiration of fifteen days from the date of his being committed to prison to await his surrender."

That a correspondence thereupon ensued between the Foreign Office and the Home Office, in the course of which it was pointed out that an opinion which was given on the subject in 1888 by the present Law Officers of the Crown was in direct conflict with the view previously expressed in 1885 by Her Majesty's then Law Officers; but that, although the proper interpretation to be given to the Statute might thus be considered to be doubtful, it was very desirable in practice that a prisoner, who had expressed a desire to that effect, might under certain circumstances be surrendered without remaining in custody in this country during the whole of the said period of fifteen days after committal.

That the Belgian Minister was therefore informed, on the 16th February last, that in practice the law had hitherto been administered in the sense most favourable to the prisoner, who had accordingly been surrendered before the expiration of the period of fifteen days whenever he had expressed a wish to that effect; and that, in the absence of any legal decision in a contrary sense, Her Majesty's Government were prepared for the present to continue that practice.

That the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury were also requested, on the same day, to instruct the Parliamentary Counsel to prepare a Bill for the amendment of "The Extradition Act, 1870" in the sense indicated above.

That after some consultation between the Foreign, Home, and Colonial Departments, the Bill had been drafted in two alternative forms, and was referred for the opinion of the Home and Colonial Offices on the 1st May.

That the latter Department had no observations to offer thereon, but that the former expressed Mr. Secretary Matthews' opinion that the shorter form of the Bill was preferable, on Parliamentary grounds.

Opinion requested as to—

That Sir T. V. Lister was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the following points:—

Expediency of Bill. Which form of Bill is preferable? Are any alterations necessary?

1. Whether the proposed legislation was expedient.
2. If so, which of the two forms of draft Bill was, in our opinion, to be preferred; and
3. Whether the draft Bill which we preferred would require any alteration, or whether it might properly be introduced in its then shape?

That Sir T. V. Lister was also to request that we would favour your Lordship with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

I have taken the papers into my consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

No objection to Bill, subject to proper precautions.

That so far as the matter depends upon legal considerations, I see no objection to a Bill legalizing or permitting the surrender of a fugitive criminal before the expiration of the period of fifteen days, subject to proper safeguards for the protection of such criminal and for the prevention of any abuse of the procedure of his being deprived of the time without clear and distinct evidence that he consents and desires to be surrendered before its expiration.

Form of Bill preferred.

I prefer the first form of draft Bill.

I have, &c.
(Signed) RICHARD E. WEBSTER.

I have also taken the matter into consideration and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Reason why Bill is inexpedient.

That in my opinion the proposed alteration of the law is not expedient.

The delay of fifteen days is not a stipulation in favour of the accused only. It allows a period, after the examination of the evidence, during which the Secretary of State has the opportunity of considering whether the claim of extradition is one which should properly be granted. This delay is no hardship to any one, and, if it could be dispensed with upon some undefined evidence of the consent to his surrender given by a foreigner unfamiliar with our laws, there would, in my opinion, be serious danger of some incident occurring which might excite popular feeling and produce international difficulties.

If the accused person be innocent he will, in most cases, desire, and he ought to have ample time, to be advised as to questions which he may raise before the English Courts upon application for habeas corpus.

If he be guilty the mere detention for fifteen days is quite unimportant.

Shorter Bill, if any, preferable.

I do not think any legislation of this kind expedient; but if legislation were decided upon I should prefer the shorter form of Bill.

Section 3 (subsection 1) of the alternative form is absolutely novel, and appears to me quite inadmissible.

I have, &c.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, October 23, 1891.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge, by direction of the Marquis of Salisbury, the receipt of your letter of the 5th instant, approving, with the addition of certain amendments, the draft Order in Council which was transmitted to you by this Department on the 20th August last, making certain further Regulations with regard to the marriages of British subjects outside the United Kingdom in accordance with "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1891." I am, however, to state that there are still certain points of importance with regard to which some doubt exists as to the exact construction of the Order in Council, and the Act of Parliament upon which it is based, and with reference to which his Lordship desires further to consult you before that Order is submitted to the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

After the passing of "The Marriage Act, 1890," no steps were taken for the issue of an Order in Council regulating the fee or fees to be charged for the registration of lex loci marriages, both because the word "fee" was not mentioned in that Act, and also because it was not considered to be clear whether the powers conferred by section 18 of the Act 6 Geo. IV, cap. 87 (commonly known as "The Consular Act, 1825"), made it lawful for Her Majesty by Order in Council "to establish and authorize the payment of any new or additional fees or fee for or in respect of" such registration.

The question arises as to whether the difficulty, if it actually existed, has been removed by the provisions of "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1891."

Section 4 (1) of that Act provides that, "subject to the marriage regulations, a British Consular officer, on being satisfied by personal attendance that a marriage between parties being British subjects, or of whom one is a British subject, has been duly solemnized in a foreign country in accordance with the local law of the country, and on payment of the fee required by law, may register the marriage in accordance with the marriage regulations as having been so solemnized;" and section 5, sub-section (d), provides that the marriage regulations may "make such provisions as may seem necessary or proper for carrying into effect the Foreign Marriage Acts, or any marriage regulations" made thereunder.

The provisions of section 10 of "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1891," include "the charge of such fees as may be prescribed by the marriage regulations; but the marriage regulations in the immediate contemplation of that section are only such as dispense with the requirements of the Foreign Marriage Acts as to residence and notice." It would, therefore, appear impossible under this section to frame a regulation dealing with the fee payable on the registration of a lex loci marriage.

"The Consular Salaries and Fees Act, 1891," provides (section 2, sub-section 1) that "it shall be lawful for Her Majesty the Queen, by Order in Council, to fix the fees to be taken in respect of any matter or thing done by a Consular officer in the execution of his office, to vary such fees by way of increase or decrease, and to abolish fees, and to create new fees."

In sections 5 and 9 of the draft Order in Council, the terms of which have recently been approved by yourselves, there is no mention of the fee to be charged in respect of the registration of lex loci marriages.

Section 9 (2) says "the Consular officer shall register such a marriage in a book provided for the purpose and in accordance with sections 11 and 12 of 'The Consular Marriage Act, 1849,'" &c. But sections 11 and 12 of "The Consular Marriage Act, 1849," do not authorize the levying of fees; although section 10 of that Act declares what fee a Consul is to charge for marriages solemnized under that Act.

The questions, therefore, remain for decision: (1) whether any, and, if so, what fee is required by law in respect of the registration of a lex loci marriage, and (2) by what existing law (if any) the imposition of such fee is required, and can be justified; and (3) further, whether (should it be considered that there is not only no special statutory provision enabling fees to be charged for the registration of lex loci marriages, but also no general power in the Foreign Marriage Acts wide enough to include their imposition) fees can under those Acts be imposed by Order in Council.

If the decision on this point should be in the negative, the further question arises, (4) whether a fee can be imposed by Order in Council under section 2, sub-section 1, of "The Consular Salaries and Fees Act, 1891" (54 & 55 Vict., cap. 36).

Should the power of levying, by Order in Council, a fee for the registration of lex loci marriages be vested in Her Majesty under some or any one of the enactments above mentioned, it is presumed that a special provision with regard to the levy of such fee, and to its amount, should be inserted in the Order in Council now about to be issued.

The second matter upon which the Secretary of State seeks your advice is whether he can, in virtue of section 7 (2) of "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1891," and of section 8 of the draft Order in Council thereunder, declare not only a Consular chapel, but also any church or chapel which is entirely unconnected with the Consulate, but is within the place where a Consular officer resides, to be a "place," within the meaning of the Foreign Marriage Acts, where marriages may be solemnized under those Acts.

It is believed that it was not intended to confer any such power as is last mentioned on the Secretary of State, nor is it desired by his Lordship that he should possess it, but some doubt has been expressed as to whether, having regard to the actual wording of the draft Order in Council as it now stands, it may not technically have been conferred upon him.

The third matter with respect to which Lord Salisbury desires your opinion is whether, under the wording of the draft Order in Council, section 3 (a), and section 9 (1), it is open to the Secretary of State, if he should think fit, to authorize a marriage officer, either generally or in a particular case, to solemnize marriages, or to attend at the solemnization of lex loci marriages, beyond the place at which he is appointed to reside, if the parties to the intended marriage are ready to pay all necessary expenses.

It is presumed that the word "required" means "required by the parties," and is not applicable to the orders of the Secretary of State, should such orders be otherwise in accordance with his powers under the Acts.

I am also to call your attention to certain verbal additions and corrections which appear to be necessary for the purpose either of elucidating certain passages in the draft Order in Council, or of removing discrepancies now existing between the definition clauses of the draft and of the Act of Parliament respectively. These additions and corrections are indicated in blue ink upon the copy of the draft Order in Council sent herewith.

I am at the same time to inclose, for convenience of reference, copies of "The Consular Marriage Act, 1849," "The Consular Marriage Act, 1868," "The Marriage Act, 1890," and "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1891," as well as "The Consular Salaries and Fees Act, 1891," together with a copy of the Foreign Marriages Order in Council, 1890.

Lord Salisbury requests that you will take all these matters into your consideration, and will, at your earliest convenience, favour his Lordship with your opinion on the various points raised, and with any further observations of a general character which you may desire to offer.

I am, &c.
(Signed) T. V. LISTER.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands signified to us in Sir T. Villiers Lister's letter of the 23rd October last, we have the honour to

Report—

1. That, in our opinion, there is no fee now required by law in respect of the registration of a lex loci marriage, and there is no statutory provision in the Foreign Marriage Acts authorizing the imposition by Order in Council of such fees; but a fee can be imposed by Order in Council under section 2 (1) of "The Consular Salaries and Fees Act, 1891," and the fee so imposed will be the fee required by law under section 4 (1) of "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1891."

2. The Secretary of State cannot, in virtue of section 7 (2) of "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1891," and of clause 8 of the draft Order in Council, declare any church or chapel entirely unconnected with the Consulate to be a place where marriages may be solemnized under the Foreign Marriage Act.

It would, however, be wise to omit from clause 8 of the draft Order the words from "and such other" to "the said Acts" inclusive.

3. A marriage officer cannot be required by the Secretary of State, or the parties, to attend the solemnization of a marriage beyond the place at which he is appointed to reside.

We think clause 1 of the draft Order in Council should read as we have altered it, and that the words, "unless he obtains permission from the Secretary of State," should be struck out from clauses 5 and 6, and that no other words should be inserted in their stead.

We have, &c.

Foreign Marriage Act, 1891.

Draft Order in Council.

WHEREAS by "The Marriage Act, 1890," and "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1891," the Consular Marriage Acts are amended, and as amended are made applicable to marriages in the houses of British Ambassadors or Ministers residing within the country to the Government of which they are accredited, or before Governors, High Commissioners, Residents, Commanders of ships, or Consular or other officers authorized in that behalf without or within Her Majesty's dominions, and by the same Acts Her Majesty the Queen is authorized by Order in Council to make Regulations for the purposes therein specified; 53 & 54 Vict., cap. 47; 54 & 55 Vict., cap. 74; 12 & 13 Vict., cap. 68; 31 & 32 Vict., cap. 61.

And whereas by "The Consular Salaries and Fees Act, 1891," Her Majesty the Queen is authorized by Order in Council to fix the fees to be taken in respect of any matter or thing done by a Consular officer in the execution of his office: 54 & 55 Vict., cap. 36.

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers conferred by the said Acts, or otherwise enabling her in this behalf, is pleased, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered as follows:—

1. The Foreign Marriages Order in Council, 1890, is hereby repealed, subject to any exceptions and qualifications in this Order mentioned.

Embassy Marriages.

2. The person before and by whom a marriage under the Foreign Marriage Acts may be solemnized and registered in an Embassy House in a foreign country shall either be the Ambassador, or the officer for the time being performing the duties of the Ambassador, or be any of the Secretaries attached to the Embassy from time to time appointed for the purpose in writing by the Ambassador, or by the officer performing his duties; and for the purpose of marriages solemnized in such Embassy House the Foreign Marriage Act shall be construed as if such Ambassador, officer performing his duties, or Secretary, although holding no written authority from a Secretary of State under section 19 of "The Consular Marriage Act, 1849," were a duly authorized Consul within the meaning of the said Acts. Officer by whom Embassy marriage may be solemnized and registered. 12 & 13 Vict., cap. 68.

3. For the purpose of marriages solemnized in pursuance of section 2 of "The Marriage Act, 1890," the house in which a British Ambassador resides in the foreign country to the Government of which he is accredited, or which is occupied by him in that country for the purposes of his Embassy, shall be deemed to be the house of such Ambassador, and is in this Order referred to as the Embassy House, and every place within the precincts or curtilage of any such house, and any church or chapel annexed What is Embassy House.

to such house, or for the time being used with the consent of the Government to which the Ambassador is accredited as the chapel thereof, shall be deemed to form part of the Embassy House.

Application to Embassy of expressions referring to Consular marriages.

4. For the purpose of marriages in an Embassy House in a foreign country in pursuance of section 2 of "The Marriage Act, 1890," expressions in the Consular Marriage Acts shall be construed as follows:—

(a.) Expressions referring to the district of a Consul, or the district of a Consulate, shall be construed to refer to such parts of the foreign country as a Secretary of State may by writing under his hand from time to time direct, or, where there is no such direction, as are within 10 miles measured in a straight line on the horizontal plane from the Embassy House;

(b.) The expression "Consulate" shall be construed to refer to the Embassy or to the Embassy House, as the case requires;

(c.) The expression "office of the Consulate" shall be construed to refer to such part of the Embassy House as the Ambassador may from time to time appoint as being sufficiently accessible to the public, and that part may be referred to as the office of the Embassy;

(d.) The expression "Consular seal" shall be construed to refer to the official seal of the Ambassador.

Embassy and Consular Marriages.

Restriction on marriages in Embassy where Consulate is available.

5. Where a marriage can be solemnized at a British Consulate in a foreign country, the leave of the Ambassador shall be obtained before the marriage is solemnized in the Embassy House in that country.

Restrictions on marriages where local law is sufficient.

6.—(1.) Where a marriage according to the local law of a foreign country is valid by English law, then before a marriage is solemnized in that country under the Foreign Marriage Acts, whether in an Embassy House or at a Consulate, the officer by or before whom the marriage is to be solemnized and registered must be satisfied either—

(a.) That both the parties are British subjects; or

(b.) If only one of the parties is a British subject, that the other is not a subject or citizen of the country; or

(c.) If one of the parties is a British subject and the other a subject or citizen of the country, that sufficient facilities do not exist for the solemnization of the marriage in the foreign country in accordance with the law of that country.

(2.) If a Consul, by reason of anything in this Article, refuses to solemnize or allow to be solemnized in his presence the marriage of any person requiring such marriage to be solemnized, that person shall have the right of appeal to a Secretary of State, given by section 7 of "The Consular Marriage Act, 1849."

Restriction on marriages when intended wife is a British subject.

7. In the case of any marriage under the Foreign Marriage Acts, if it appears to the officer by or before whom the marriage is to be solemnized and registered that the woman about to be married is a British subject, and that the man is an alien, he must be satisfied that the marriage will be recognized by the law of the foreign country to which the alien belongs.

Modification of requirements of Foreign Marriage Acts as to residence and notice.

8. The following modifications of the requirements of the Foreign Marriage Acts as to residence and notice, which appear to Her Majesty to be consistent with the observance of due precautions against the solemnization of clandestine marriages, shall have effect in the following class of cases, that is to say, where one only of the parties has dwelt within the district of the Ambassador or Consul:—

(1.) A marriage may be solemnized under the said Acts in the Embassy House or Consulate of an Ambassador or Consul in whose district one of the parties has dwelt—

(a.) If the officer by or before whom the marriage is solemnized and registered is satisfied that such notice as is mentioned below in Sub-Articles 3 and 4 of this Article, has been given of the intended marriage in the place where the other party has dwelt; or

(b.) If a Secretary of State is satisfied that such adequate notice has been given as will prevent the marriage being clandestine, and gives permission for the same to be solemnized.

(2.) In either case the oath, affirmation, or declaration under section 3 of "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1891," shall, in addition to the matters specified in subsections (a) and (c) of that section, state that one of the parties has, for three weeks immediately preceding, had his usual place of abode within the district of the Ambassador or Consul, and further state the place where the party who has not dwelt within that district has within three months immediately preceding had for three consecutive weeks his usual place of abode, and the notice which has been given in that place during those three weeks.

54 & 55 Vict. cap. 74.

(3.) The notice to be given where the marriage is not solemnized with the permission of a Secretary of State shall, if the party has dwelt in a foreign country, be given, entered, and suspended in the manner and during the period provided by the Foreign Marriage Acts, in like manner as if the marriage were to be solemnized in a Consulate in that country, and the Consul shall, on payment of the proper fee, give a certificate that the notice has been so given and suspended, and that he is unaware of any impediment which should obstruct the solemnization of the marriage.

See 12 & 13 Vict., cap. 68, secs. 4, 7.

See 19 & 20 Vict., cap. 119, secs. 7, 8.

(4.) If the party dwells in a place in the United Kingdom, the notice shall be given in the like manner, and on payment of the like fee, as if that party were about to be married in that place, and, in England or Ireland, shall be given to the Superintendent Registrar or Registrar, and, in Scotland, shall be given by proclamation of banns; and the Superintendent Registrar or Registrar shall deal with the notice and give a certificate for marriage in like manner and on payment of the like fee, as in the case of a marriage in his district; and the Session Clerk of the parish in which the banns were proclaimed in Scotland shall, in like manner and on payment of the like fee as in the case of a marriage in his district, give a certificate of proclamation of such banns.

Consular Marriages.

What is Consulate.

9. For the purpose of marriages at a Consulate under the Foreign Marriage Acts, every place within the curtilage or precincts of the house in which the Consul is for the time being resident or of the building which is for the time being used for the purpose of his office shall be part of the Consulate, and every place to which the public have ordinary access in the Consulate shall be deemed to be part of the office of such Consulate.

Registration of Marriages by Foreign Law.

Registration of marriages by local foreign law.

10.—(1.) A Consular officer shall not be required to attend at the solemnization of a marriage solemnized in accordance with the local law unless the marriage is solemnized at the place where he is appointed to reside nor unless the proper fee has been previously paid to him.

(2.) The Consular officer shall forthwith after the solemnization of the marriage register the marriage in duplicate in books furnished to him by the Registrar-General through a Secretary of State for the purpose, separate from any register books provided for marriages solemnized by him, and shall register the same in accordance with section 11 of "The Consular Marriage Act, 1849," save that if the person by whom the marriage has been solemnized declines to sign the same, the Consular officer shall enter the name of that person, and the fact that he declines to sign the same.

(3.) The Consular officer shall transmit copies and the certificate and the book when filled, in manner provided by section 12 of "The Consular Marriage Act, 1849."

(4.) Nothing in this Order shall authorize any officer who is not a Consular officer to register a marriage solemnized in accordance with the local law.

(5.) The expression "Consular officer" includes a Consul-General, Consul, Vice-Consul, Pro-Consul, Consular Agent, and any person for the time being authorized to discharge the duties of Consul-General, Consul, Vice-Consul, or Consular Agent.

High Commissioners, &c.

Adaptation of Acts to marriages before High Commissioners, Residents, &c.

11.—(1.) A Secretary of State by a written authority under section 19 of "The Consular Marriage Act, 1849," may authorize a person to act in the place of a High Commissioner or Resident mentioned in "The Marriage Act, 1890," outside of Her Majesty's dominions.

(2.) If a Secretary of State gives such authority or in pursuance of section 3 of "The Marriage Act, 1890," authorizes any High Commissioner, Resident, or other officer outside Her Majesty's dominions, not being a Consul as defined by this Order to solemnize and register marriages, then for the purpose of marriages solemnized and registered by or before any High Commissioner, Resident, or officer, or person so authorized, expressions in the Consular Marriage Acts shall be construed as follows:—

(a.) Expressions referring to the district of a Consul or of a Consulate shall be construed to refer to the district for which such High Commissioner, Resident, or officer, or person, is authorized to act for the purpose of the Foreign Marriage Acts;

(b.) The expression "Consulate" shall be construed to refer either to the office held by him, or as the case requires, to the building or part of a building or place specified in the document by which he is authorized to act;

(c.) The expression "office of the Consulate" shall be construed to refer to such portion of the building, part, or place so specified as is ordinarily accessible to the public;

(d.) The expression "Consular seal" shall be construed to refer to his official seal, or if he has no official seal, to any seal ordinarily used by him, if the latter seal is authenticated by his signature with the addition of his official name or description.

Her Majesty's Ships.

Adaptation of Foreign Marriage Acts to marriages on board one of Her Majesty's ships.

12.—(1.) Marriages under the Foreign Marriage Acts on board one of Her Majesty's vessels may be solemnized by or before a commanding officer of such rank and of such vessel as is for the time being authorized for that purpose by or in pursuance of any Admiralty instructions, and for the purpose of any such marriages the Consular Marriage Acts shall be construed as if a commanding officer so authorized, although not having a written authority under section 19 of "The Consular Marriage Act, 1849," were a duly authorized Consul within the meaning of the Consular Marriage Acts, and for the purpose[s] of such marriages, expressions in those Acts shall be construed as follows:—

(a.) Expressions referring to the district of a Consul or of a Consulate shall be construed to refer to such parts of the foreign station to which the commanding officer is attached as may be specified in that behalf by Admiralty instructions;

(b.) Expressions referring to the Consulate shall be construed to refer either to the office of the said commanding officer or to his vessel, as the case may require;

(c.) Expressions referring to the office of the Consulate shall be construed to refer to the part of the ship on which public notices are affixed.

(2.) Expressions referring to the Consular seal shall refer to the seal ordinarily used by the commanding officer if the latter seal is authenticated by his signature with the addition of his official description.

(3.) The commanding officer, before he solemnizes a marriage, shall be satisfied that at the port or place where the marriage is solemnized sufficient facilities do not exist for the solemnization of the marriage on land, either in accordance with the local law of the country or in accordance with the Foreign Marriage Acts.

(4.) The requirements of the Foreign Marriage Acts as to residence and notice shall be modified as follows, namely, not less than three weeks' notice of the intended marriage must have been given in such public manner, or to such relatives or friends of the parties, as satisfies the commanding officer that as much notice of the intended marriage has been given as would be given if the marriage took place in England, and that the marriage is not clandestine.

Forms.

13. The forms in the First Schedule to this Order, or forms to the like effect, shall be used in all cases to which they are applicable.

Fees.

14. The fees which may be taken in respect of matters under the Foreign Marriage Acts shall be those set forth in the Second Schedule to this Order, and no others.

No. 40.

Royal Courts of Justice, December 16, 1891.

My Lord,

Municipal rates levied on certain Embassy and Legation Houses in London.

That it would be seen that the foreign Representatives in London called attention to the subject in a collective note dated the 7th June, 1890, and that it was thought desirable that, before arriving at a decision in the matter, Her Majesty's Government should be in possession of complete information as to the immunities and exemptions enjoyed in that respect by Her Majesty's Representatives abroad. That a Circular was accordingly addressed to Her Majesty's Representatives on the 30th June, 1890, requesting them to furnish full information as to the diplomatic privileges enjoyed by them with regard to the incidence of taxes and rates.

That as soon as all the Reports were received from abroad, and their contents examined, your Lordship, after communication with the Treasury, addressed a note to the French Ambassador suggesting as a solution of the difficulty that, "whenever the Representative of a foreign country at the British Court shows that he pays rates on his house, Her Majesty's Government will accept a similar charge at the capital of the country which he represents."

Proposal of H. M.'s Govt. rejected by M. Waddington and his colleagues.

That M. Waddington replied, on behalf of himself and his colleagues, in a note dated the 18th August last, in which he rejected the proposal of Her Majesty's Government as being unacceptable in principle, and impracticable in its mode of application: and that Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the draft reply which your Lordship proposed to send to M. Waddington, and the Memorandum inclosed therein, were right and proper under the circumstances.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Approve draft reply to M. Waddington and Memorandum.

That, in our opinion, the draft reply and Memorandum are right and proper under the circumstances.

We have, &c.

Draft of Letter from the Marquis of Salisbury to M. Waddington.

M. l'Ambassadeur,

Foreign Office, December , 1891.

HER Majesty's Government have given their careful attention to the note which your Excellency did me the honour to address to me on the 18th August last with regard to the municipal rates now levied on certain Embassy and Legation Houses in this capital under the provisions of special Acts of Parliament which enable the parish authorities to collect them from the landlords.

The question put in the previous note of the 7th June, 1890, signed by your Excellency and certain of your colleagues, was whether the privilege of exterritoriality did not involve the principle that the ground on which a house occupied by a foreign Diplomatist is situated should, during that occupation, be considered as foreign territory, and the house itself as unoccupied, and whether, in consequence, such houses should not be exempt from parochial rates.

The answer to this question must, I apprehend, be in the negative. It is a generally recognized principle of international law that house property ("immeubles") belonging to foreign Diplomatists is liable to taxation. The principle, or, as the text-writers call it, the "fiction," of exterritoriality is applied more specially to the official residence of the Representative of a foreign State, but even in that case it is liable to great restrictions. Such a doctrine as that suggested by your Excellency has never, so far as I am aware, been asserted by any of the principal writers on international law, and, although one or two writers have spoken in rather hesitating language, the general opinion laid down by the best authorities who have treated the subject is that the houses of foreign Missions are properly subject to municipal rates.

Upon this point, as your Excellency has referred in your note to Wheaton, I may invite your attention to an extract from that eminent publicist's "Elements of International Law":—*

"The person and personal effects of the Minister are not liable to taxation. He is exempt from the payment of duties on the importation of articles for his own personal use and that of his family. But this latter exemption is at present, by the usage of most nations, limited to a fixed sum, during the continuance of the Mission. He is liable to the payment of tolls and postages. The hotel in which he resides, though exempt from the quartering of troops, is subject to taxation in common with the other real property of the country, whether it belongs to him or to his Government."

Your Excellency will find in the inclosure to this note extracts from various other authorities to the same effect.

Such being the state of the case according to the text-writers on international law, Her Majesty's Government endeavoured to ascertain whether, according to the practice existing in foreign countries, the immunity of foreign Mission Houses from municipal rates was so generally recognized as to constitute a standard for their own action.

Upon inquiry it appeared that there is, on the contrary, great diversity of practice. In eight countries, including Spain and Denmark, the rates on Her Majesty's Legations appear to be recovered through the landlord in the manner of which you and your colleagues complain. At Athens, where a foreign Legation House is hired, it is the landlord who pays the house tax as well as the water rates; at Munich, foreign Representatives enjoy no privileges in respect of land, house, or trade tax, or the corresponding local taxation; at Brussels, the proprietor of a house occupied by a Diplomatist is still liable for land tax; at St. Petersburgh, the house of which Her Majesty's Embassy forms part enjoys no exemption from taxation on that account, and it is only by a special arrangement made on condition of reciprocity that such exemption has been accorded to the French and German Embassies.

At Berlin, the British Embassy House is subject to both Imperial and municipal taxation. At Washington, the renting or occupying of a house by a Legation does not relieve the owner from the payment of taxes on it, and the taxes are assessed against the property. At Rome there is no regular provision for exemption of the British Embassy House from municipal imposts, and notice was given some time ago of an intention to expropriate part of the garden for public purposes. Even at Paris certain taxes are levied for water and "balayage" on Her Majesty's Embassy, while the separate houses or apartments occupied by the Secretaries of the Embassy enjoy no exemption from municipal taxation, which is levied on the landlord.

Neither, therefore, on the ground of principle, nor in virtue of any generally accepted rule of practice, can it be said that any diplomatic privilege is infringed by the Acts of Parliament, which, while they recognize the immunity of the Corps Diplomatique from all legal process for the recovery of rates, enable the parish authorities to levy rates from the landlords of houses occupied by them.

It was under these circumstances that I troubled your Excellency with some explanations which appear to have been received with surprise. Her Majesty's Government have no reason to believe, and would be most unwilling to suggest, that there would be difficulty in securing the assent of Parliament to any measure necessary to secure the established privileges and immunities of the Corps Diplomatique. But Her Majesty's Government may be allowed to consider and to represent the difficulty of obtaining from Parliament the repeal of measures which cannot be shown to be contrary to those privileges as laid down in principle, and as exemplified in the practice of many other countries.

But your Excellency argues that the taxes levied by the Municipality in London are far higher in amount than those which are so levied at other capitals, and are devoted in great part to quite different purposes. The proposal which I made, that Her Majesty's Government should render themselves liable for municipal imposts on Her Majesty's Missions in those countries whose Mission Houses are so taxed in England, does not seem to you or to your colleagues to be acceptable, and you urge that it would be more satisfactory that Her Majesty's Government should intervene to pay the rates actually levied upon the foreign Missions here.

Admitting that the rates in this metropolis may differ in kind and amount from those which are levied in many foreign capitals, it must, on the other hand, be remembered that in several of those capitals the houses occupied by Her Majesty's Missions are liable to State as well as to municipal taxation, and that in almost all of them Diplomatists also contribute indirectly to the municipal funds by the octroi levied on various articles which they necessarily buy in the open market for their own consumption.

I need not assure your Excellency of the Queen's desire that any privilege which, by general custom or prescription, is accorded to the Representatives of foreign States, and which is enjoyed by Her Majesty's Representatives in other States, should be reciprocally enjoyed by the Representatives of such States accredited to her.

In the present case, a general custom or prescription can scarcely be said to exist. But I have been in communication with the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, with the view of ascertaining how far it would be possible to meet the wishes expressed in your Excellency's note, and I shall be prepared to discuss the arrangements which they may suggest with your Excellency and with the other foreign Representatives.

I have, &c.

EN aucun cas, l'immunité des impositions directes et indirectes accordée au Ministre ne comprend :—

1. Les charges réelles qui grèvent les immeubles par lui possédés dans le territoire où il réside, telles que les impôts fonciers.

2. Les impositions personnelles qui grèvent l'exercice de certaines industries, étrangères aux fonctions du Ministre, telles que les droits de patente.

3. Les droits de péage et autres que l'on fait payer aux voyageurs pour l'entretien des routes, des ponts et chaussées ou canaux. Quelquefois on en exempte le Ministre par pure courtoisie ou par convenance. Il en est de même des impositions communales, des droits de portes et fenêtres, &c.

Néanmoins il serait difficile d'établir, au sujet de cette immunité internationale, des règles uniformes et d'une application générale.

Extract from "The Law of Nations," by Sir Travers Twiss, 1861. § 203, p. 308.

There are some exceptions to the privilege of extra-territoriality as applied to the hotel of an Ambassador. A foreign Minister is privileged from being called upon to contribute personally to the general taxes of a country, that is, to such taxes as are levied by the Government, and which are available for the general purposes of the State in which the Ambassador is not interested. But a foreign Minister is not exempt from the payment of local dues, which are raised for purposes of local administration, and which are expended on local objects, from which he himself, in common with his neighbours, derives immediate benefit. Thus, he is liable to pay the local rates assessed upon his hotel, or its site, for sewerage, lighting, watching, and similar objects. He is also liable to pay tolls for the use of roads and bridges, and also for the carriage of his letters, if they are conveyed to him by the local post; and as he is at liberty at all times, if he pleases, to send his letters by a privileged courier, it is therefore optional for him to employ the services of the local post, and if he employs it he derives immediate advantage therefrom.

Extract from "Le Guide Diplomatique; Précis de Droits et des Fonctions des Agents Diplomatiques et Consulaires," par le Baron C. de Martens. 4th Edition, 1851. § 32, p. 107.

L'hôtel du Ministre étranger, nécessairement affranchi de tout logement de troupes, ou des charges équivalentes qu'on y a substituées, ne l'est point de l'impôt qui frappe la propriété foncière.

Il n'y a, en effet, aucune raison pour que l'hôtel occupé par un Ambassadeur, si cet hôtel, surtout, appartient à un habitant du pays, soit affranchi de l'impôt qui atteint tous les autres immeubles. Si l'Ambassadeur occupait un hôtel appartenant à son Souverain, il est probable que, par égard pour le Prince, la contribution immobilière ne serait point exigée; une pareille exemption n'étant, bien entendu, qu'une faveur et nullement une conséquence des immunités diplomatiques.

Extract from "Précis du Droit des Gens Moderne de l'Europe," by G. F. de Martens, 1831. § 228, p. 110.

L'hôtel du Ministre est exempt du logement des gens de guerre et des droits qui y sont substitués. Mais, au reste, soit que cet hôtel appartienne en propre à lui ou à sa Cour, soit qu'il possède d'autres biens-fonds, ces possessions sont assujetties à tous les impôts et à toutes les autres charges qui doivent être payées par le propriétaire.

Extract from "Droit des Gens Moderne de l'Europe," par J. L. Klüber, 1828. § 207, p. 327.

Une autre suite de l'exterritorialité des Ministres est la franchise de l'hôtel (l'indépendance ou l'immunité de l'hôtel, jus franchisiæ s. franchitiarum). On entend par là l'indépendance des hôtels d'Ambassade de la souveraineté du pays, à l'exception peut-être des droits de contribution et juridiction foncières.

GERMANY.

No. 41.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received September 2.)

Royal Courts of Justice, August 31, 1891.

My Lord,

Draft Convention extending to German Protectorates the provisions of the Anglo-German Extradition Treaty of 14th May, 1872.

That the Convention had been drafted under the following circumstances:—

Extradition Act, 1870.

That on the 1st April, 1891, a note verbale was received from the German Embassy proposing that an Agreement respecting extradition should be come to between the German Protectorates on one side and the United Kingdom and the British Colonies on the other, and calling attention to section 25 of "The Extradition Act, 1870," as supporting the view that such an arrangement would be consistent with existing English law.

That that note verbale was referred to the Home Office in a letter dated the 3rd April, 1891, in which it was pointed out that the question of extradition arrangements for African Protectorates had hitherto given rise to insuperable difficulties.

L. O. Reports, 3rd March, 1888; 14th March, 1888.

That the Home Office were subsequently, in compliance with their request, supplied with two Law Officers' Reports bearing on the subject, dated respectively the 3rd and 14th March, 1888.

That the opinion of the Home Office was expressed in their letter of the 11th June, 1891, to the effect that, if the Foreign Office were prepared to admit that a German Protectorate was "a dependency and constituent part" of the German Empire, extradition might, without legislation, and by means of a fresh Treaty, take place between German Protectorates on the one hand, and the United Kingdom and British Colonies and foreign possessions on the other; but that as regarded any further extension of the system of extradition, so as to include British Protectorates, Mr. Matthews had nothing to add to what was said in the Home Office letter of the 15th May, 1888.

That your Lordship seeing no objection to the recognition of German Protectorates as dependencies and constituent parts of the German Empire, the draft Convention, submitted for our consideration, was prepared and referred for the concurrence of the Home, Colonial, and India Offices.

That the concurrence of those Departments was expressed in their letters of the 24th January, 2nd July, and 8th July, 1891.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the provisions of the draft Convention with Germany were consistent with English law, and whether the draft in its then shape might properly be submitted, for negotiation, to the Government of Germany.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands have the honour to

Report—

The Convention ought not to be made without further statutory provision.

That the power to enter into the proposed Convention depends upon the question whether a Protectorate is a dependency or constituent part of the foreign State. The only word which can include a Protectorate is dependency, and, in our opinion, it is very doubtful whether the Courts would hold that a Protectorate is a dependency.

It must be remembered that the question will have to be determined by the Courts on application for a habeas corpus by some prisoner whom it is proposed to surrender.

We think the Convention ought not to be made without further Statutory provision.

L. O. Report, 29th June, 1887.

The question of extraditing to and from Protectorates is one of general policy, and, so far as it involves legal considerations, has been fully dealt with in our Reports of the 29th June, 1887, and 3rd and 14th March, 1888.

We have, &c.

HER Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India, and His Majesty the German Emperor, King of Prussia, being desirous to make better provision for the administration of justice and for the repression of crime within the German Protectorates in Africa, have resolved to conclude a Convention for that purpose, and have named as their Plenipotentiaries, that is to say:—

Who, having communicated to each other their Full Powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

The stipulations of the Treaty between Great Britain and Germany, for the extradition of fugitive criminals, signed on the 14th May, 1872, shall be extended so as to include the surrender from the United Kingdom and from the Colonies and foreign possessions of Her Britannic Majesty of those persons who, being accused or convicted of a crime committed within a German Protectorate, shall be found within the territory of Her Britannic Majesty.

ARTICLE II.

Persons who, being accused or convicted of a crime committed within the territory of Her Britannic Majesty, shall be found within a German Protectorate, shall likewise be surrendered.

ARTICLE III.

In the above-mentioned cases the surrender shall take place in the same manner, and subject to the same conditions and exceptions, as are stipulated in the said Treaty of the 14th May, 1872, in regard to the surrender of fugitive criminals from the respective territories of the said High Contracting Parties.

ARTICLE IV.

The present Convention shall come into force ten days after its publication, in conformity with the forms prescribed by the laws of the High Contracting Parties.

It shall have the same force and duration as the Treaty of the 14th May, 1872, to which it relates.

It shall be ratified, and the ratifications exchanged in London as soon as possible.

My Lord,

Case of Captain Zephir, of the German vessel "Carl Linck," charged with having assaulted one Anton Bradtke, a seaman of that vessel.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 14th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the case of Captain Zephir, of the German vessel "Carl Linck," who was charged at Greenwich Police Court with having assaulted one Anton Bradtke, a seaman of that vessel, whilst he was on board his ship within the port of London.

That the detailed facts of the case would be found in the Report submitted to the Home Office by the Magistrate of the Greenwich Police Court.

That it would be seen that, notwithstanding the assurance of the captain to appear after an adjournment solicited not only by himself, but by the German Ambassador at this Court, and by an official from the German Consulate, the captain sailed from London before the adjourned summons came on for hearing, taking with him the complainant, who had been in the meantime arrested as a deserter from his ship.

Proposed draft to Count Hatzfeldt.

That the communications which had already passed between your Lordship and the German Ambassador upon the case were inclosed for reference; and that Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request our opinion whether the draft which your Lordship proposed to address to Count Hatzfeldt, and the Memorandum therein inclosed, were right and proper under the circumstances.

We were also honoured with a note from Sir Thomas Sanderson, dated the 23rd instant, inclosing a further letter from the German Ambassador, and requesting us to take it into our consideration in connection with the papers which were transmitted to us on the 14th November.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

Approve draft letter and Memorandum as altered.

That, in our opinion, the draft letter and Memorandum, as altered and initialled by us, may properly be addressed to Count Hatzfeldt.

Draft of Letter to Count Metternich.

M. le Chargé d'Affaires, Foreign Office, , 1891.

WITH reference to my note to his Excellency Count Hatzfeldt of the 5th ultimo, I have now the honour to transmit to you a copy of a Report by the Police Magistrate at Greenwich, from which you will ~~perceive that the~~ learn the circumstances under which the seaman Anton Bradtke was arrested as a deserter outside of the Police Court, and, further, that the captain of the German vessel "Carl Linck," in direct violation of his undertaking to the Magistrate to appear before him, sailed from London with the seaman Bradtke on board.

It is needless for me, M. le Chargé d'Affaires, to state that, when the request for an adjournment was preferred by his Excellency in his note of the 1st ultimo, and when the similar application made by the captain in Court was supported by a German Consular official, it was assumed that the captain would not violate his solemn undertaking to appear, nor attempt to evade the jurisdiction by flight.

~~I shall be glad if your Excellency would inform me whether the German Consulate can furnish any explanations on this point.~~

I am, however, now in receipt of his Excellency's letter of the 19*th November as to the action taken by the German Consulate in order to induce the captain to perform his undertaking.*

As both the captain of the vessel and the seaman Bradtke are German subjects, and as the vessel "Carl Linck" is of German nationality, I must leave it to the consideration of the German authorities whether the captain's breach of undertaking should be visited by any reproof, or by suitable punishment, such as the suspension of his certificate.

In the meanwhile, I beg leave to inclose the Memorandum to which I alluded in my note of the 5th ultimo as being in course of preparation, and which will, I trust, furnish the Imperial German Government with all necessary information as to the jurisdiction of the Police Magistrate in this case.

R. E. W.
E. C.

Memorandum for communication to Count Hatzfeldt.

THE Police Magistrate at Greenwich is one of the Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrates appointed by Her Majesty, and Her Majesty's Government have no power or control over his proceedings while he is sitting judicially. His decisions, either with respect to the limits of his jurisdiction or upon the merits of cases which are brought before him, are in no respect within the control of the Executive, and can only be reversed by appeal to some superior Judicial Tribunal in the mode and subject to the limitations provided by law. His jurisdiction can only be fettered by his own discretion in the first instance, and by the control of Her Majesty's Judges, exercised by writ of mandamus, &c., ~~if he should exercise that discretion erroneously~~ should he decline to exercise the jurisdiction conferred on him.

The fact that diplomatic correspondence is passing as to the Magistrate's competence to hear and determine any particular case, if the fact were brought before him, would not ~~compel~~ entitle him to deprive the complainant of, or to postpone the application of, any remedy to which he (the Magistrate), in the exercise of his judicial power and discretion, might think the complainant entitled under the law of this country.

The separation of the Judicial from the Executive Administration is in this country so complete that Her Majesty's Government could exercise absolutely no power to procure an adjournment of the case by direct intervention or appeal to the Magistrate. Neither could they exercise any control over the seaman Bradtke, a private individual, who, under the laws of this country, has as free access to the Courts of Justice as any subject of the Queen. This right of free access to the Courts, although it exists in this country apart from any such stipulation, is usually esteemed to be so valuable a privilege that it is not uncommon to expressly stipulate in Treaties of Commerce that the subjects of the one Contracting Power shall, in the dominions of the other, enjoy, in this respect, the same rights and privileges as native subjects. Such provision is, for instance, made in the XVIth Article of the Treaty of the 15th June, 1883, between Great Britain and Italy.

Treaty of 15th June 1883, between Great Britain and Italy.

It is not alleged that this case has come before the Court through the action of any official person whom Her Majesty's Government might have directed authoritatively not to take such action, if it should have seemed to them inconsistent with their international obligations, or inconsistent with the demands of international courtesy towards a friendly Government.

With regard to the general question of the jurisdiction of the local Court, ~~it is no doubt true that questions of wages, breaches of contract, and breaches of discipline on board ship are, by international agreement between many States, settled in such States, to the exclusion of the ordinary local Tribunals, entirely by the Consul of the ship's nationality. This practice does not, however, prevail in England, and~~ it may be useful, as showing the view taken by Her Majesty's Government ~~of the general question now under consideration~~, to quote section 179 of the instructions issued to British Consular officers abroad, which paragraph was as follows:—

"Subject to any such Treaties as aforesaid" (i.e., any Treaties with the foreign country in question having reference to the subject), "the Consul will remember that every country has the right of enforcing its own criminal law and police regulations in its own ports and harbours, and that if any offence against such laws or regulations is committed in such ports or harbours, on board a British ship, the offender is liable to be dealt with accordingly. In such cases the Consul's duty will be confined to seeing that the offender is fairly tried, and that justice is properly administered. . . . ."

In the present case, the captain was charged with an offence against the criminal law of this country, committed while the ship was in dock in the port of London, and the Magistrate had a jurisdiction which he was bound to exercise.

With regard to the due execution of Article IV of the Treaty of 1865 between Great Britain and Prussia respecting the recovery of deserters, it is difficult to see in what way the local Court, by hearing a summons for assault committed within British territory while the ship was within the Court's jurisdiction, could obstruct in the very least the operation of the Article in question. The fact that a master is charged with assault by one of his seamen does not excuse the seaman for deserting his ship; and, as is well shown by the actual issue of the case now in question, the circumstance that the seaman has to appear in Court to substantiate his case can but facilitate his identification and subsequent recovery under the Foreign Deserters Act of 1852, and the Mutual Agreement between Great Britain and Germany of the 5th November, 1879, relative to merchant seamen deserters. The latter Agreement is not, however, cited in Count Hatzfeldt's note of the 1st ultimo, but reference is made to Article IV of the Treaty of the 16th August, 1865, between Great Britain and Prussia, which latter Article merely says that "The Consuls-General . . . . . of each of the Contracting Parties residing in the dominions of the other shall receive from the local authorities such assistance as can by law be given to them for the recovery of deserters from the vessels of their respective countries."

Foreign Deserters Act, 1852.

Neither the letter nor the spirit of the Agreement of 1879, or of Article IV of the Treaty of 1865 is in any way infringed by the action of the Magistrate in giving such assistance to the seaman complainant as he is bound by law to give ~~and it must be assumed that he will give no more and no less.~~

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received November 27.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, November 27, 1891.

Seizure of British steamer "Arctic" by the Russian authorities while sealing in Russian waters.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 23rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the seizure of the British steamer "Arctic" by the Russian authorities while sealing in Russian waters, and her subsequent escape from custody.

That Mr. Fraser, Her Majesty's Minister at Tôkiô, who reported the incident, stated that the "Arctic's" papers had been confiscated, and that the Russian Minister at Tôkiô had demanded her restitution from the Japanese Government if she should arrive in a Japanese port.

That Mr. Fraser reported again, on the 18th instant, that the vessel in question had arrived in Yokohama Bay.

That, in reply to Mr. Fraser's request for instructions, he was informed by telegraph that your Lordship was disposed to think that he should protest against the surrender of the vessel to the Russian Government by the Japanese authorities, and that, if application was made to him for her surrender, he must decline to entertain it.

That, in the meanwhile, search had been made in the Foreign Office for precedents bearing on the case, and that a Memorandum was inclosed giving an account of one incident which had some analogy to it, but the treatment of which was decided by circumstances which were not present in the case of the "Arctic."

That at that stage the correspondence was referred to the Board of Trade for their observations, and more especially for an opinion as to the disabilities which attached to the "Arctic" in consequence of the confiscation of her papers, and the amount of protection which should be afforded her by Her Majesty's Diplomatic and Consular officers.

That to that reference the Board replied that, assuming there was nothing in the recent negotiations with the United States on the Behring's Sea question which would modify the fact stated in the Memorandum that Her Majesty's Government had no Convention with Russia for regulating such fisheries, they concurred in the opinion expressed by your Lordship to Mr. Fraser. That they further suggested, for your Lordship's consideration, that the detention by the Russian authorities of the "Arctic's" papers, and particularly of her certificate, did not deprive the vessel of her privileges as a British ship, and, in support of their view, referred to section 48, and the sections immediately following, of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854" (17 & 18 Vict., cap. 104).

Merchant Shipping Act, 1854.

That the Board of Trade went on to state that, if the detention of the "Arctic's" papers was unlawful, and if she was permitted to leave Japanese waters, she should proceed to the nearest port of registry and obtain a provisional certificate.

That the Board suggested that in that case Her Majesty's Diplomatic and Consular officers should be directed to afford her the protection ordinarily accorded to a British ship.

That subsequently telegrams had been received from Mr. Fraser and Admiral Richards showing that the "Arctic" was brought by Her Majesty's ship "Leander" into Yokohama Harbour, where she remained in the Admiral's possession under seizure as having been found flying the British flag without papers.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the following points:—

1. Whether the action of the British Admiral as set forth in the telegrams of the 20th November was justifiable, and, if so, on what grounds;

2. Whether the views expressed by the Board of Trade in their letter of the 20th November were correct and should be acted on, or whether they should be modified to any extent, having particular regard to the question left undecided in that letter, viz., whether the detention of the vessel's papers by the Russian authorities was, or was not, unlawful; and

3. Whether, under all the circumstances of the case, a Russian vessel of war falling in with the "Arctic" upon the high seas would be justified in seizing her and conveying her within Russian jurisdiction, there to answer for the alleged offence for which she was originally arrested.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to add that your Lordship would be glad to receive a reply to the above questions at as early a date as possible, and also to be favoured with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case, and especially with regard to Mr. Fraser's telegram (No. 15) of the 23rd instant.

We were also honoured with Sir Thomas Sanderson's note of the 24th instant, inclosing a further telegram (No. 16 of the 23rd November) from Her Majesty's Minister at Tôkiô.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion—

Seizure of the "Arctic" by the British Admiral.

1. The British Admiral was not entitled to seize in Japanese waters, and detain at the port of Yokohama, the British schooner "Arctic" for sailing under the British flag whilst her papers were detained by the Russian authorities for alleged illegal fishing in Russian waters.

Detention of her papers.

2. The views of the Board of Trade are correct. The detention of the "Arctic's" papers does not deprive the vessel of her privileges of a British ship, and she should be allowed to leave Japanese waters, and should receive the protection ordinarily accorded to a British ship.

Russian vessel of war not entitled to seize her upon the high seas.

3. A Russian vessel of war falling in with the "Arctic" upon the high seas would not be justified in seizing her, and conveying her within Russian jurisdiction.

Claims of Mr. P. Milmo against the Mexican Govt.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 13th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the claims of Mr. Patrick Milmo, a British subject, against the Mexican Government.

That those claims were submitted to the Mixed Commission, consisting of a British and a Mexican Representative, constituted under Articles I and II of the Preliminary Agreement between Great Britain and Mexico of the 6th August, 1884, for the examination and liquidation of the claims of British subjects against the Government of the Republic.

That the powers of the Commission thus appointed were, as would be seen from the document marked (B), limited to examining the different claims and reporting the result to the Mexican Committee of the Direction of Public Debt; and that any differences of opinion were to be decided by the Mexican Executive.

That the circumstances out of which Mr. Milmo's claim arose, as appeared from the accompanying papers, were briefly as follows:—

That about the year 1858 Mr. Milmo bought half a share of an estate called the "Mesa de Cartujanos," the other half being owned by his father-in-law, General Vidaurri, Governor of the State of Nuevo Leon.

Estate of General Vidaurri seized in 1864 during the Mexican civil war by the Republican troops.

That the property was worked by them in partnership down to the year 1864, when, during the civil war then proceeding in Mexico, the Republican troops invaded the Province of Nuevo Leon and seized the estate of General Vidaurri, who, having joined the French invaders, had been declared a traitor by the Republican Government.

That the seizure of the estate and the incidents that followed formed the ground of Mr. Milmo's claims, which were presented to the Mixed Commission under three heads, viz.:—

Statement of Mr. Milmo's claims.

1. Losses due to the retention of the "Mesa de Cartujanos" estate by the Government, estimated at 279,000 dollars, or about 56,000*l.*

2. Compensation for imprisonment and for embargo laid on his property, estimated at 855,857 dol. 67 c., or about 171,171*l.*

3. Losses arising out of various acts of the Government since the seizure of the estate, estimated at 20,000 dollars, or about 4,000*l.*

That the British and Mexican Commissioners were unable to agree with respect to those presentments, and that Mr. Carden, the British Commissioner, was of opinion that the decisions of the Mexican Commissioner under each heading of the claim were not fair to Mr. Milmo.

That Mr. Carden's opinion, as well as the particular circumstances on which each of the claims was based, would be found in the document marked (C).

That in the case of the first claim (alluded to by Mr. Carden as No. 280), the President of Mexico, to whom the matter was in due course referred, decided to award Mr. Milmo the sum of 16,750 dollars (see Sir F. Denys' despatch No. 41 of the 12th November, 1889, document D).

That the second claim (alluded to by Mr. Carden as No. 244) was totally rejected by the President (see also document D).

That of the amount of the third claim (alluded to by Mr. Carden as No. 281), only 5,800 dollars was allowed by the Mexican Commissioner, while Mr. Carden considered that on account of two items a further sum of 8,367 dollars should be awarded. That it did not appear that the President had pronounced any definite decision on that point.

That in the year 1889 Mr. Milmo, to whom Mr. Carden's opinion had been communicated, made an appeal to the Foreign Office, through Mr. Maclure, M.P., for a reconsideration of his claims; and that Sir S. St. John, Her Majesty's Minister at Mexico, then on leave of absence in England, was instructed to furnish a full Report on the case when he returned to his post.

That the conclusion at which Sir S. St. John had arrived would be found in his despatch No. 8 of the 4th February, 1891, to which were appended the decisions of the President of Mexico in regard to the two first claims.

That it would be seen that, although Sir S. St. John did not specifically deal with the third or least important of the claims, he had fully discussed the two first, and that, after an independent and thorough examination of the documents bearing on the case, he was of opinion that it would be useless to interfere further in the matter.

That, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, and more especially to the Report of Sir S. St. John thereon, your Lordship was disposed to think that it was one which did not call for any further action on the part of Her Majesty's Government, but that, before instructing Sir S. St. John to that effect, your Lordship would be glad to learn whether, after consideration of the papers transmitted with Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter, we concurred in that opinion.

That, in the event of our not agreeing in that view, Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would be so good as to inform your Lordship upon what grounds, and to what extent, we considered that the claim might with advantage be further pressed upon the consideration of the Mexican Government.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That we concur in the opinion that the case is one which does not call for any further action on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

Case does not call for any further action on the part of H. M.'s Govt.

MOROCCO.

No. 45.

Royal Courts of Justice, September 28, 1891.

My Lord,

Grant of Admiralty jurisdiction in Morocco to Supreme Court of Gibraltar.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 14th ultimo, stating that, by direction of your Lordship, he had to transmit to us the accompanying papers respecting the grant of Admiralty jurisdiction in Morocco to the Supreme Court of Gibraltar.

That that question was submitted to us for our consideration before the issue of the Morocco Order in Council, 1889, in consequence of a representation from the Chief Justice of Gibraltar, but no insertion was made in the Order to meet the case.

That the Chief Justice of Gibraltar was, however, still of opinion that the jurisdiction in Admiralty cases possessed by the Supreme Court of Gibraltar should be extended to Morocco.

That by Article 2 (sub-section 1) of the Order in Council the Supreme Court of Gibraltar was vested, in civil and criminal matters, "with all the powers and authority which the Supreme Court has independently of this Order" over British subjects in Morocco, and such jurisdiction "may be exercised by any Judge of that Court at Gibraltar or at any place within the limits of this Order."

That Articles 78, 79, 80, and 81 of the Order specifically extend to Morocco the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Gibraltar in bankruptcy, lunacy, matrimonial causes, and probate.

That "The Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890," abolished the Vice-Admiralty Court of Gibraltar, and transferred its jurisdiction to the Supreme Court of the Colony. That section 12 of the Act gave power to extend by Order in Council the application of the Act to Courts established under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act.

That Morocco, however, differed from other localities in which Courts were established under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act in that it had, by Order in Council founded on Treaty, been brought within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of a Colony, and that being so, it would appear that the application of the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act had added Admiralty jurisdiction to the "powers and authority" of the Supreme Court exercisable within the limits of the Morocco Order in Council. That if that were so, the extension of jurisdiction considered by the Chief Justice of Gibraltar to be necessary had been already effected without the necessity for further legislation. That if not, the proposed extension of jurisdiction could only be effected by an amendment of the Order in Council of 1889.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the inclosed papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion—

1. Whether the extension of the Admiralty jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Gibraltar to Morocco had already taken place.

2. If not, whether, having regard to all the circumstances, and especially to the opinion of the Chief Justice of Gibraltar, frequently expressed as to the practical necessity for extending such jurisdiction to Morocco, it was desirable that a short amending Order in Council to the Morocco Order in Council, 1889, should be passed for that purpose.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was also to request that your Lordship might be favoured with any general observations on the subject which we might wish to offer.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

The Admiralty jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Gibraltar does not extend to Morocco.

That, in our opinion, the Admiralty jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Gibraltar does not extend to Morocco.

No pressing necessity that it should be so extended.

Upon the information before us, we do not see any pressing necessity that this jurisdiction should be so extended, the explanations asked for by Mr. R. S. Wright in his letter of the 1st September, 1889, and the particulars required by the Foreign Office letter of the 29th June, 1891, not having been furnished.

Royal Courts of Justice, December 12, 1891.

My Lord,

Morocco O. in C., 1889. Table of Fees annexed to the Queen's Regulations.

That it would be seen from the papers that your Lordship was at first of opinion that it was not desirable to create any fees not established by the Table of Fees to be taken by the officers of Her Britannic Majesty's Consular Court for Morocco, which was approved on the 17th February last, and that it would therefore be better to omit the Table now under consideration from the Queen's Regulations. But that, in view of the opinions expressed by Sir H. Burford Hancock, Chief Justice of Gibraltar, and by Mr. Consul White, your Lordship was, on further consideration, disposed to think that it might be desirable to allow the Table to remain as an Annex to the Queen's Regulations.

That the Queen's Regulations and Table of Fees leviable thereunder were accordingly referred to the Treasury, and that the Lords Commissioners stated that they had no objection to offer to the Regulations being issued, including the Table of Fees, provided that the Secretary of State was satisfied that it did not clash with the Tables in force under the Consular Fees Order in Council, 1887, and under Article 124 of the Morocco Order, and was framed with due legal authority.

That a Memorandum by the Chief Clerk of the Foreign Office, to which was annexed a comparison in Tabular form of the Special Fees proposed to be inserted in the Queen's Regulations, with fees otherwise leviable, was inclosed.

That, in connection with the question now arising, Sir Thomas Sanderson was to call our attention to our Report of the 15th April, 1887, as to the power of the Minister Resident and Consul-General at Bangkok to levy a fee for the registration of British subjects in Siam, the registration itself being in that case enforceable, not under any special clauses in the Siam Order in Council, but under "Rules and Regulations for the peace, order, and good governance of Her Majesty's subjects being within the dominions of the Kings of Siam," issued by the Minister Resident in virtue of the powers vested in him by Order in Council.

That we had then reported that although, in our opinion, the Regulation, in so far as it made registration compulsory upon British subjects in Siam, was valid and enforceable, it was, in the absence of any special provision to that effect in the Order in Council itself, beyond the powers of the Minister Resident to levy any fee upon such registration by virtue merely of a Regulation of the kind mentioned.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether, under Article 143 of the Morocco Order in Council, the Consul-General had power, with the approval of the Secretary of State, to establish a

Table of Fees, to be levied under the Queen's Regulations, authorized to be made by that Article, or whether any other power existed to enable fees so to be levied by means of the Queen's Regulations under that particular Order in Council.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was, at the same time, to request that your Lordship might be favoured with any special observations which we might wish to offer on the subject.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the Consul-General has not power, under Article 143 of the Morocco Order in Council, 1889, to establish a Table of Fees to be levied under the Queen's Regulations. No other power exists to prescribe Consular fees by Queen's Regulations. Such fees must be imposed by Order in Council, under "The Consular Salaries and Fees Act, 1891," or by Rules sanctioned by the Treasury under Article 124 of the Order in Council of the 28th November, 1889, according to the nature of the duties in respect of which the fees are charged.

PACIFIC ISLANDS.

[Colonial Office.]

No. 47.

[Transmitted by the Colonial Office to the Foreign Office in their letter of August 26, 1891.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Knutsford.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, August 20, 1891.

Execution of certain natives of the New Hebrides by order of Captain Davis for the murder of Mr. Latoor.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bramston's letter of the 9th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit for our consideration:—

1. A Declaration signed at Paris the 26th January, 1888, with the Regulations annexed.

2. Two despatches, dated the 30th August, 1890, and 19th November, 1890, from Rear-Admiral Lord Charles Scott to Sir John Thurston, High Commissioner for the Western Pacific, with the High Commissioner's reply to the latter, dated the 20th December, 1890.

3. A letter from the Admiralty to the Colonial Office, dated the 2nd April, 1891, with inclosures.

4. The Western Pacific Order in Council, 1877.

5. A Report from ourselves, dated the 11th July, 1890.

That it would be seen that two British subjects having been murdered by the natives of an island of the New Hebrides, Captain Davis, of Her Majesty's ship "Royalist," received from the Joint Naval Commission "full authority to finish the case."

That, acting upon that authority, Captain Davis took the measures detailed in his letter to the Admiral of the 12th November, 1890; but that the High Commissioner doubts whether that officer had "any authority or power to hold a quasi-judicial trial of any person he may have made prisoner, or who may have voluntarily surrendered to him, and thereafter to inflict upon such prisoner the death penalty." And that he suggested that, in the absence of such authority or power, Captain Davis, although a naval officer, might, as a British subject, be called upon to answer in the High Commissioner's Court for his action in putting those persons to death.

That the Lords of the Admiralty, on the other hand, considered that Captain Davis, having got unmistakable evidence of the identity and guilt of the murderers, carried out the execution as an act of war, and were of opinion that he was fully justified in the course he pursued.

That it might be taken as a fact that Captain Davis possessed all the authority which it was possible for the Joint Naval Commission to confer, and that the circumstances of the case required that punitive measures should be taken in consequence of the disturbance of peace and good order by the murder of British subjects; and that it seemed clear that if Captain Davis had shelled the island, or had landed a party and come into conflict with the natives, and by so doing had, in either case, killed various unknown and innocent persons, and had destroyed the property of various other unknown and innocent persons, his action would have been fully justified as an act of war.

That he adopted, however, the more humane course of securing and identifying the actual murderers, and, after inquiry and proof of their guilt, executing them.

That it had been suggested that those men, whether they had been captured or had surrendered, should be dealt with as taken prisoners of war in civilized warfare.

That it must, however, be remembered, that the operations of Her Majesty's ships in those cases—although acts of war—were carried out against savage tribes to whom the usages of civilization were unknown, and from whom a captured sailor would inevitably receive most barbarous treatment.

That outrages by natives had to be treated as acts of war, for no other means existed for punishing the perpetrators; that there was no Court before which they could be tried; that there were no such things as native Courts; and that British Civil Courts had no jurisdiction.

That the question raised by the case under consideration seemed really to be whether it was lawful for the Commander of a force engaged in warlike operations, undertaken for the purpose of punishing certain specific acts of violence against British subjects, to limit the operations to the personal punishment of the perpetrators of the acts of violence, instead of inflicting a punishment upon the tribe by the promiscuous and indiscriminate destruction of property, and possibly of human life as well.

That, whether or not Captain Davis had acted strictly within the law, it seemed to your Lordship that, morally, his action was free from blame, as his object was manifestly to restrict as far as possible the scope of the punitive measures which he was called upon to take.

That Mr. Bramston was accordingly to invite us to take the papers into our consideration, and to favour your Lordship with our opinion as to—

1. Whether, under the circumstances, the execution of the natives was lawful as an act of war.

2. If not, whether it was lawful on any other ground, as, for instance, that it was an act done under the authority of the Joint Naval Commission.

3. If not, whether, having regard to Article 5 (6) of the Western Pacific Order in Council of 1877, the jurisdiction of the High Commissioner's Court, as created by Articles 12–17 of that Order, extended to the Island of the New Hebrides in which the occurrence took place.

4. Whether Captain Davis was liable to proceedings in the High Commissioner's Court for his action in the matter; or

5. Whether the circumstance of his being vested with the authority of the Joint

1891

Naval Commission precluded the High Commissioner's Court from entertaining the matter.

That Mr. Bramston was to add that your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with any observations which might occur to us generally upon the subject.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Are of opinion that no proceedings should be taken against Captain Davis.

1 and 2. That we are of opinion that the execution of the natives in question cannot be justified as an act of war, but we are of opinion that, having regard to the circumstances of the case and the authority given to Captain Davis by the Joint Naval Commission to finish the case (see letter from Lord Charles Scott, dated the 29th January, 1891, paragraph 7), his conduct was justifiable as being an act of retaliation and necessary for the punishment of the murderers of Mr. Latoor. At the same time, the case is one of great difficulty, and it would be well if definite instructions could be laid down for the guidance of officers in such circumstances.

3 and 4. Questions 3 and 4 become, in the view we take, of lesser importance, but we are of opinion that Captain Davis could be put on his trial before the High Commissioner's Court under clauses 6, 7, 22, 27, and 28 of the Western Pacific Order in Council, 1877, or he could be tried in England under 24 & 25 Vict., cap. 100.

The fact that Captain Davis was vested with authority from the Joint Naval Commission would not oust the jurisdiction of the High Commissioner's Court, or of the English Court, if he were charged under the Statute 24 & 25 Vict., cap. 100, though it would have a most material bearing upon the merits.

We have only to add that we are of opinion that no proceedings should be taken against Captain Davis.

We have, &c.

PERSIA.

No. 48.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received March 14.)

My Lord,
Royal Courts of Justice, March 12, 1891.

Withdrawal by the Shah of Persia of the Lottery Loan Concession.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 10th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the inclosed Memorial, which had been addressed to your Lordship by the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate, relative to the withdrawal by the Shah of Persia of the Lottery Loan Concession, and the claim against the Persian Government put forward by the Syndicate in respect of such withdrawal.

Law Officers' Report, 5th December, 1889.
Ibid., 28th October, 1890.

That the circumstances under which the Concession was originally granted by the Shah on the 20th July, 1889, and the manner in which it had since been dealt with in this country, as well as the particulars of the memorialists' claim, were so clearly and so fully set forth in the Memorial itself that it appeared unnecessary to recapitulate them, but that Sir Philip Currie was to inclose, for convenience of reference, our previous Reports on the subject, dated respectively the 5th December, 1889, and 28th October, 1890.

Case of Macnee versus the Persian Investment Corporation.

That, as regarded the legality of the Syndicate's operations in this country, to which our Report of the 5th December, 1889, more particularly referred, attention was specially called to the decision of Mr. Justice Chitty, in the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice on the 18th April last, in the case of Macnee versus the Persian Investment Corporation. That the learned Judge then dismissed an application for an injunction to restrain that Company from dealing with this same Concession, on the ground that such dealing was not contrary to the laws of England. (See Law Reports, 44 Chancery Division, p. 306 et seq.)

That the memorialists submitted that they had not only lost the profit on the resale of the Concession to the Persian Investment Corporation, but that their prospects and prestige had gone, and that they had been utterly ruined by the discredit brought upon them by the Shah's action, for which, it had been alleged, they had been in no sense responsible; and that they prayed for the assistance of the Secretary of State in obtaining a settlement of their claim from the Persian Government.

That some correspondence, as noted in the accompanying list, was also inclosed, as to the attitude of Her Majesty's Legation at Tehran in regard to the Concession.

That the notification as to the withdrawal of the Concession was made by a telegram from the Persian Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Persian Minister in London, dated the 5th December, 1889, and that the reason for that step given by the Grand Vizier to Her Majesty's Minister was that the Shah had signed the Concession under a misapprehension, and that he had cancelled it when he found that the conditions were contrary to the religious law of his country.

That, on the 18th June, 1890, a telegram (No. 65) was sent to Sir H. D Wolff to the effect that, in order to put a stop to any dealings with the Concession, it might be desirable that the Shah should instruct his Minister in London to make a public announcement, both here and on the Continent, that it had been cancelled.

That, on the 30th August, 1890, Sir H. Wolff telegraphed that all the Persian Representatives abroad had been ordered to inform their colleagues that the Concession was cancelled; but that, so far as your Lordship was aware, no public announcement of the withdrawal was made in this country previous to the appearance of the paragraph in the "Times" of the 13th September, 1890, mentioned on p. 8 of the Memorial.

That Sir Philip Currie was also to inclose a telegram from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Tehran, dated the 16th ultimo, from which it would be seen that the Syndicate had already brought their claims directly to the notice of the Shah and the Persian Minister for Foreign Affairs; and that the latter had instructed the Persian Minister in London to inform the applicants that no attention would be paid to them unless they were supported by the Secretary of State and by Her Majesty's Legation at Tehran. That Mr. Kennedy also stated that the Persian Minister in London had obtained counsel's opinion to the effect that the Persian Government was not responsible for losses arising out of the withdrawal of the Concession.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the matter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the nature of the reply which should be returned to the memorialists, and with any general observations which we might have to offer in connection with their claim.

We were further honoured with a Memorandum from Sir Philip Currie, dated the 16th ultimo, inclosing a Memorial which had been addressed to your Lordship by the New Oriental Bank Corporation, relative to the withdrawal by the Shah of the Concession above referred to, and stating that the Bank lent to the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate, on the collateral security of the Concession, the sum of 20,000*l.* at 6 per cent., and that the Bank's total claim against the Persian Government, including interest, amounted to 22,000*l.*

That the Memorial covered much the same ground as that of the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate, and that your Lordship would be obliged if we would favour you with our opinion as to the nature of the reply which should be returned to it.

That a despatch which had just been received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Tehran relative to the withdrawal of the Concession and the claims of the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate in connection therewith was also inclosed.

We have also the honour to acknowledge the receipt of a further Memorandum from Sir Philip Currie, dated the 19th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Messrs. Chatteris, Nicholls, and Atkins, with accompanying Memorial, addressed to Her Majesty's Government by the Liquidators of the Persian Investment Corporation, relative to the withdrawal of the Concession above mentioned.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would advise your Lordship as to the reply which should be returned to that Memorial.

That the claim of the Persian Investment Corporation amounted to 45,000*l.*, including a sum of 32,548*l.* paid to the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate on account of the Concession.

That the dates of payment were stated to have been :—

13th December, 1889	20,000
17th December, 1889	9,000
12th February, 1890	3,548
Total	32,548

That of those sums 20,000*l.* was paid by the Persian Investment Corporation in a cheque which was handed by the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate to General Mikayl Khan in part payment of the balance of the purchase-money of 120,000*l.* payable by the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate to General Mikayl Khan as assignee of Buzie de Caerdoel.

That that cheque was paid into Prince Malcom Khan's private account at the Western (Burlington Gardens) Branch of the Bank of England.

That the Concession was withdrawn, as previously stated, by a telegram from the Persian Government to Malcom Khan dated the 5th December, 1889, and that all those payments were, therefore, subsequent to such withdrawal.

That the memorialists further stated that up to July 1890 both Prince Malcom Khan and General Mikayl Khan were continuously pressing and urging the Corporation to commence working the Concession, and to pay the balance of the purchase-money.

We have taken the three Memorials, together with the other papers, into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Persian Government should be pressed to repay to the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate sum of 40,000*l.* paid to General Mikayl Khan.

That, having regard to the character of the Concession, we are of opinion that Her Majesty's Government would not be justified in pressing upon the Persian Government the claim of the Syndicate for payment of the sums they would have received if the Concession had been allowed to stand.

We do not deal with the question of amount, although it is clear that of the sums to be received by the memorialists a considerable proportion would have to be paid by them under their contract of the 18th November, 1889. It is, however, clear that they have parted with the sum of 40,000*l.* paid by them to General Mikayl Khan, the brother of the Persian Minister in London, and stated to be Councillor to that Legation, and that the payment of the second half of that sum would not have been made but for the assurance given by the Persian Minister upon the 20th November, 1889.

We are, therefore, of opinion that Her Majesty's Government should press upon the Persian Government the payment to the memorialists of this sum of 40,000*l.*, and that the memorialists should be informed that to this extent only Her Majesty's Government would be prepared to support their claim.

We note that in an action brought against General Mikayl Khan by the Persian Investment Company, which came before the Queen's Bench Division on the 6th February last, an affidavit was produced by Prince Malcom Khan in support of the claim of privilege for his brother, upon the ground that he was employed in the Persian Legation.

H.M.'s Govt. should not put forward any claim on behalf of the New Oriental Bank Corporation or of the Persian Investment Corporation.

The claims of the New Oriental Bank Corporation and the Persian Investment Corporation are against the Syndicate, and, in the absence of any reason for believing that the Syndicate would fail to repay the money which it borrowed, or received on a consideration which has wholly failed, we think Her Majesty's Government should decline to recognize, or put forward, any claim on behalf of the Bank Corporation or the Liquidators of the Persian Investment Corporation.

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received May 14.)

My Lord,

Royal Courts of Justice, May 12, 1891.

Withdrawal of Persian Lottery Concession.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to inform us that since the receipt of our Report of the 12th March last, respecting the withdrawal of the Persian Lottery Concession, the Persian Minister at this Court had stated verbally that he was authorized by his Government to give, if necessary, a formal undertaking on behalf of the Shah that His Majesty would not claim diplomatic privilege on behalf of Prince Malcom Khan, or his brother General Mikayl Khan, and would further, as their Sovereign, explicitly disavow and discountenance any such claim should it be put forward by those gentlemen themselves in answer to any legal proceedings which might be taken against them in this country in respect of financial transactions in which they were concerned, while the former was the accredited Representative of the Shah at this Court, and the latter was a recognized member of his brother's official suite.

7 Anne, cap. 12.

That Prince Malcom Khan had since been superseded as Persian Minister, and that General Mikayl Khan had ceased to be recognized as a member of the official suite of the Legation, so that it appeared clear that persons now initiating proceedings against them would incur no personal liability under the penal provisions of the Statute of Anne (7 Anne, cap. 12), which was passed further to safeguard the privileges of diplomatic functionaries in this country, and more especially to punish persons offering them indignity while they were actually serving their Sovereign in a diplomatic capacity at this Court.

Law Officers, 24th January, 1854.

But that the immunity from legal process enjoyed by the members of the official suite of a foreign Embassy or Legation was one which was secured to them by the common law of England, independently of Statute (vide Law Officers' opinion of the 24th January, 1854), and that it appeared, moreover, to be a recognized principle of international law that that immunity did not cease from the actual date when the Ambassador or Minister presented his letters of recall, or had been superseded by a successor, but should be continued to him during such "reasonable time" as might elapse between his recall or supersession and his leaving the country. (Vide the Queen's Advocate's Report of the 31st March, 1847, and the various authorities therein cited. viz., Vattel, Liv. IV, Ch. 9, § 125; Marten's Manuel Diplomatique, Ch. 7, § 59, Ch. 2, § 15; Marten's Précis, Liv. VII, Ch. 9.)

That probably, in the present case, it would be considered that a reasonable time had elapsed since the supersession of Malcom Khan and his brother, but that it might still possibly be held that the plea that they possessed diplomatic privilege at the time when the cause of action arose afforded a good answer to such action when subsequently brought.

Case of Persian Investment Company versus Mikayl Khan.

That in that connection, however, Sir Philip Currie was to call our attention to the inclosed report, which had been extracted from the "Times" newspaper for the 9th April, of certain proceedings before the Divisional Court in the case of the Persian Investment Company versus Mikayl Khan.

That it would appear from that report, which was, however, of a somewhat fragmentary description, as though the learned Judges (Mathew and Day, J.J.) were disposed to consider that diplomatic privilege—even if clearly existing at the time when the cause of action arose—afforded no answer to such action when brought if it (the privilege) had ceased to attach before the writ was issued and the action commenced.

That it was, however, doubted whether it would be safe either to assume on the strength of that report that the learned Judges in question did actually intend so to declare the law, or if they did so decide, that the point was so free from doubt as to warrant the decision of an intermediate Court being considered as satisfactorily declaring the law upon the subject.

That in those circumstances, therefore, it still appeared prudent to obtain a formal undertaking of the nature indicated above; and that Sir Philip Currie was accordingly to transmit to us the draft of a note which, if its terms should be approved by us, your Lordship proposed to address to Mirza Mahomed Ali Khan requesting him to furnish such a formal undertaking.

That it appeared to be a well-settled principle of international usage that the privilege of exterritoriality attaching to an Ambassador or Minister, and to the members of his official suite, was not their personal privilege, but that of the State which they represented, and that, consequently, it could only be waived by the Sovereign or Chief of that State.

That the acts in respect of which legal proceedings had been already initiated against Mikayl Khan, and in respect of which other legal proceedings might subsequently be initiated against Malcom Khan, took place, as had already been intimated, at a time when primâ facie a diplomatic character and privilege undoubtedly attached to both of them by reason of their official position at the Persian Legation to this Court, but that it was thought that, if the Shah, as their Sovereign, was prepared to disavow any claims of privilege which might be made on their behalf, the Court, even if otherwise disposed to entertain them, would, on the grounds above mentioned, overrule such claims.

That your Lordship was, however, desirous, before taking any further action, of being fortified with our assent to those views; and that, in the event of our opinion coinciding with them, your Lordship would further wish to be advised as to the most suitable way of putting the decision of His Majesty the Shah, should such a course become necessary, in evidence before the Courts in answer to the claim which had already been set up on behalf of Mikayl Khan, and which would doubtless subsequently be preferred on behalf of Malcom Khan.

That in the event of a formal undertaking to that effect being given and received, and also of its constituting, in our opinion, the basis of a valid answer to the claim of privilege, it was presumed that the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate, whose claim formed the subject of our Report of the 12th March last, might be informed that their proper remedy would appear to lie in bringing an action against Mikayl Khan for the recovery of the 40,000*l.* which they had paid to him, and that it would be unnecessary for Her Majesty's Government to address the Persian Government in the manner recommended by us in our above-mentioned Report, which, on grounds of general policy, Her Majesty's Government would, at the present juncture, be exceedingly averse from doing in the absence of very pressing necessity.

That Sir Philip Currie was to inclose our previous Reports on the subject in case we should wish to refer to them; and that he was also to forward to us, for our information, copies of certain legal opinions which had been obtained by the Persian Minister, and by him communicated privately to the Foreign Office, with reference more particularly to the question of the legal liability of the Persian Government on account of the withdrawal of the Concession.

That it would, however, be seen that those opinions merely affirm the immunity from legal proceedings of His Imperial Majesty the Shah in respect of his sovereign acts—a proposition which had not been disputed by Her Majesty's Government, and that they did not in any way affect the substance of the Reports with which we had been good enough to favour your Lordship on the more general questions raised by the withdrawal of the Concession.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

The waiver by the Shah of diplomatic privilege in respect of Prince Malcom Khan and his brother would remove any bar to legal proceedings in our Courts.

That, in our opinion, the waiver by His Majesty the Shah of diplomatic privilege in respect of Prince Malcom Khan and his brother would remove any bar to proceedings in our Courts, and the plea that they possessed diplomatic privilege at the time when the cause of action arose would be no answer to such proceedings. It would, however, be prudent to obtain a formal undertaking from the Shah that His Majesty will not claim the privilege, and although the production of such an undertaking might not in itself be sufficient, yet, as it rests upon the person claiming such privilege to establish that claim, there will be no difficulty in giving effect to such an undertaking.

Approve draft to Mirza Mahomed Ali Khan asking him to furnish a formal undertaking that diplomatic privilege will not be claimed.

It would also be desirable to obtain directions from the Government of His Majesty the Shah to the Persian Minister here that the latter should assist in establishing the repudiation of Malcom Khan and Mikayl Khan.

We have deleted from the draft note words which appear to confine the undertaking to actions brought by the Persian Investment Corporation, but otherwise we approve the terms of the note.

The Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate should be informed that, pending the legal proceedings in question, Her Majesty's Government cannot undertake any diplomatic intervention on their behalf.

Draft of Letter to Mirza Mahomed Ali Khan.

M. le Ministre, Foreign Office, May , 1891.

ON the occasion of a recent visit to this Office you were good enough to state that you were authorized by your Government to give a formal undertaking, if necessary, on behalf of the Shah, that His Majesty would not claim diplomatic privilege on behalf of Prince Malcom Khan, or his brother, General Mikayl Khan, in the event of legal proceedings being instituted in this country in connection with the withdrawal of the Persian Lottery Loan Concession.

I am informed that such proceedings have been taken, ~~at the instance of the Persian Investment Corporation,~~ and I have the honour to request that you will be good enough to furnish me with an undertaking in the above sense.

Persian Lottery Concession; withdrawal of.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter which had been received from the liquidators of the Persian Investment Corporation on the subject of the withdrawal of the Persian Lottery Concession.

Evidence required by liquidators.

That it would be seen that the liquidators requested that Her Majesty's Government would furnish them with such evidence as might constitute legal proof that—

1. The Concession in question was absolutely forfeited and withdrawn by His Majesty the Shah; and

2. That Prince Malcom Khan had full knowledge of such forfeiture and withdrawal at the time he received the money of their Corporation.

British Minister should not be involved.

That it was, in your Lordship's opinion, inexpedient on grounds of public policy that Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran should, in any way, be personally connected with legal proceedings relative to the matter. Moreover, that any information which Sir H. Drummond Wolff might possess as to the withdrawal of the Concession of the Shah and Malcom Khan's subsequent action would mainly be based upon statements made to him (Sir H. Wolff) in conversation with the Persian Prime Minister, and would therefore probably be inadmissible as evidence in the present proceedings.

Suggests reference to Persian Minister.

That the person who undoubtedly possessed the fullest information on the subject was the present Persian Minister in London, and that the applicants had already been informed that he would, if communicated with, probably be found ready to give evidence concerning the money which Malcom Khan received from their Corporation.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion generally as to what answer should, having regard to the previous communications which had passed upon the subject, be returned to the liquidators' letter of the 17th ultimo.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to

Report—

H. M.'s Govt. should refer liquidators to Persian Minister.

That, in our opinion, the liquidators should be informed, in answer to their letter, that Her Majesty's Government cannot, in the present state of circumstances, give any further information or any evidence upon the question of the Persian Concession, but that Her Majesty's Government has no doubt that the Persian Minister will be able to give the necessary proof of the facts it is desired to establish.

Withdrawal of Persian Lottery Concession.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 30th June last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to forward to us a further Petition which had been received from the New Oriental Bank Corporation on the subject of the withdrawal of the Persian Lottery Concession.

Further Petition from the New Oriental Bank Corporation.

That it would be seen that the petitioners had been advised that they were not in a position to act on the suggestion (the draft embodying which was communicated to us on the 24th June) that they should bring an action against General Mikayl Khan, for the reason that the facts and circumstances which were set forth in the Company's Memorial of the 12th February last were not such as to sustain such proceedings on their part.

That, assuming for the moment that the advice in question was sound, and that the Corporation had no remedy against General Mikayl Khan, your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion as to whether they had not, in any event, a remedy against the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate, to whom they advanced the 20,000*l.* with which to purchase the Lottery Concession, and that your Lordship would also desire, at the same time, to be advised generally as to the nature of the reply which should be returned to the petitioners.

That the original Petition from the Corporation was also inclosed for purposes of reference.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

The Corporation has a legal remedy against the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate.

That, in our opinion, the New Oriental Bank Corporation has, in any event, a remedy against the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate, and has no direct claim against His Majesty the Shah.

We therefore advise that they should be informed that Her Majesty's Government must leave them to their legal remedies against the persons to whom they advanced the money, and cannot undertake to press any claim on their behalf upon His Majesty the Shah.

Position of British Jews travelling in the Russian dominions.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 17th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Sir Julian Goldsmid, M.P., respecting the position of British Jews travelling in the Russian dominions.

That Sir Julian Goldsmid forwarded a copy of a pamphlet entitled "The Persecution of the Jews in Russia," which contained a summary of the special and restrictive laws in force in the Russian Empire concerning Russian Jews, and that he inquired whether, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, the Russian Government was entitled, according to international law, the comity of nations, and the provisions of the Treaty between Great Britain and Russia, to impose any or all of those restrictions on British Jews.

That Sir J. Goldsmid stated that he had heard on good authority that the United States' Minister at St. Petersburgh having refused to allow that any such restrictive measures could apply to his countrymen of the Jewish faith, special arrangements had been made with him on the subject.

That Sir Philip Currie was to inform us that that point was referred, by telegraph, to Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh, who, in his reply, stated that the Report in question was entirely without foundation.

Expulsion from Russia in 1881 of Mr. L. Lewisohn, a naturalized British subject of the Hebrew persuasion.

That Sir Philip Currie was also to invite our attention to the Reports of the Law Officers of the Crown of the 30th June and 5th November, 1881, in relation to the expulsion from Russia of Mr. Leon Lewisohn, a naturalized British subject of the Jewish persuasion, as well as to the correspondence which was presented to Parliament in the same year on that subject (see Russia Nos. 3 and 4 of 1881).

That at p. 21 of the latter Blue Book (Russia No. 4), we should find the instructions which, on receipt of the Law Officers' Report of the 5th November, 1881, above referred to, were sent to Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh, which were to the following effect: that the position of the Jews in Russia had formed the subject of a complaint from certain British subjects of that religion at Warsaw in 1862, and that Her Majesty's Government had come to the conclusion that they would not be justified in claiming exemption for British Jews in Russia from disabilities to which their Russian co-religionists were liable by law; and that Her Majesty's Government felt that they could not then insist upon a construction of the Treaty at variance with that which was placed upon it in 1861.

That an extract from the Treaty between this country and Russia of the 12th January, 1859, containing the Articles referred to in the correspondence, would be found at p. 29 of the Blue Book No. 4 (1881).

That the subject was now once more attracting considerable public attention, and that, in those circumstances, your Lordship would be obliged if we would take the papers above referred to into our consideration, and would be good enough to inform you whether we saw any reason to alter or modify in any way the opinion expressed by the Law Officers in 1881 respecting the rights of British Jews in Russia, and to favour your Lordship with any general observations which we might have to offer on the subject.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Approve the interpretation placed upon Treaty of 1859 by Law Officers in 1862 and 1881 upon the hypothesis that the disabilities to which British and Russian Jews are subjected are substantially the same.

That we are of opinion that the interpretation placed upon the provisions of the Treaty of 1859 in the Report of the Law Officers dated the 6th May, 1862, was the correct one; and we concur in the opinion expressed by our predecessors in November 1881 that it is not open to Her Majesty's Government now to insist upon a construction of the Treaty at variance with that Report.

We desire to add that the Reports of the Law Officers above referred to, and our concurrence therein, proceed upon the hypothesis that the disabilities to which British and Russian Jews are subjected are substantially the same.

Difficulties with regard to solemnization of marriages in Russia.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Fergusson's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to certain difficulties which have presented themselves with regard to the solemnization of marriages at Her Majesty's Embassy at St. Petersburgh, and also in certain chapels attached to the English Episcopal Church in Russia.

That Sir James Fergusson was to state that the Anglican Churches at St. Petersburgh, Cronstadt, Moscow, Riga, and Archangel were considered by the Russian Government to be under the direct protection and jurisdiction of Her Majesty's Embassy at St. Petersburgh, and in the enjoyment of complete extra-territorial rights and privileges, and consequently to be entirely exempt from the application of the lex loci.

That it was understood that the Russian law did not recognize any kind of civil marriage, but that, on the other hand, every marriage celebrated in Russia by a minister belonging to a recognized community of the Christian faith between persons of that persuasion was held to be valid by the lex loci, and would consequently be recognized as valid in this country by our own Courts.

That if, however, the view that the various chapels above mentioned were, for the purposes of marriage, completely extra-territorial, were correct, then all questions of the applicability of the lex loci would apparently be eliminated, and the legality or otherwise of any marriages performed therein between British subjects would seem to be wholly determinable according to the provisions of the English law for the time being in force.

"Marriage Act, 1890."

That the question, therefore, arose, whether, when the Foreign Marriages Bill now before Parliament had become law, British subjects in Russia, who, previously to "The Marriage Act, 1890" (53 and 54 Vict., cap. 47), enjoyed certain privileges under the Act 4 Geo. IV, cap. 91, which had been practically repealed by the Schedule to the first-mentioned enactment, would be, in respect of their right to be married at the Embassy in St. Petersburgh and elsewhere, according to the rites of the Church of England, and to have their marriages duly registered, in a worse position than if the latter Act had not been to such extent repealed; and, further, whether British subjects who might apply to be married at an Anglican chapel in any part of Russia could not there have valid marriages performed, and duly registered, under the Foreign Marriage Bill now before Parliament.

That your Lordship requested that we would take the papers into our consideration, and would favour you with our opinion on the questions raised; and, in the event of our being of opinion that the Bill which had been introduced into the House of Commons would not meet the case of these Russian marriages in a satisfactory manner, that we would also favour your Lordship with our views as to the course which it would be desirable to pursue under the circumstances, either by amendment of the Bill in question or otherwise.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Are of opinion that the revival of Act 4 Geo. IV, cap. 67, is not necessary.

That, assuming the law of Russia to be as stated in the Memorandum of Mr. Eliot, and quoted in the Memorandum of Mr. Jenkyns and Mr. Ilbert of the 8th July, 1891, British subjects will not be in any worse position than if the Act 4 Geo. IV, cap. 67, had not been repealed, and British subjects who apply to be married at Anglican chapels in any part of Russia can have valid marriages performed there, which marriages can be duly registered under the Bill now before the House of Lords.

We see no reason to suggest any amendment of the Bill as it has passed the House of Commons.

If it be thought desirable, in order to meet the wishes expressed, we see no objection to the revival of 4 Geo. IV, cap. 67 (which, however, only applies to St. Petersburgh), although such revival is not, in our opinion, necessary.

Claim of Messrs. Manlove and Alliott against the Dominican

Govt., owing to certain Judgments of the Courts of Santo Domingo.

alleged that they had suffered such a denial of justice as entitled Her Majesty's Government to make a representation in the matter to the Dominican Government, and to demand compensation for the injury that firm might be able to show they had suffered owing to the Judgments in question.

That the main facts of the case might be briefly stated as follows :—

Messrs. Manlove and Co.'s mortgage of Messrs. Hachtmann and Co.'s estate in Santo Domingo transferred to a Mr. Cartwright, and subsequently retransferred back to Manlove and Co.

That it appeared that Messrs. Manlove and Co. took a mortgage of Messrs. Hachtmann and Co.'s estate in Santo Domingo as security for certain payments.

That that mortgage was duly registered, and was subsequently transferred to a Mr. Cartwright, but that such transfer was not registered, although Hachtmann and Co. were informed by a private letter, which was not the form required by law, that the mortgage had been so transferred; and that subsequently no notice, either formal or informal, was given to Hachtmann and Co. of a retransfer of the mortgage by Mr. Cartwright back to Manlove and Co.

Purchase of the same mortgage by Ginebra and Co.

That Manlove and Co.'s mortgage was practically a first mortgage, and that they endeavoured to foreclose in their own name, although with the concurrence of Mr. Cartwright; that Ginebra and Co., who held a second mortgage, then bought Manlove and Co.'s mortgage, as Ginebra and Co. would otherwise have lost their security. That that sale was not registered, but that Messrs. Hachtmann were made aware of it in the ordinary form required by the law of Santo Domingo. That Ginebra and Co. then went on with the foreclosure under the first mortgage which they had purchased from Manlove and Co.; that Hachtmann and Co., however, contended that that mortgage had passed out of Manlove and Co.'s hands directly into those of Mr. Cartwright, and not into those of Messrs. Ginebra; and that, therefore, the proceedings of the latter firm were utterly illegal. That Messrs. Ginebra then demanded that Messrs. Manlove should take their (Messrs. Ginebra's) place in the action against Messrs. Hachtmann. That that demand was stated, by the Vice-Consul at Santo Domingo, to have been in strict accordance with the law of the Republic. That Messrs. Manlove refused to comply with the demand. That thereupon Messrs. Hachtmann sued Messrs. Ginebra for disturbance, and that the latter were cast in damages and costs.

Contract for the sale of the mortgage by Messrs. Manlove to Messrs. Ginebra held by the Supreme Court to be rescinded.

That Messrs. Ginebra then sought to recover from Messrs. Manlove, as it was through their refusal to take Messrs. Ginebra's place in the proceedings against Hachtmann that the latter's action had succeeded; while Messrs. Manlove seized Messrs. Ginebra's estate in order to satisfy themselves thereout in respect of the mortgage which they had transferred to Ginebra and Co. But that the contract for the sale of the mortgage by Messrs. Manlove to Messrs. Ginebra was held by the Court to be rescinded, and that Messrs. Manlove were cast in damages to Ginebra and Co., the Court declaring, at the same time, that Messrs. Manlove's right to recover the value of the mortgage from Hachtmann and Co.'s estate remained intact. (Judgment of the Supreme Court, dated the 23rd July, 1888.)

That Messrs. Manlove alleged that it was clearly shown at the trials of the actions that they had authority to deal with the mortgage, and that the Court was wrong in not deciding that they had such power.

That, on the other hand, however, the Vice-Consul at Santo Domingo stated that Messrs. Manlove were badly advised in refusing, on demand, to take Ginebra and Co.'s place in the action against Hachtmann.

That it appeared that Messrs. Manlove's only answer to Ginebra and Co.'s demand was that Mr. Hachtmann could not give evidence of any transfer of the mortgage to Mr. Cartwright, because he (Hachtmann) had not received legal notice of it.

That the Vice-Consul at Santo Domingo also stated that Messrs. Manlove were badly advised in neglecting to act on that part of the Judgment of the Supreme Court which maintained their ownership of the mortgage on Messrs. Hachtmann's estate, and in letting Ginebra and Co. foreclose, without protest, on that estate under the second mortgage given by Messrs. Hachtmann direct to Messrs. Ginebra.

That the Vice-Consul was of opinion, and that his opinion was stated to be founded on that of a legal expert, that the Judgment of the Supreme Court was final, and was in accordance with the law of the Republic as well as justified on the evidence tendered.

Messrs. Manlove's main grounds for impugning the Judgments of the Supreme Court.

That Messrs. Manlove's main grounds for impugning the Judgments appeared to be as follows :—

1. That the Supreme Court was wrong in the suit Hachtmann and Co. v. Ginebra and Co., in allowing any weight to Messrs. Hachtmann's evidence of a transfer to Mr. Cartwright, of which they (Hachtmann and Co.) had no legal notice, and in allowing any doubt to rest on Messrs. Manlove's ownership of the mortgage at the time of the transfer to Ginebra and Co., seeing that at that time Messrs. Manlove's name, and that name only, appeared on the Register of Mortgages:

2. That the Supreme Court was wrong in going beyond the question of Messrs. Ginebra's demand that Messrs. Manlove should become Messrs. Ginebra's guarantor, and in rescinding the sale of the mortgage to Messrs. Ginebra, and so assuming original jurisdiction, which it had not in that case, and in pronouncing on matters not brought before it by the appeal; and

3. Various other points which appeared to be consequent on one or other of the above.

That Messrs. Manlove alleged that there was collusion between Messrs. Hachtmann and Messrs. Ginebra, Mr. Hachtmann holding Messrs. Ginebra's power of attorney, and being Mr. Ginebra's representative during his absence.

Principal documents in the case.

That the principal documents in the case were the following :—

The cases for Messrs. Ginebra and for Messrs. Manlove respectively before the Court of First Instance at Puerto Plata, and the Judgment of that Court (inclosures in Messrs. Manlove and Alliott's letter of the 12th November, 1890).

The Judgment in the appeal of the Supreme Court of Santo Domingo, translations of the important parts of which appeared to be given in extenso in the inclosure in Messrs. Manlove and Alliott's letter of the 15th April, 1889.

A Memorial presented by Messrs. Manlove and Alliott, setting forth the facts of the case at length, and calling attention to the points in connection with which the alleged denials of justice had occurred. (Inclosure in Messrs. Manlove and Alliott's letter of the 4th March, 1890.)

A Report on the case by the British Vice-Consul at Santo Domingo. (Inclosure in Mr. D. Coen's No. 7, Commercial, of the 10th August, 1890.)

A Report on the case by the British Vice-Consul at Puerto Plata (inclosure in Mr. Zohrab's No. 15, Consular, of the 6th September, 1889). That this Report should not, however, be consulted without remembering that the British Vice-Consul at Puerto Plata was a clerk in the employment of Messrs. Ginebra and Co., although your Lordship had no reason to believe that that circumstance had, as a matter of fact, in any way biassed the Vice-Consul's judgment.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the case was one in which there had been such a denial of justice to Messrs. Manlove on the part of the Tribunals of Santo Domingo as called for the intervention of Her Majesty's Government on behalf of that firm with the Government of the Dominican Republic, and, if so, on what specific grounds a representation might most advantageously be based.

That your Lordship would, at the same time, be glad to receive any general observations with which we might be good enough to favour you on the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

H.M.'s Govt. not called upon to intervene on behalf of the firm of Manlove and Co. with the Dominican Govt.

That we find no evidence in the papers laid before us that there has been any such denial of justice to Messrs. Manlove on the part of the Tribunals of Santo Domingo as calls for the intervention of Her Majesty's Government on behalf of that firm with the Government of the Dominican Republic.

SIAM.

No. 55.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received October 12.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, October 10, 1891.

Siam Order in Council, 1889. Appellate jurisdiction of Supreme Court of Straits Settlements, and appeals in Admiralty suits.

That by Article 11 of that Order, appellate jurisdiction was given to the Supreme Court of the Straits Settlements, and it was provided that such jurisdiction should be exercised by "the full Supreme Court sitting in the Straits Settlements."

That the Supreme Court consisted of a Chief Justice and three Puisne Judges, and the Chief Justice observed that the use of the words "full Supreme Court" would appear to require that appeals should be heard by a Court consisting of a Chief Justice and three Puisne Judges. That he accordingly suggested that the Order in Council should be amended by adding to Article 11 words to the effect that "full Court" for the purposes of the Order should mean the Court as constituted for appeals when in the exercise of its ordinary appellate jurisdiction.

Ordinances of Straits Settlements: No. III, 1878; No. XV, 1885; No. XIX, 1889.

That, in regard to that point, Sir Thomas Sanderson was to call our special attention to sections 2 and 67 of the Local Ordinance III of 1878, as amended by sections 2 and 4 of the Ordinance XV of 1885 and section 6 of the Ordinance XIX of 1889.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the accompanying papers into our consideration, and that we would inform your Lordship whether, in our opinion, the expression "full Supreme Court sitting in the Straits Settlements" must necessarily be taken as requiring the personal attendance of all the Judges constituting the Court, or whether that expression might be construed as meaning the Court as constituted for appeals when in the exercise of its ordinary appellate jurisdiction.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was, at the same time, to request that your Lordship might be favoured with any general observations on the question which we might wish to offer.

We were also honoured with Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 2nd September, transmitting to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister and Consul-General at Bangkok, and requesting that your Lordship might be favoured with our opinion on the point raised by Captain Jones as to appeals in Admiralty suits.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the presence of all the Judges who are members of the Supreme Court is not necessary, but appeals can be heard before three Judges in accordance with section 6 of the Ordinance No. XIX of 1889.

Appeals in Admiralty cases can be brought to the Supreme Court of the Straits Settlements from the District Court of Bangkok subject to the provisions of clause 63 of the Order of the 28th November, 1889.

53 & 54 Vict., cap. 27.

The provisions of the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890, apply to the District Court of Bangkok.

Arrest at Crab Island of Mr. R. Muir, and his detention at Humacao, Porto Rico, in connection with settlement of accounts arising out of wreck of the "Ashdell."

That in May 1889 Mr. Muir proceeded, upon instructions received and on behalf of all the underwriters of the "Ashdell," to that vessel, which was then lying stranded at a place called Yebucao, near Humacao, in the Island of Porto Rico, in order to conduct and superintend the salvage operations on behalf of the underwriters.

That Mr. Antonio Roig was the consignee of the vessel, and acted as agent generally for the vessel, and during the latter part of Mr. Muir's visit was performing the duties of the British Vice-Consulate at Humacao, to which post he was appointed in the month of September following.

That on the 27th July, Mr. Muir, having apparently adjusted all outstanding accounts with Mr. Acting Vice-Consul Roig, quitted Humacao and proceeded to Crab Island, with a view to avoid the long quarantine imposed upon direct arrivals from Porto Rico.

That in the meantime Mr. Roig received a telegram from his Hamburg correspondent in these words: "Hundred protested."

That the receipt of that telegram led Mr. Roig to fear that he would never receive value for Mr. Moir's bills, part of which were given to cover Consular fees and other official expenses.

That Mr. Roig accordingly invited Mr. Muir to return to Humacao, and at the same time called upon the local authorities at Vieques, or Crab Island, to take the necessary steps to prevent Mr. Muir leaving that island until the amount due to the British Vice-Consulate was paid.

That Mr. Hertslet, Her Majesty's Consul for the Island of Porto Rico, having been consulted by Mr. Roig on the subject, agreed with him that if the money owing by Mr. Muir to the Vice-Consulate consisted wholly, or in part, of Consular fees, the latter gentleman should not be allowed to quit Vieques until it was recovered.

That Mr. Muir declined to return, and suggested that Mr. Roig should go to Vieques; and that he added that he himself was on the point of starting for St. Thomas.

That further invitations to return were sent by Mr. Roig to Mr. Muir, but that no reply was given.

That thereupon Mr. Roig, supposing that Mr. Muir intended leaving the country without paying his debts to the British Vice-Consulate, took upon himself the responsibility of bringing the circumstances of the case to the knowledge of the Judge at Humacao, whose jurisdiction extended to Vieques, and requested him to assist in the matter by urging Mr. Muir to return to Humacao, and in the case of his refusal to return to order his removal.

That in the event Mr. Muir refused to go to Humacao unless taken by force, that he was accordingly, by order of the Magistrate at Vieques, acting under instructions from the Judge at Humacao, handcuffed and conducted from his residence to the sea-shore, a distance of 150 yards, and placed in a boat, when the handcuffs were removed.

That he was conveyed by the boat to a schooner bound for Humacao.

That on landing there he was driven in a carriage to the Vice-Consulate, where he was informed by Mr. Roig that he was at liberty.

That at Mr. Roig's request Mr. Muir telegraphed to Messrs. Booth for a guarantee that all his bills would be met, and that Mr. Roig telegraphed in the same sense to Hamburg.

That in forty-eight hours satisfactory answers were received, and Mr. Muir went back to Vieques.

That in addition to the above leading facts of the case, which might be taken as admitting of no dispute, the papers inclosed in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter to us contained many allegations made by Mr. Muir, which did not, if true, appear to affect the main issue, but which, at the same time, it was, nevertheless, only fair to Mr. Consul Hertslet to point out, were absolutely denied by that gentleman; moreover, that some of the documents forwarded by Mr. Hertslet in connection with those allegations had unfortunately been mislaid since their receipt in the Foreign Office.

That the questions as to the reasonableness or otherwise of the suspicions entertained by Consul Hertslet and Mr. Roig with regard to Mr. Muir's credit, or of their opinion with regard to that gentleman's respectability or credibility, did not appear very pertinent to the specific charge brought forward by Mr. Muir, but that the leading facts of the case might be taken as correct. That there remained, then, the main points as to whether there were any substantial grounds for complaint against Her Majesty's Consul at Porto Rico in respect of the proceedings in question; whether the action of the Acting Vice-Consul at Humacao could be regarded as justifiable; and, finally, as to what course should be taken by the Secretary of State with reference to the letter of Messrs. Botterell and Roche of the 8th March, 1890.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted therein, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Suggest that Mr. Roig should be informed that

That, in our opinion, the conduct of the Acting British Vice-Consul at Humacao was unjustifiable, and that Her Majesty's Consul at Porto Rico was, even upon his own statement, guilty of a serious error of judgment.

We think that some reparation should be made to Mr. Muir for the indignities to which he was most improperly subjected, but the sum claimed by him is far in excess of any reasonable amount of compensation.

H. M.'s Government view his conduct with great displeasure, and that Mr. Hertslet should be reprimanded for his share in the transaction.

We suggest that Mr. Roig should be informed that Her Majesty's Government view his conduct with great displeasure, but that if he will make an apology to Mr. Muir, and pay to him the sum of 100*l.* as compensation, they will be prepared to allow him to continue to act as Vice-Consul in the hope that he will carefully avoid giving grounds for any similar complaints in the future; and we suggest that Mr. Hertslet should be reprimanded for his share in the transaction.

My Lord,

Attempt of the Turkish and Russian police to get into their hands a Russian political refugee from on board the British merchant-steamer "Ashlands" while lying at Constantinople.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople asking for instructions in connection with a recent attempt on the part of the Turkish and Russian police to get into their hands a Russian political refugee from on board the British merchant-steamer "Ashlands," while lying in that port.*

That the attempt was frustrated by the action of the master of the vessel, who refused to deliver up the individual in question, but that Her Majesty's Ambassador was anxious to know what course should be followed in the event of the Russian Embassy or the Turkish Government applying to Her Majesty's Embassy, or to the British Consulate General for the surrender either of some political refugee, or of some individual fleeing from justice, and "wanted" in respect of a crime of a non-political nature.

That Sir Philip Currie was to inclose a Memorandum which had been prepared by the Librarian of the Foreign Office on the general considerations surrounding the question.

That your Lordship was under the impression that a British ship in Turkish territorial waters was practically in much the same position as the house in which an Englishman resides on Turkish territory, though in theory exactly the same legal considerations might not, of course, apply to both cases.

That Her Majesty's Government had never disputed the right of the Turkish police to arrest a British subject for an offence against Turkish law committed, say, in the streets of Constantinople, such arrest following immediately on the commission of the offence.

That if, however, the accused were to escape within the sanctity of his house, his asylum could not be invaded by the Turkish police except under the supervision of the British Consular authorities. Nor, should a Turkish subject commit a crime and take refuge in an Englishman's residence, could the Turkish police arrest him except under the supervision of the Consul.

* Sir W. White, No. 2, January 3, 1891; Sir E. Hertslet, Memorandum, January 21, 1891.

1891

That it was presumed that the same doctrine must be held to apply in cases where British subjects, or Turks, commit crimes on Turkish territory, and subsequently seek the asylum of a British ship in Turkish territorial waters.

That the above considerations did not, however, directly affect the question raised by Sir W. White, though they might be of some use in approaching its examination.

Case specially raised was that in which the subject of a third Power having, like Great Britain, extra-territorial jurisdiction in Turkey, had committed a crime elsewhere than in Turkey, and then took refuge, or was found, upon a British ship in Turkish waters.

That the case specially raised by Her Majesty's Ambassador was that in which the subject of a third Power having, like Great Britain, extra-territorial jurisdiction in Turkey, had committed a crime elsewhere than in Turkey, and then took refuge, or was found, upon a British ship in Turkish waters.

That in the case of a political refugee, or of a person charged with a purely political offence, it was, of course, abundantly clear that the law and practice of this country would entirely preclude any British official from lending his aid to the arrest and surrender of such person.

That cases might, however, arise of individuals charged with serious criminal offences, when the surrender might be desirable upon general grounds, provided only that it could be legally carried out.

That in such event, however, it would appear that the accused, if he could be given up at all, must be surrendered not to the Turkish authorities, but to the authorities of his own nation, and that such surrender would, in fact, amount to a surrender by way of extradition.

Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873.

That it was presumed (1) that the Extradition Acts 1870 and 1873, and the various Orders in Council thereunder, had no application in any place where Her Majesty exercised extra-territorial jurisdiction, either in respect of a fugitive criminal upon a British merchant-ship within the territorial waters of such extra-territorial place, or otherwise; (2) that neither Her Majesty's Judge and Consul-General, nor Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople possessed any power of dealing with any such alleged criminal not being a British subject, either upon the demand of his Ambassador, or otherwise; (3) that neither the national authorities of the State of which such alleged criminal was a native nor the Turkish authorities, were entitled to present themselves on board of a British vessel lying within the territorial waters of Turkey for the purpose of arresting such criminal, either with notice to, and in the presence of, the British Consular authority, or otherwise; and (4) that the master of a British merchant-vessel, upon which such alleged criminal found himself, would not be justified in handing him over to any of those authorities, but that in the case where he was an unauthorized intruder upon the ship he would be justified in expelling him therefrom.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the above questions into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the same, as well as with any general observations which we might have to offer on the matter dealt with in Sir W. White's despatch, Secret, No. 2, of the 3rd January last.

We have taken the matter into our consideration and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That in our opinion the following Memorandum will afford guidance upon any points which may arise as mentioned in Sir William White's despatch.

In no case can the Representative of a Power other than that in whose port the vessel lies make any arrest on board a British vessel.

In dealing with this question it is necessary to distinguish between the case of countries where local jurisdiction is fully exercisable over foreigners without reference to the Consuls of their nations, and the case of a country like Turkey where special provision is made that British subjects should be tried for offences committed against other British subjects or against foreigners only in the Consular Courts; and for offences against Turkish subjects only before a Court of which a Consular officer is a member.

In no case can the Representative of a Power other than that in whose port the vessel lies make any arrest on board a British vessel, nor can any claim by the Representative of such Power for the surrender of any person be complied with. The master of the vessel may, however, expel from such vessel and put on shore any person who is on board without lawful authority.

Presence of British Consul necessary for arrest of British subject on board British ship for crime committed in Turkey.

In Turkish ports the right to arrest a British subject on board a British ship for a crime committed in Turkey is restricted by the necessity of procuring the presence and sanction of the British Consul, whose presence and sanction should be given in all proper cases with a view to the trial of the offender before the proper Tribunal.

For arrest of subject of a third Power, desirable that notice should be given to the Consul of the Power.

Where a claim is made to arrest upon a British vessel the subject of a third Power, it is desirable that notice should be given to the Consul of the Power, whose subject is accused before the arrest by the Turkish authority is permitted.

Claims for indemnity on account of destruction of property during Cretan riots.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 16th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin,* relative to the claims for indemnity put forward by certain British subjects residing in Crete on account of the destruction of their property during the riots in that island.

That, on the 25th December of last year, Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople was instructed to communicate to Her Majesty's Consul in Crete the substance of the opinion concerning those claims which was contained in our Report of the 15th December; and that his Excellency was at the same time authorized to submit Vice-Consul Calocherino's claim to the Turkish Government, subject to any explanation which Mr. Biliotti might be able to furnish with regard to the point raised in our Report in respect of his case. That his Excellency was further informed that the other claims, viz., those of Vice-Consul Cassimati, Mrs. Moazzo, Dr. Ittar, and Mr. Pappadaki did not justify any diplomatic intervention on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

That Mr. Biliotti had now addressed a despatch to your Lordship in which he gave fuller explanations respecting Mr. Cassimati's claim, and stated that, in his opinion, it was the strongest of all the claims originally reported by him.

That, in support of that view, Mr. Biliotti referred to the very strong evidence which appeared to exist that Mr. Cassimati's property was destroyed by Turkish troops, and that he argued that that circumstance brought the claim within the same category as that of Mr. Calocherino, with regard to whose case, in our opinion, reasonable grounds existed for claiming compensation.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would again take Mr. Cassimati's case into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the further facts and details now given by Mr. Biliotti in his above-mentioned despatch in any way modified the opinion at which we had arrived in regard to his claim.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

Unable to advise that any claim should be made on behalf of Mr. Cassimati, as it has not been proved that his property was injured by Turkish soldiers.

That, if it could be proved that the injury to Mr. Cassimati's property was done by Turkish soldiers while occupying and pretending to guard the house, the losses alleged might properly be made the subject of claim against the Turkish Government upon the principle laid down by us in our former Report in dealing with the claim of Vice-Consul Calocherino. This, however, is rather inferred than stated as a fact by Mr. Biliotti, and upon referring to Mr. Cassimati's protest of the 18th September, 1889 (Inclosure 3 in Consul Biliotti's No. 72), we find a clear statement by him that sentries were placed to guard his property; that the officer in command at Galata expected an attack and complained of not having sufficient force to resist it; that this was reported to Ibrahim Pasha, who had given instructions that Galata, and especially Mr. Cassimati's property, was to be protected from incendiaries, but that at midnight different houses were set on fire, and that by 9 o'clock in the morning Mr. Cassimati's house was destroyed.

There is not in that protest any suggestion that the Turkish soldiers themselves were responsible for the mischief. We are, therefore, unable to advise that any claim should be made on behalf of Mr. Cassimati.

Mr. Charnaud's claim owing to seizure of flour-mill at Varna by Turkish Govt. in 1877.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 4th June last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch, as marked in the margin,* from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, inclosing further correspondence with Mr. Charnaud on the subject of his claim against the Turkish Government for compensation on account of the seizure by the Turkish authorities in 1877, during the war with Russia, of a steam flour-mill at Varna, the joint property of the claimant and M. Franchini, a Russian subject.

That it would be within our recollection that the claim in question had already formed the subject of a reference to, and report by, us in September of last year.

Is there any ground for reconsidering decision?

That your Lordship did not see anything in the further materials—consisting as they did, for the most part, in a mere recapitulation of his claim—which had now been submitted by Mr. Charnaud to modify the decision at which Her Majesty's Government had arrived in the matter, and of which Sir W. White was informed in your Lordship's despatch No. 267 of the 22nd September last; but that, before instructing his Excellency to that effect, your Lordship desired to be informed whether we concurred in that view, or whether, on the other hand, we found any grounds in the further papers now submitted for reconsidering our previous decision.

That the previous correspondence, as noted in the margin,† was inclosed for reference.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

No reason for modifying previous decision.

That we concur in the view that there is nothing in the further materials now submitted to us to modify the decision at which Her Majesty's Government have arrived.

UNITED STATES.

[Board of Trade.]

No. 60.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Board of Trade.

[Transmitted to the Foreign Office by the Board of Trade in their letter of June 15, 1891.]

[In reply to the following case the Law Officers reported as on p. 112.]

AMERICAN COPYRIGHT.

Case for the Opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown.

New American Copyright Act.

UNDER the new American Copyright Act, the text of which is printed in the "Times" of the 17th March last, and which is to come into operation on the 1st July next, the benefit of American copyright is given to foreigners subject to certain conditions as to printing and the like in the United States; but it is declared by section 13 that the Act is only to apply to a citizen or subject of a foreign State or nation when—

(a.) Such foreign State or nation permits to citizens of the United States of America the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as its own citizens; or

(b.) When such foreign State or nation is party to an International Agreement which provides for reciprocity in the granting of copyright, by the terms of which Agreement the United States of America may at its pleasure become a party to such Agreement.

The existence of either of these conditions is to be determined by the President of the United States by a Proclamation issued from time to time as the purposes of the Act may require.

The question whether the second of these conditions exists in the case of the United Kingdom appears to be a question of fact, on which an opinion is not required.

The question whether the first of the conditions exists in the case of the United Kingdom is a question of English law, and on that question the Board of Trade desire to have the advice of the Law Officers of the Crown.

It would seem that the benefits of English copyright are not confined to British subjects, that they can be obtained by first publication by an alien as well as by a British subject in any part of Her Majesty's dominions (see 49 & 50 Vict, cap. 33, sec. 8), and that contemporaneous publication in a foreign country does not prevent the author from obtaining British copyright (see "Cox v. Purday," 5 C.B. 860).

Cases of "Jeffreys v. Boosey;" "Routledge v. Low."

A doubt has been raised whether residence within some part of Her Majesty's dominions is a necessary condition of an alien obtaining British copyright. The judgments in "Jeffreys v. Boosey," 4 H.L. 815, indicate that residence is so required. But in the case of "Routledge v. Low," L.R. 3 E. and I.A. 100, Lord Westbury and Lord Cairns expressed their opinions that residence was not so required, and in that case the other Judges, though abstaining from an express decision, did not differ.

On this point Sir J. Fitz J. Stephen, in the Digest of Copyright Law appended to the Report of the Copyright Commission of 1878, p. 69, expressed himself as follows:—

"It is probable, but not certain, that an alien friend who publishes a book in the United Kingdom whilst resident out of Her Majesty's dominions, acquires copyright throughout Her Majesty's dominions by such publication.*"

Naturalization Act, 33 Vict., cap. 14.

"* This was the opinion of Lord Cairns and Lord Westbury in "Routledge v. Low," but the case does not decide the point. Their view seems to be favoured by the Naturalization Act, 33 Vict., cap. 14, sec. 2, which enacts that personal property of every description may be taken, acquired, held, and disposed of in every respect by an alien in the same manner in all respects as by a natural-born British subject."

5 & 6 Vict., cap. 45.

With respect to Sir J. Fitz J. Stephen's reference to the Naturalization Act, it may be observed that by 5 & 6 Vict., cap. 45, sec. 25, copyright is expressly declared to be personal property.

Under these circumstances, the Law Officers of the Crown are requested to advise the President of the Board of Trade whether, in their opinion, independently of any Order in Council made under the International Copyright Acts—

1. The benefit of English copyright can be obtained by first publication by an alien in any part of Her Majesty's dominions;

2. Contemporaneous publication in a foreign country prevents the author from obtaining British copyright;

3. Residence in some part of Her Majesty's dominions at the time of publication is a necessary condition of an alien obtaining copyright under the English Copyright Law: and

4. Generally, whether the English Law permits to citizens of the United States of America the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as to British subjects.

* Sir W. White, No. 180.

† Sir W. White, No. 346; Law Officers' Report, September 12; to Sir W. White, September 22, 1890.

Opinion.

English law permits to citizens of the United States of America the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as to British subjects.

1 and 2. We are of opinion that an alien by first publication in any part of Her Majesty's dominions can obtain the benefit of English copyright, and that contemporaneous publication in a foreign country does not prevent the author from obtaining British copyright.

3. We see no objection, in principle, to an alien resident in a foreign country obtaining the benefit of English copyright, and, notwithstanding the judgment of the House of Lords in "Jefferys v. Boosey," 4 H.L. 815, which turned upon the construction of the Statute of Anne, we are of opinion, upon the proper construction of the existing Statutes relating to copyright, that residence in some part of Her Majesty's dominions is not a necessary condition to an alien obtaining copyright under the English Copyright Law.

4. We are of opinion that English law permits to citizens of the United States of America the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as to British subjects.

Seal Fishery (Behring's Sea) O. in C., 1891.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of an Order in Council to be known as the "Seal Fishery (Behring's Sea) Order in Council, 1891," which had been prepared by Mr. Albert Gray, under instructions from the Foreign Office, to enable Her Majesty to make special provision under the Act of Parliament just passed for prohibiting the catching of seals in certain parts of Behring's Sea by Her Majesty's subjects during the period named in the Order.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was at the same time to inclose a copy of the Act in question and of the Agreement between Her Majesty's Government and that of the United States for the execution of which the Act had been passed; and that he was to request that we would take the draft Order into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion as to whether the draft Order in Council might properly be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

That a copy of the instructions which had been issued by telegraph from the Board of Admiralty with regard to the carrying out of the provisions of the Agreement by Her Majesty's naval officers upon the station were inclosed for our perusal.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Annex.

Memorandum.

Lord Salisbury,

I SUBMIT the draft of the Behring's Sea Order in Council.

All the experts continue to shake their heads over the absence of statutory powers, such as are inserted in the Slave Trade Act and the North Sea Fisheries Act, to legalize seizure of United States' vessels by British cruizers, and of British vessels by United States' cruizers.

I have spoken to Davidson, and told him that I understood that the Lord Chancellor had revised the instructions to our naval officers. Davidson thinks it has probably been considered by your Lordship that the absence of statutory powers will occasion no practical inconvenience, but he is not easy in his mind as far as the theoretical legal necessities of the case are concerned, and he asks if, when referring the Order in Council to the Law Officers for approval, it might not be safer to send also the naval instructions, and to ask them to report whether the Order is sufficient for the complete execution of the Agreement and of the instructions, and whether any practical inconvenience is to be apprehended from the absence of the statutory provision legalizing the seizure of vessels of one country by the cruizers of another.

I think it right to submit his suggestion.

June 17, 1891.

Opinion of the Lord Chancellor.

I think the instructions are quite right, but I think there should be an understanding between the two Governments for mutual indemnities. Each national ship seizing and arresting a ship of the other can only justify doing so as the agent of the other, and would have to justify a seizure in that character.

Each, therefore, should indemnify the other.

"Sir, "Detective Office, Bargate, Southampton, June 17, 1891.

"I beg to report that, at 1.55 P.M. on Thursday the 11th instant, a telegram was handed to me by Inspector Curtis, which had been received from Mr. Superintendent Shore, of Scotland Yard, with instructions to arrest a man named W. Hoit on extradition warrant for larceny and embezzlement committed in the United States, who was on board the steamer 'Normannia,' due at this port on that day. I at once went to the office of the Hamburg-American Steam-Packet Company, and asked what time the tender would be leaving the docks, and Mr. Stailey, the clerk, stated it would leave at 9 P.M., and asked me if I was going by it. I told him I should want to go down by the tender to see if there was a man named Hoit on board, as we had received news that there was. Mr. Stailey said, 'You will not go on board of our tender or the steam-ship "Normannia."' I said, 'You know I am a detective officer of this borough, and you refuse to let me go down on the tender to the ship.' He replied, 'Yes; if there is a man answering the description of the man you are in search of, you will not bring him off.' I said, 'There is an extradition warrant for his arrest.' He said, 'All that I can tell you is that if you want to go on board of the tender or on board of the steamer you will have to take a ticket, pay 2*l.*, and go on to Hamburg, and follow your man.' I said, 'You will not let me go then without paying the fare to Hamburg.' He replied, 'No.' I at once reported the same to the Chief Constable, who wired the result to Superintendent Shore, and on receiving a reply Detective Sergeant Goodacre and myself went, by the direction of the Chief Constable, to the Dock Head, where the tender 'Carisbrooke' was laying to take the passengers and baggage to the 'Normannia.' We saw Mr. Philips, the agent, and Mr. Stailey. I said to them, 'This is Detective Sergeant Goodacre, and he would like to know why you refuse to allow us to go down with your tender.' Mr. Philips said, 'You will not be able to go down with us. If you expect any one you can wait until our return, and if the person you want should land you will be able to see him in the baggage-warehouse, but you will not be able to come with us.' We told them what a serious matter it would be, and Mr. Philips then said: 'I will let you both go on the tender on condition that you will not go on board the "Normannia."' We told him that it might assist us a little, and we went. On our arrival at the 'Normannia' we asked again to be allowed to go on board, but were again refused. Detective Sergeant Goodacre then asked Mr. W. G. Low, Assistant Examining Officer of the Customs, if he would go on board and see if 'Hoit' was there. He did so, and on his return showed us the list of passengers, stating that his name was there, and that the number of the cabin corresponded with the number mentioned in the telegraph message, and that he was bound for Hamburg. When we got back again into the docks at 12·40 A.M. on the 12th instant we immediately wired to Superintendent Shore, stating that 'Hoit' was gone on to Hamburg.

"Mr. Phillip S. Clay, Chief Constable."

The warrant was issued under sub-section (2) section 8, 33 & 34 Vict., cap. 52, and such warrant may be executed in any part of the United Kingdom (section 13).

It has been ascertained that the steam-ship "Normannia" was registered at Hamburg in 1890, and sails under the German flag, and belongs to the Hamburg-American Steam-Packet Company.

She is not registered as a British ship.

The Attorney and Solicitor-General are requested to advise whether criminal proceedings can be taken against the officials of the said Company for opposing the execution of a warrant of arrest upon a person charged with an extradition offence.

Law Officers' Opinion.

No criminal obstruction offered in the case.

We are of opinion that there was no such obstruction in this case as would subject the officials of the Hamburg Steam-Packet Company to criminal proceedings. They were under no obligation to allow the police officers to go on board the tender, and only did so on condition that they would not attempt to board the "Normannia," a condition which was observed.

Seal fisheries in the Behring's Sea. Negotiations for a reference to arbitration of certain questions.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 30th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, in connection with the negotiations now proceeding between Her Majesty's Government and that of the United States of America for a reference to arbitration of certain questions arising with regard to the seal fisheries in the Behring's Sea, the accompanying telegram (Sir J. Pauncefote's No. 101 of the 23rd July) which had lately been received from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington.

That during the progress of the negotiations above referred to Her Majesty's Government had already signified (see Foreign Office No. 38 of the 2nd June, 1891) their readiness to refer to arbitration five questions, which would be found set out in print upon the inclosed paper marked (A); and that they had further accepted (see Foreign Office telegram No. 65 of the 6th July) a sixth Article in the terms also set out upon the same paper (A).

That with regard to the question of the compensation, if any, which might be due —in connection with their respective operations in Behring's Sea—by the Governments of either Power to the subjects or citizens of the other, various forms of an Article of Agreement (which Article was known throughout the late correspondence as Article 7) had been proposed.

That the original form of that Article, and of its several subsequent modifications, would be found on the paper marked (B).

That it would be seen that the President of the United States considered that a particular statement of the claims of the respective Governments was preferable to a reference in general terms such as Her Majesty's Government had advocated; but that, in order to remove what seemed to be the last point of difference between the two Governments, he was willing to some extent to modify his original proposals, and had now offered to substitute for them an Article in the following terms:—

"The Government of Great Britain having presented the claims of its subjects for compensation for seizure of their vessels by the United States in Behring's Sea, and the Government of the United States having presented, on its own behalf as well as of the lessees of the privilege of taking seals on the Pribyloff Islands, claims for compensation by reason of the killing of seals in Behring's Sea by persons acting therein under the protection of the British flag, the Arbitrators shall consider and decide upon such claims in accordance with justice and equity, and the respective rights of the High Contracting Parties; and it shall be competent for the Arbitrators to award such compensation as, in their judgment, shall seem equitable." (See Sir J. Pauncefote's telegram No. 101 of the 23rd July.)

Sir J. Pauncefote's telegram No. 101. 23rd July.

That Her Majesty's Government were desirous to take no objections, except such, if any, as might be found upon careful consideration, from a legal point of view, to be absolutely necessary, to the terms of the Article as now proposed; but that, before instructing Her Majesty's Minister at Washington further upon the subject, your

Lordship would be glad of our opinion generally on the terms of the proposed Article, and more especially upon the two following questions:—

1. Whether the form of words proposed in Sir J. Pauncefote's telegram No. 101, if accepted by Her Majesty's Government, would involve the admission that Her Majesty's Government were liable for wrongful acts committed in the open sea by British subjects on board vessels flying the British flag?

2. Whether—apart from any specific admission which might be involved in the actual form of words now proposed—Her Majesty's Government would, according to the accepted doctrines of international law, be subject to any such liability?

That Sir Philip Currie was to request, therefore, that we would be good enough to take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and to favour your Lordship, at our earliest possible convenience, with our opinion on the questions more particularly submitted in his letter, as well as with any general observations on its subject which might, at the same time, occur to us.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Compensation for killing of seals in Behring's Sea. As to liability of British Govt.

1. That, in our opinion, the form of words proposed would, if accepted, involve the admission of the liability of Great Britain to pay compensation for losses occasioned to the United States' Government, or the lessees of the Pribyloff Islands, by the killing of seals in Behring's Sea by British subjects on board vessels flying the British flag.

2. Apart from such admission, the British Government would be liable for injuries caused by British subjects who had acted in the exercise of a right asserted, and, on the hypothesis, wrongly asserted, by Great Britain.

Appendix.

Behring's Sea Arbitration.—Article 7 as proposed by the President.

The Lord Chancellor's Opinion.

The Lord Chancellor's opinion on Article 7, as proposed by the President of the United States.

I concur in the answer of the Law Officers to question 1.

I am wholly unable to concur in their answer to question 2.

The principle involved would be a most formidable one if once admitted. The flying of the British flag is only the emblem of the nationality of the vessel, and only affords protection to the vessel if it is engaged in a lawful occupation. If engaged in an occupation which is unlawful it may be subject to a variety of penalties, according to the nature of the thing done, but unless the particular thing done is done by the direction or express permission of the Government of Great Britain it affords no ground for claiming compensation against that Government.

It seems to me that it is not material that Great Britain claimed and insisted on a right to fish for seals in Behring's Sea on behalf of its subjects, but if that makes a ground for demanding compensation, then, whenever there is a disputed boundary, [? whatever] the subjects of either Power do in the meantime, before that dispute is settled, may be made the subject of a demand for compensation from the Government of that country which has erroneously claimed boundary. I cannot agree that any known principle of international law recognizes the propriety of such a claim.

The formidable nature of the claim here would be enough to justify its rejection. The seals caught by British sealers would not necessarily have been caught at all, and until caught they certainly would belong to no one, since seals might swim out of American waters even if Behring's Sea were found to be American waters.

I very earnestly deprecate agreeing to any such words as are proposed.

[Board of Trade.]

[Transmitted by the Board of Trade to the Foreign Office in their letter of October 12, 1891.]

Opinion of the Law Officers, dated September 22, 1891.

Draft Convention between Great Britain and the United States relative to Merchant Shipping.

WE have considered the draft Convention, and the suggested alterations of Mr. Moore.

In order to give Articles II to IV, inclusive, legal effect, legislation is necessary, as they affect the jurisdiction of our Courts, the power of the Executive, and the law of evidence. Legislation is also necessary to render Article V effective as regards British possessions other than those enumerated.

As regards Articles II and III, we think them open to objection, the grounds of which we have stated in the following opinion, which expresses our views on each Article requiring consideration:—

"Foreign Deserters Act, 1852." "Merchant Shipping Act, 1854." "Merchant Seamen Act, 1880."

Article I.—There is no objection to this Article, and effect may be given to it by Orders in Council applying the provisions of "The Foreign Deserters Act, 1852," and some of the provisions of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," as amended by "The Merchant Seamen Act, 1880," relating to discipline. It would be desirable that the Article should extend to vessels of war, but to effect this legislation would be necessary.

Article II.—We recognize the desirability of some means being adopted for the prevention of vexatious suits between the captain and crews of vessels belonging to the two countries; we are of opinion, however, that the mode provided by the Article for effecting this object is open to objection, on the ground, amongst others, that it precludes British subjects from having free access to their own Courts, and places in the hands of the American Consul a power the exercise of which might result in abuse. We would further observe that there is nothing to prevent the Consul receiving such instructions from his own Government as would leave him little discretion in the matter, and render even the limited right preserved by the Article wholly illusory. For these reasons, we think difficulty would be experienced in obtaining the sanction of Parliament to this Article. We do not, however, regard these objections as insuperable, and if the Article affords the only practicable basis of agreement, it will be for Her Majesty's Government to consider whether the advantages to be gained to this country by its approval are sufficient to outweigh them. We think a more acceptable remedy would be to give the Courts of each country full discretion and power to dismiss or stay vexatious suits, and by giving the captains of the vessels of each country the right to have a suit stayed on payment of the amount claimed into Court, provision being made for its transmission through the Consul of the one country to the other country, to abide the result of litigation there. Legislation of this nature, with provisions for preventing the unauthorized boarding of vessels terminating their voyages, would, we think, go far in putting a stop to proceedings of this kind.

Article III.—We are fully sensible of the necessity of punishing Englishmen, Americans, or foreigners, who have committed on the high seas any of the offences enumerated in the Convention, and who afterwards come to this country; we have, however, great difficulty in acceding to this Article, on grounds which may be illustrated by assuming an offence committed on an American ship proceeding either to this country or one of the Colonies.

1. Great delay must take place before the offender can be tried, and in the colonial case many months would elapse, whereas the offences are of a class which ought in justice to be promptly dealt with.

2. The trial might frequently take place without the presence of the witnesses (whether fellow seamen or passengers) competent to prove or disprove the offence charged; there is no provision in the Article for taking the depositions of witnesses in this country or the Colonies, and for their admissibility, in the absence of the witnesses, in the American Courts.

3. No discretion is vested in the English or Colonial Magistrate to dismiss the application of the Consul on any ground, as, for example, the trivial nature of the offence charged. The information of the Consul in making the application would in general be derived from the captain and officers, often the persons really to blame: the Article might, therefore, lead to hardship and abuse.

4. The Article, if considered merely as an extension of the Extradition Act, includes none of its safeguards; it shuts out the accused from applying for a writ of habeas corpus. For these reasons, we are of opinion that the Article, considered from a legal point of view, is open to serious objection, and repugnant to our principles of justice. It is to be regretted that the Government of the United States rejected the proposal of giving the local authorities at the port of destination jurisdiction over these offences. A possible compromise would be that the local authorities of the country should only be able to extradite the subjects of the other, and that such local authorities should have jurisdiction to punish those of the crew being either subjects of their own country or foreigners. The present Article would give effect to this view if the expression "appropriate jurisdiction" were suitably defined.

Article IV. Assuming the Convention agreed to, this Article is necessary and free from objection.

Article V. Having regard to Mr. Moore's statement (p. 6) "that the chief value of the Convention would be its application to the Colonies," we think it would be desirable that the Indian and Colonial Offices should be consulted as to the probability of India and the Colonies being willing to be brought within it before proceeding further with the present negotiations.

Article VI. Legislation being necessary in order to give validity to the Convention, it may take one of three forms:—

1. A General Act may be passed the provisions of which can be applied by Order in Council to the United States and other countries if desirable to do so.
2. The present Convention may be agreed to subject to the approval of Parliament, which may take the form either of a General Act to be followed by an Order in Council; or
3. Of an Act simply confirming the Convention.

We think the first is the better course to pursue. To conclude the Convention without Parliamentary sanction would be illusory, and might lead to misunderstanding, and, further, the adoption of either of the two latter courses assumes that Parliament can be depended on to confirm the Convention in its present shape and unaltered, which, in our opinion, is extremely unlikely.

Annex.

Draft Convention between Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland and the President of the United States of America.[*]

Preamble.

HER Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and the President of the United States of America, being equally desirous, for the advantage of the commercial relations of the two countries, that better provision than now exists should be made for the maintenance of discipline and punishment of offences committed on board the ships of the two countries, and that a better procedure than now exists should be provided for the settlement of the civil claims of seamen and others who have agreed to serve in the ships of either country, when such claims are instituted in the other country, and that provision should be made for the recovery of seamen deserting from the ships of either country when in the waters of the other country, deem it expedient to conclude a special Convention for the accomplishment of the above purposes.

Accordingly they have named their Plenipotentiaries as follows:

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland,

The President of the United States of America,

[*] Amendments proposed by Mr. Moore, of the United States' Government, are printed in italics.

Who, after communicating to each other their Full Powers, found in due and good form, have agreed upon the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

Deserters.

The Consuls of either of the High Contracting Parties, residing in the dominions of the other, shall receive from the local authorities the assistance provided by law for the recovery of persons who may desert from merchant-vessels of their respective countries, while in the ports of the other country. If, however, any such deserter shall have committed an offence in the country where he is found, his surrender may be delayed until the proper Tribunal before which the case shall be pending or may be cognizable shall have pronounced its sentence and the sentence shall have been carried into effect.

In the interpretation of this Article, and of the following Articles of this Convention, the term "Consul" shall be deemed to include Consuls-General, Vice-Consuls, Consular Agents, and any person for the time authorized to discharge the duties of any such Consular officer.

ARTICLE II.

Civil Suits between Master and Crew.

To the end that the internal order of the merchant-vessels of the Contracting Parties shall be under the charge of their respective Consuls, it is agreed that no suit or action to determine differences which may arise, either at sea or in port, between the captains officers, and crews, whether in reference to personal conduct or to wages, and the execution of mutual contracts, shall be instituted or maintained in any Court of either of the Contracting Parties by the captain, officers, or members of the crews of vessels of the other country, unless the Consul of the country to which the ship belongs shall certify his consent, or unless, where there is a dispute as to wages or contracts, all the parties consent. But nothing in this Article shall prevent the Courts from taking jurisdiction where the differences on shipboard are of a nature to disturb the peace and public order in port or on shore, or when persons other than the officers and crew of the vessel are parties to the disturbance.

ARTICLE III.

Offences against Discipline on the High Seas.

When any of the offences against good order and discipline specified in the schedule to this Convention, and made punishable by the laws of the country to which the vessel belongs, shall have been committed on board any merchant-vessel of one of the High Contracting Parties on the high seas, and beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the other, the accused shall be allowed to be kept in custody on board such vessel on her arrival in the ports of the other High Contracting Party, until the Consul of the country to which the vessel belongs shall have made due inquiry into the charge. If, upon such inquiry, the Consul shall decide that the case is one which should be sent for trial to the appropriate jurisdiction, the local authorities shall[*] afford him all necessary aid and assistance to secure the further detention of the accused for such purpose; and in case he shall escape, they shall take all necessary and lawful steps for his arrest; and on the application and at the cost of such Consul, they shall cause the accused to be imprisoned and confined until he can be sent for trial as aforesaid, in the same or some other merchant-vessel belonging to the same country, provided that no person shall be detained or imprisoned under this Article for a longer period than two months from the date of the arrival of the vessel in port, or, in case he shall escape, from the date of his recapture.

ARTICLE IV.

Evidence of Consuls.

If it should become necessary for carrying out this Convention that evidence should be given in one country of the law of the other country, such evidence may be given by a statement to be made by a Consul of the last-mentioned country, and the Consul's statement shall be received as evidence of the law of his country.

---

ARTICLE V.

Application of Convention to Colonies.

The provisions of this Convention shall extend and apply to the Colonies and possessions of Her Britannic Majesty, subject to the exceptions hereinafter named in the case of the following Colonies and possessions:—

India.
Canada.
Newfoundland.
The Cape.
Natal.
New South Wales.
Victoria.
Queensland.
Tasmania.
South Australia.
Western Australia.
New Zealand.

The provisions of this Convention shall not extend to United States' vessels or the crews thereof, when in the waters or territory of any of the above-named Colonies or possessions, unless notice shall first have been given by Her Britannic Majesty's Representative at Washington that such Colony or possession accedes to this Convention.

ARTICLE VI.

Legislation for carrying out Convention.

The High Contracting Parties engage to take, with as little delay as possible, such legislative measures, if any, as may be necessary to carry this Convention into effect.

ARTICLE VII.

Ratification, Commencement, and Duration of Convention.

The ratification of the present Convention shall be exchanged as soon as possible after the legislative measures, if any, necessary to carry it into effect in both countries shall have been adopted. It shall become operative at the expiration of thirty days from the date of the exchange of ratifications, and shall remain in force for five years after the date of its becoming operative, unless sooner terminated by notice given by either Contracting Party to the other.

~~ARTICLE VIII.~~

~~Commencement and Duration of Convention.~~

~~The present Convention shall come into operation at the expiration of thirty days from the date of the exchange of ratifications. It shall remain in force for five years after that date, and thereafter until terminated by a twelve months' notice to be given by either High Contracting Party to the other.~~

Schedule of Offences referred to in Article III.

Misconduct or drunkenness, endangering ship, life, or limb.
Refusing to do any lawful act to preserve life or limb.
Wilful disobedience.
Combination to disobey.
Assaults against officers.
Assaults occasioning bodily harm.
Wilful damage to ship's stores or cargo.
Larceny or embezzlement of stores or cargo.

"Sir,

Extradition of T. W. Hoit. Obstruction offered to the police by officials of the Hamburg-American Steam-Packet Company.

"I am directed by Mr. Secretary Matthews to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 27th ultimo, inclosing opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown to the effect that, in the case of T. W. Hoit, the obstruction offered to the police by the officials of the Hamburg-American Steam-Packet Company was not such as would subject them to criminal proceedings. Mr. Matthews has communicated this opinion to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

"The Secretary of State, however, considers it important that he should be further advised by the Law Officers as to the course which should be taken by the police to effect an arrest in any future case in similar circumstances. As the recent Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and the United States comprises many offences, e.g., larceny and embezzlement, which are not comprised in the Treaty between the United States and Germany, it is probable that criminals from the United States may attempt to escape to Germany rather than to England; that applications may be made by the United States' Government for their arrest at British ports at which German vessels touch; and that if the officials of the Company can successfully oppose the arrest on board their vessels, the only opportunity of bringing the criminals to justice may be lost.

"Moreover, the English Government has not unfrequently occasion to apply for the arrest of fugitives at ports in foreign countries where the vessels on which they have sailed merely touch, and it is most desirable that it should be clearly shown that this can be done reciprocally.

"The Secretary of State desires, therefore, to be advised by the Law Officers what steps the police are justified in taking in order to execute either an English or an extradition warrant for the arrest of a fugitive criminal—

The Attorney-General's Opinion.

Replies to queries as to arrest of a fugitive criminal (a) on board a British vessel; (b) on board a foreign vessel within the British territorial waters; if the owners or their agents refuse to allow the police to go on board the vessel.

In my opinion, subject to the provisions of "The Mail Ships Act, 1891," a warrant for the arrest of a person, whether issued in respect of a crime committed in England or under the authority of the Extradition Acts, can be executed on board a British vessel whether in British territorial waters or on the high seas, or on board a foreign vessel (not being a public ship) while such vessel is within British territorial waters; and that the owners, or their agents, are not entitled to prevent the police authorities, when duly armed with a warrant of arrest, from boarding for the purpose of executing such warrant.

Attorney-General.

Royal Courts of Justice, November 7, 1891.

The Solicitor-General's Opinion.

In my opinion, an extradition warrant can only be executed upon a foreign vessel in British waters when such vessel belongs to the Power claiming extradition, and the fugitive is either a British subject or a subject of such Power.

In other respects I agree with the opinion of the Attorney-General.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received January 29.)

My Lord,
Royal Courts of Justice, January 27, 1891.

Question of right of interment in the British cemetery at Monte Video.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. Villiers Lister's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list* relative to the question whether British subjects who are in communion with the Church of Rome, or those subjects or citizens of foreign States who profess any form of the Protestant religion, could legally be buried in the British cemetery at Monte Video.

That, with regard to Mr. Satow's statement that the title-deeds spoke of the old cemetery as being "destined exclusively to the interment of the remains of Protestant British subjects," Sir T. Villiers Lister was to state that he appeared to refer to those which were granted on the 3rd October, 1874, by the Uruguayan Government at the request of Major Munro, Her Majesty's Consul at Monte Video for the time being, in order to set at rest certain doubts respecting the ownership, and to give a good title to the possession of the cemetery. But that Sir Julian Pauncefote, in his letter to our predecessors of the 9th March, 1884, pointed out that there were various inaccurate statements in those title-deeds. That it could not, therefore, be asserted with certainty whether the original purchase, the title to which was confirmed by the deed of the 3rd October, 1884, was actually made subject to such conditions, or by whom, or upon whom, such conditions could be enforceable.

That, however that might be, it was a matter of certainty that the object for which the British cemetery was originally acquired was to provide a proper burial-place for Protestant British subjects.

That that step was taken, as it had been formerly the practice to carry the bodies of Protestants out by stealth and push them into the sand by the sea-shore in order that they might be preserved from desecration at the hands of the bigoted natives.

That the present cemetery was purchased out of the proceeds of the sale of a portion of the old cemetery, and that it was a matter of doubt whether or not the use of the new ground was subject to the conditions supposed to have been laid down with regard to the old cemetery.

That it might, however, be here mentioned that the intentions of the founders of the old cemetery had been systematically set aside in favour of Protestants of foreign nationality, and that there had been a few instances of the burial of Roman Catholic British subjects.

That Sir T. V. Lister was further to draw our attention to the provisions of the Act 6 Geo. IV, cap. 87, which relate, among other matters, to the purchase or hire of any ground to be used as a place of interment for Her Majesty's subjects, and which contain no stipulation with regard to the religious faith of British subjects to be therein interred. And that Sir T. V. Lister was to invite our special attention to section 15 of that Act respecting "Rules, Orders, and Regulations for the due and proper use and management of such . . . . burial-grounds as aforesaid," and respecting the control over them which might be exercised by His Majesty through one of his Principal Secretaries of State.

That it was, however, stated in the above-mentioned letter to our predecessors that, with certain specified exceptions, "there seems to have been no donation of public funds towards the purchase of the cemetery, or annual contribution to its maintenance as contemplated by the Act 6 Geo. IV, cap. 87; and that, in accordance with the Law Officers' Report of the 19th March, 1884, Her Majesty's Consul at Monte Video was instructed to inform the Uruguayan Government that the power of Her Majesty's Government to dispose of the cemetery without the assent of the British community was extremely doubtful.

That though the doubt as to the applicability of the Act 6 Geo. IV, cap. 87, was considered a reason for not disposing of the old cemetery without the assent of the British community, yet it remained a question whether the existence of that doubt could be held to release Her Majesty's Government from the obligation to pronounce upon the matters referred to them for decision.

That your Lordship requested that we would take the papers into our consideration, and would favour you with our opinion—

1. Whether Her Majesty's Government were called upon to express any opinion upon the questions raised in Mr. Satow's despatch No. 28, Consular, of the 24th November, 1890, and, if so,

2. Whether British subjects who are in communion with the Church of Rome could legally be buried in the new British Cemetery at Monte Video.

3. Whether the subjects or citizens of foreign States who profess any form of the Protestant religion could legally be there buried.

4. Whether there was any legal objection to the assignment of a portion of the cemetery in question for the purposes of the burial of Roman Catholic British subjects; and,

5. Whether, if there were no such legal objection, the portion of the cemetery so assigned could legally be consecrated according to the rites of the Church of Rome, notwithstanding the previous solemn act of dedication of the whole cemetery mentioned by the Bishop of the Falkland Islands.

That your Lordship also requested that we would favour you with any general observations which we might have to offer upon the questions raised by the papers.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Are of opinion that Roman Catholic

4. We do not see any legal objection to the assignment of a portion of the cemetery for the purposes of the burial of Roman Catholic British subjects, but it appears to us that it cannot be necessary, or desirable, that such a separation should be made.

Nothing illegal in the consecration of a portion of the cemetery according to the rites of the Church of Rome.

My Lord,

Draft Order in Council for carrying into effect Extradition Protocol with Uruguay.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 12th September, stating that he had to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, the draft of an Order in Council for carrying into effect a Protocol between Her Majesty and the President of the Oriental Republic of the Uruguay, signed at Monte Video the 20th March, 1891, providing for the extension of the period of provisional arrest stipulated in Article IX of the Extradition Treaty between the two countries of the 26th March, 1884.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to inclose letters from the Home Office and Colonial Office, stating that there was no objection on the part of those Departments to the issue of the Order in Council.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the draft Order in Council into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether in its present shape it might properly be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

Approve draft Order in Council as amended.

Assuming that there are no other countries except Canada in which the operation of the Extradition Acts has been suspended, the draft Order in Council, as amended and initialled by us, may properly be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval. If there be any other countries in which the operation of the Acts has been suspended, the recitals and last proviso will require alteration. We are under the impression that we approved the draft of an Order suspending the operation of the Acts in some part of the Cape Colony, but the Order may not have been made.

VENEZUELA.

No. 68.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received September 19.)

Royal Courts of Justice, September 17, 1891.

My Lord,

Death of a British subject named W. Campbell from a gun-shot wound received at hands of Venezuelan police.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 1st ultimo, stating that he had to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, the papers noted in the margin of his letter which related to the death of a British subject named William Campbell, from a gunshot wound received at the hands of the police on the Venezuelan bank of the Amakooroo River, which formed the boundary between Venezuela and British Guiana.

That the attention of Her Majesty's Government was first called to this case in an unofficial note from Señor Pimentel (see document A), who arrived in this country last year as Secretary to a special Envoy from the Venezuelan Government, and remained in England after the Envoy's departure.

That in that communication it was stated that the President of the Republic had ordered an investigation into the matter, with a view to the exemplary punishment of the guilty parties.

That full particulars were subsequently received in a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 10th April (see document B), and an account of the circumstances would be found in the report from Mr. im Thurn, the Colonial Government's Agent in the district, which formed the second inclosure.

* Date to be inserted by the Council Office, and to be a date ten days after the publication of the Order in the "London Gazette."

That the facts as stated by Mr. im Thurn are briefly that William Campbell, a respectable settler in the north-western district of British Guiana, visited an Englishman on the Venezuelan shore of the Amakooroo, and while in his house was arrested by the Venezuelan police without being informed of the nature of the charge against him. That he did not appear to have actively resisted the police, who requested him to accompany them to the station, but while surrounded by them in the hammock where he lay, he received a gunshot wound in the hand. That the shot appeared to have been fired by one of the policemen acting, it is said, under the orders of a sergeant. After Campbell was wounded he was taken to the police Inspector by whom he was sent up the river to the Venezuelan Governor of the district. That he was then sent down the river accompanied by a Magistrate who had received orders from the Governor to hold an inquiry into the matter. That the exact result of that inquiry had not been ascertained, but the police Inspector and the policemen seem to have been punished, while Campbell himself was released and allowed to return to the English bank of the river. That he proceeded shortly afterwards to a hospital up the Barima River, where he died of the effects of his wound, eight days after the date on which he received it.

That an inquest was held on him by the Colonial authorities at Amakooroo, and the jury returned a verdict of wilful murder against the policeman who fired the shot, and the police officer in command of the party.

That it would be observed that Mr. im Thurn attributed Campbell's arrest to the fact that he had failed to report himself at the Custom-house when arriving on the Venezuelan bank of the river.

That at that stage Her Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin was directed to request the German Government to allow their Representative at Carácas, who was for the moment in charge of British interests in Venezuela, to present a note to the Venezuelan Government expressing the hope of Her Majesty's Government that the guilty parties would be punished and compensation awarded to the relatives of the deceased (see despatch No. 70 to Sir E. Malet, April 29, 1891, Document C).

That the reply of the Venezuelan Government would be found in Mr. Trench's despatch No. 133, July 17, 1891 (Document D), and it would be seen that it contained no admission of their liability to compensate the relatives of the deceased.

That meanwhile, shortly after the representation to the Venezuelan Government had been forwarded to Berlin, further information was received from the Colonial Office in the letter dated the 6th May (Document E).

That from that Report it appeared that the Venezuelan authorities held a further inquiry into the matter, the result of which was that the shooting of Campbell was decided by them to have been accidental, and the policeman detained on the charge of murder was acquitted and released on bail to appear before a higher Tribunal at Carácas, apparently to take his trial on some minor charge connected with the affair.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, Her Majesty's Government were justified in formally calling upon the Venezuelan Government to make pecuniary compensation to Campbell's surviving relatives, and also with any general observations we might have to offer on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to

Report—

H. M.'s Govt. not justified in calling upon Venezuelan Govt. to pay compensation.

That, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, we are not of opinion that Her Majesty's Government would be justified in formally calling upon the Venezuelan Government to pay compensation.

REPORTS BY THE LAW OFFICERS OF THE CROWN, &c.: 1892.

AFRICA.

No. 1.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received April 14.)

My Lord,

Royal Courts of Justice, April 13, 1892.

General Act of the Brussels Slave Trade Conference. Calling attention to certain Articles.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. Villiers Lister's letter of the 15th January last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy of the General Act of the Slave Trade Conference held at Brussels 1889-90.

That the Act was signed on the 2nd July, 1890, and by the provisions of Articles XCIX and C, would come into force on the 2nd March, 1892, the ratifications having been duly deposited on the 2nd January last.

That Chapter I dealt with the measures to be taken in the places of the origin of the slave traffic in Slave Trade countries.

That the Contracting Powers, in Articles V and XII, undertook, if necessary, to adapt their Laws to the new state of things created by the Act, and to communicate such Laws to one another within the shortest possible delay.

That Chapter II concerned the "caravan routes and the land transport of slaves," and, in Article XIX, provided that the penal arrangements of Article V should apply to "all offences committed in the course of the operations connected with the transport and traffic of slaves on land."

That Chapter III related to the "repression of the sea-borne Slave Trade." That it delimited a maritime zone within which it declared that the Slave Trade still existed, and dealt with such points as the right of visit, search, and capture, the usurpation of the national flag, the treatment of slaves taking refuge on board a ship of war bearing the flag of one of the Signatory Powers, the grant of the flag to native vessels, and the treatment and disposal of captured vessels, their captains, and crews.

That Chapter IV applied only to "countries to which slaves are sent whose institutions recognize the existence of domestic slavery."

That Chapter V dealt with "institutions intended to insure the execution of the General Act." That it provided for the creation of an International Maritime Office for the exchange between the Governments of documents and information relating to the Slave Trade, including "the texts of the Laws and Regulations of the Administration, whether existing or enacted in application of the General Act," and for the protection of liberated slaves.

That Chapter VI defined certain "restrictive measures concerning the traffic in spirituous liquors," whilst Chapter VII contained the "final provisions for the repeal of the contrary stipulations of previous Conventions, the introduction of alterations into the Act, and the date of its coming into force.

How far is legislation necessary to enforce the Act?

That Sir T. Villiers Lister was to request that we would take the "General Act" into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether legislation would be required, and, if so, on what points and to what extent in the United Kingdom, and likewise in the Colonies and foreign possessions of Her Majesty, to give effect to any of its stipulations, and to fulfil the obligations it imposed on Her Majesty's Government.

What should be done respecting India and Indian ships?

We were also honoured with a further letter from Sir T. Villiers Lister, dated the 19th ultimo, inclosing a letter from the India Office inquiring, on behalf of the Government of India, whether Parliament was going to support the Brussels Act by Imperial Statute, or whether it was intended that the Government of India should legislate for India and Indian ships.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Legislation is desirable.

That, in our opinion, it will be desirable to provide by Imperial legislation for giving effect to the provisions of the General Act of the Brussels Conference.

The matters requiring to be dealt with are:—

1. The application of the criminal law of this country to offences committed by slave-traders (Article V).
2. The application of the Extradition Acts and Fugitive Offenders Acts to such offenders (Article V).
3. The prohibition or regulation of the importation of fire-arms in the zone specified in Article VIII.
4. The prohibition of importing spirituous liquors, or the imposition upon them of the agreed import duties.

We are of opinion that subjects 1, 2, and 3 might be dealt with by Orders in Council under "The Slave Trade Consolidation Act, 1873," "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," and "The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881," but we cannot say that this is free from doubt.

The whole subject might be dealt with by a Bill.

The provisions of the General Act relating to the taxation on imported spirits appear to require Imperial legislation, and we think it would be well to deal with the whole subject by a Bill which might enact any provisions necessary to supplement any of the Statutes above mentioned, and, in addition, might set out in a Schedule the General Act of the Brussels Conference, and enact that it shall be lawful for Her Majesty, by Order in Council, to make such provision for the government of her possessions in Africa, and for the exercise of her authority and jurisdiction in such possessions and in her Protectorates and other territories wherein Her Majesty, by Treaty, Capitulation, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, has jurisdiction, as may be necessary for giving effect to the provisions of the said General Act.

No separate legislation required for India.

No separate legislation for India will, in our opinion, be required.

In the event of it being determined to introduce legislation on the lines we have suggested, the subject should be carefully considered by the Parliamentary Draftsman, and a preliminary Memorandum and draft Bill prepared for further consideration.

Draft O. in C. Deportation of foreigners from British Protectorates.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 8th April last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of an Order in Council extending the provisions of "The Africa Order in Council, 1889," to subjects of States who were parties to the General Act of the Conference of Berlin signed in 1885; and providing for the application to territories within the limits of that Order of British Indian Acts and enactments.

That your Lordship had caused the draft Order to be referred to the Treasury, the Colonial Office, the India Office, and the Home Office; and that it had been agreed to by all those Departments on the understanding that instructions would be given to Her Majesty's Consular officers in regard to the application to foreigners of Part XIII of "The Africa Order in Council, 1889," to the effect that deportation should not be resorted to in the case of foreigners without express authority being obtained from Her Majesty's Government.

That the reason for the proposed instruction was the difficulty of prescribing, either in the Order itself, or in any general instructions thereunder, the place or places to which foreigners ought properly, in case of necessity, to be deported.

That under section 102 of "The Africa Order in Council, 1889," a person could only be deported to "the prescribed African possession of Her Majesty, or to such other part of Her Majesty's dominions as a Secretary of State . . . . . directs;" and that, in the general instructions issued under that Order, it was prescribed that the deportation was to be made "to such place as may appear (to the officer exercising judicial powers) most convenient, due regard being had to the place of birth or domicile of the person to be deported." That that instruction was founded on the objection entertained by British Colonies to receive in that way criminals who had no connection with the Colony in question.

That the Home Office, in their letter of the 11th January last, whilst concurring in the terms of the draft Order, suggested that, in case of it being necessary to deport any foreigner, it might be desirable to deport him, subject to the consent of his Government, to the country to which he belonged, rather than to some part of Her Majesty's dominions.

That, in regard to that suggestion, doubts appeared to arise as to whether Her Majesty had legal power to authorize, or to carry out, the deportation of any person to be made to a foreign country; as to whether the consent of foreign Powers could be obtained; and, if so, as to whether it would not be made subject to the undesirable condition of reciprocity. That difficulties might also be apprehended as to the power to keep such persons in custody when without Her Majesty's jurisdiction.

That it was very important that the power of deportation of foreigners should, if possible, exist, but that it was desirable to prescribe generally how it was to be carried out in practice, and especially whether to some part of Her Majesty's dominions, or to the foreign States to which such foreigners might respectively belong.

That, Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the draft Order in Council as framed might properly be submitted for Her Majesty's approval, and generally with any observations we might have to offer in connection with it.

That, with regard to the particular matter of deportation, Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request our opinion on the following points:—

1. Whether, bearing in mind that it was desirable that the power of deportation of foreigners should, if possible, exist, it was proper to deal with that question in the draft Order submitted for our consideration, or whether it would be more convenient that such power should be provided by other means;
2. If the former, whether the deportation could and should be made, with the consent of the foreign Government, to the country to which the foreigner belonged; or
3. Whether the deportation should be made to some part of Her Majesty's dominions.

1892

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Draft Africa O. in C. may be submitted to the Queen.

That, in our opinion, the draft Order in Council, in its present form, may properly be submitted to Her Majesty for approval.

Conditions under which foreigners may be deported from British Protectorates.

The only power of deportation which exists under "The Africa Order in Council, 1889," is a punitive deportation, and is by the draft Order applied to the Protectorates in South Africa.

In our opinion, "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," does not confer on Her Majesty the power of administrative deportation, or expulsion, from territories which are not within Her Majesty's dominions, and the only mode of carrying out the desired object is, as indicated in our Report of the 3rd March, 1888, the giving facilities to the authorities of other countries to seize and remove from the Protectorate persons whom they desire to bring to justice. For this purpose instructions to Consular officers will alone be required.

Annex.

Draft Order in Council.

WHEREAS, by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, Her Majesty the Queen has power and jurisdiction in the parts of Africa mentioned in "The Africa Order in Council, 1889;"

And whereas, by the General Act of the Conference of Berlin signed in 1885, the several Powers who are parties thereto (in this Order referred to as the Signatory Powers) declared, with respect to occupations in Africa by any of the Signatory Powers, that the establishment of authority in protected territories was an obligation resting upon the respective protecting Powers;

And whereas, in order to the due fulfilment of the said obligation as respects territories and places within the limits of the above-mentioned Order, which Her Majesty shall have declared to be under the protection of Her Majesty, it is necessary that the subjects of the Signatory Powers, other than Her Majesty, should be justiciable under the said Order in like manner as British subjects, and for this purpose that the provisions of the said Order referring to British subjects should, as far as practicable, be extended to the subjects of those Powers;

And whereas it is expedient that the powers conferred upon a Secretary of State by "The Africa Order in Council, 1889," should be extended so as to provide for the application to territories and places within the limits of that Order of such Acts and enactments for the time being in force in British India as may be deemed necessary for the due administration of justice:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise, in Her Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of Her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. In this Order the expression "foreigners to whom this Order applies" means subjects of any of the Signatory Powers (except Her Majesty) or of any other Power which has consented that its subjects shall be justiciable under "The Africa Order in Council, 1889," and this Order.

Other expressions, defined in "The Africa Order in Council, 1889," and used in this Order, have the same meaning.

2. Where Her Majesty has declared any territory or place within the limits of "The Africa Order in Council, 1889," to be a Protectorate of Her Majesty, the provisions of that Order having reference to British subjects, except Part XIV thereof, shall extend in like manner to foreigners to whom this Order applies, and all such foreigners shall be justiciable by the Courts constituted by the said Order for the Protectorate, under the same conditions as British subjects, and to the extent of the jurisdiction vested by law in those Courts; and Part XII and so much of the rest of Order as requires the consent of any foreigner as a condition of the exercise of jurisdiction shall be of no force or effect in the Protectorate, so far as respects foreigners to whom this Order applies.

3. A Secretary of State may, from time to time, by order published in such manner as he directs, declare that any Act or enactment for the time being in force in British India or any Presidency thereof, and not inconsistent with "The Africa Order in Council, 1889," and this Order, shall have effect and be administered in relation to any place or places within the limits of any local jurisdiction with such modifications or adaptations as may be necessary, and thereupon such Acts or enactments, as so modified and adapted, shall have effect in accordance with such Order as if they had been applied by the said Order.

4. This Order may be cited us "The Africa Order in Council, 1892." "The Africa Order in Council, 1889," and this Order may together be cited as "The Africa Orders in Council, 1889 and 1892."

And the Most Honourable the Marquis of Salisbury, K.G., and the Right Honourable Viscount Cross, G.C.B., two of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, are to give the necessary directions therein as to them may respectively appertain.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, June 15, 1892.

Expulsion of obnoxious foreigners from British Protectorates.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 8th April last, stating that, with reference to his other letter of the 8th April requesting our opinion upon the terms of a draft Order in Council having for its object, amongst other things, to extend various provisions of "The Africa Order in Council, 1889," including Part XIII, which had special reference to the deportation and removal of offenders, to subjects of States who were parties to the General Act of the Conference of Berlin signed in 1885, he was directed by your Lordship to call our attention to another question, of a somewhat analogous nature, which had in that connection also been under your Lordship's consideration.

That we should recollect that in his (Sir Thomas Sanderson's) letter of the 14th July last a draft Convention between Great Britain and Germany was referred to us, which had for its object the establishment of a system of extradition between German Protectorates on the one hand, and the United Kingdom and the British Colonies and possessions abroad on the other.

That, owing to legal difficulties it had been considered that such an arrangement could not be made to include the surrender of fugitive criminals who had taken refuge in a British Protectorate, and who might be claimed for extradition either to Germany or to a German Protectorate.

That the subject was becoming, nevertheless, of great and growing practical importance, owing to the existence in Africa of vast areas under British protection, which, for various reasons, and especially on account of the slavery difficulty, could not be placed under the direct sovereignty of the Queen.

That those British Protectorates were conterminous with the Protectorates of other Powers, notably of Germany, and that, without some provision for the extradition of fugitive criminals, the administration of justice in those vast regions must be seriously crippled.

That the comity of nations appeared to require that territories under British protection should not be suffered to become a refuge for malefactors of all descriptions and nationalities who might escape from neighbouring territories under the protection of other Powers.

That, in view of the difficulties which appeared to exist in the way of extending the operation of our Extradition Treaties so as to include the surrender of fugitive criminals by British Protectorates, it had been suggested that it might be possible to empower British Consuls in such territories to exercise a summary power of expulsion in regard to persons considered dangerous to public peace and good order. That such power would appear to exist already in India, both in regard to British Indian territory, and in regard to native-protected States under the circumstances and conditions stated in the inclosed letter from the India Office of the 20th January, 1891. That it existed also in Cyprus under the Ordinance of the 17th February, 1879.

Cyprus Ordinance, February 17, 1879.

That if Her Majesty's Consuls were empowered to pursue that course in cases where a fugitive criminal from the Protectorate of any foreign Power should take refuge in a British Protectorate, due notice might be given as to the time and place of expulsion, so as to insure that the fugitive should come into the hands of the authorities of the foreign Protectorate whence he had escaped.

That, moreover, in case we should be of opinion that there were difficulties in the way of the deportation of foreigners by means of a jurisdictional Order in Council, which question was referred to us in Sir Thomas Sanderson's other letter of the 8th April, some mode of expulsion might possibly be substituted with convenience for such deportation.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether it would be proper to make arrangements for the expulsion from British Protectorates of persons considered dangerous to public peace and good order; and, if so, whether it would be possible to make the necessary arrangements without fresh Parliamentary legislation.

Further, if no fresh Parliamentary legislation was required, whether the proper course would be to proceed by means of an Order in Council, a local Ordinance or Regulation, or a Proclamation to be made by Her Majesty's Consular officers, with the approval of Her Majesty's Secretary of State, or by any other, and what, means.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Fresh Parliamentary legislation necessary for expulsion of obnoxious foreigners from British Protectorates.

That, in our opinion, the arrangements necessary for expelling from British Protectorates persons considered dangerous to public peace and good order cannot be made without fresh Parliamentary legislation.

We have indicated in our Report (marked A) of this date the means by which the desired object can alone be effected.

We have, &c.

Claim of Messrs. Shanks and Co. against Argentine Govt. for value of steam-launch pressed into the Govt. service during the revolution in July 1890.

That the case was first brought to the notice of Her Majesty's Legation in September 1890, and that representations were then made to the Argentine Government without any result.

That in February of this year fuller particulars of the seizure of the vessel and of the action of the Argentine authorities were furnished by Messrs. Shanks and Co. to Her Majesty's Minister.

That, from the account given in Mr. Pakenham's despatch No. 9 of the 29th February last, it appeared that the launch was ordered in England by Messrs. Shanks and Co. for an Argentine customer, who paid 1,000 dollars in gold (200*l.*) when he gave the order. That the cost of the launch in England was 1,000*l.*, the amount now claimed by the firm being 10,000 dollars (2,000*l.*).

That when the vessel arrived at Buenos Ayres it was taken up the river to San Fernando, a place about 12 miles above the capital. That at the time of the revolution in July 1890 the launch was seized, apparently by the orders of the National Government, though the evidence was conflicting as to whether the Argentine Admiral himself directly issued the instructions. That after about ten days, the revolution being over, the vessel appeared to have been put back by the Government authorities at San Fernando.

That on the 10th September the representative of Messrs. Shanks and Co. first brought the matter to the notice of Her Majesty's Legation, stating that the Commissioners appointed by the Government for the consideration of claims had refused to entertain the case, and that the firm had not only lost the sale of the launch, but was about to be sued for non-fulfilment of contract by the customer for whom it was brought.

That Messrs. Shanks, it seemed, were well aware that the launch had been returned to San Fernando, and had even sent down one of their employés privately to examine it, by whom the vessel was reported to be in an unsaleable condition. But that since the return of the launch had not been notified to them, they preferred to leave her where she was, and to sue the Government for her loss, the authorities having denied all knowledge of the whereabouts of the vessel.

That the steps taken by the firm to obtain the recognition of their claim, and the dilatory action of the Argentine authorities in the matter, were described in Messrs. Shanks' letter to Mr. Pakenham of the 30th January, 1892. That they had, it appeared, been advised by their lawyers that no legal action could be taken against the Argentine Government without the consent of Congress; and that, as it would have been impossible for them to obtain such consent, they were practically debarred of any legal remedy.

That the case had accordingly only been dealt with by various Departments of the Government, and that on the 8th February last Mr. Pakenham was informed by the Argentine Foreign Minister that the matter did not call for diplomatic intervention.

* Mr. Pakenham, No. 13, March 31, 1891; ditto, No. 9, February 29, 1892.

1892

That in a further letter to Mr. Pakenham (dated the 20th February) Messrs. Shanks referred to an "Expediente," containing all the documents connected with the case. That notes of that paper were given in Inclosure 15 in Mr. Pakenham's letter of the 29th February, and that attention was drawn to the admission contained in it that the launch was seized in accordance with instructions given by the officials of the Government.

That it further appeared from Messrs. Shanks' letter that so many further formalities, including a possible reference to arbitration, were required, that the prospect of the claimants obtaining redress was very remote and uncertain.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to what steps, if any, might properly be taken with regard to the case by Her Majesty's Government on behalf of Messrs. Shanks.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

Claim should not be pressed upon Argentine Govt.

That, in our opinion, the claim of Messrs. Shanks and Co. is not one which Her Majesty's Government can properly press upon the Government of the Argentine Republic.

The loss which is now complained of, and placed at an extravagant amount, was caused by the improper conduct of Messrs. Shanks themselves. Upon learning that the vessel had been removed, they should have claimed its return, and they might then have been entitled to a nominal sum for the interference with their property. They, however, chose immediately to send in a claim for the value of the launch, and, although a few days later they knew she had been returned to the place from which she was taken, and that she was at their disposal, they chose to abandon her in the hope of being able to get a sum of money from the Argentine Government.

It is not, in our opinion, likely that any legal Tribunal would, in these circumstances, hold that Government responsible for the value of the launch.

No. 4.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received December 5.)

Royal Courts of Justice, December 3, 1892.

My Lord,

Alleged ill-treatment of British subjects on Argentine men-of-war.

That those men appeared before Her Majesty's Consul at Cadiz, and lodged their complaint, at the same time stating that other British seamen had been subjected to similar ill-treatment, some of whom were still on board the Argentine vessels, while others had taken opportunities to desert, in order to escape further ill-usage.

That the depositions of Lawson and Delmado, and other information respecting the incident, would be found in the despatches from Her Majesty's Consul at Cadiz (Nos. 34 and 35 of the 21st and 26th October), which were inclosed.

That those papers were at once communicated to Señor Dominguez, the Argentine Minister at this Court, with an intimation that Her Majesty's Government did not doubt that he would take measures for instituting a searching examination into the grave charges which had been brought against the Argentine Naval officers.

That on the 5th instant the Argentine Minister replied, denying that any cruelty had been inflicted on the British seamen, and, at the same time, pointing out that the two men specially referred to were engaged at Buenos Ayres, by their own wish, to serve in the Argentine navy, and that no pressure or force of any kind was employed by the Argentine authorities to induce them to do so.

That according to the laws and constitution of the Argentine Republic any Argentine citizen who entered the military service of a foreign country lost ipso facto his Argentine citizenship, and became subject to the laws of the country which employed and paid him.

That he, the Argentine Minister, was informed that the laws of Great Britain contained the same provision in regard to British subjects who might be serving voluntarily in the army or navy of a foreign Government.

That no independent Government could take into its service foreign seamen or engineers, if the latter remained under the protection and observation of the Government of their native country, even after they had voluntarily given up their original nationality by taking service under a foreign Government.

That consequently that Lawson and Delmado, so long as they remained in the military service of the Argentine Republic, were under its flag and subject to its laws and military discipline, and that any complaints they might have to make should be addressed by them direct to the Argentine Government, in whose service they were.

That he, therefore, trusted that Her Majesty's Government would admit that those men were not British subjects while engaged in the Argentine service. That Señor Dominguez' note was inclosed.

That with reference to the Argentine Minister's contention, your Lordship was not aware of any English law now in force, which provided that a British subject serving in the army or navy of a foreign Government lost his British nationality.

That it would be noticed that Señor Dominguez did not assert, in so many words, that a subject of a foreign State on taking service with the military or naval forces of the Argentine Republic became ipso facto an Argentine citizen.

That it was, however, considered that, although it was expressed in somewhat different terms, his contention practically did amount, or was at any rate intended to amount, to such an assertion.

That in support, moreover, of that view, it would be noticed that Señor Dominguez, in dealing with the converse case of an Argentine citizen taking service with the forces of a foreign State, said in terms that such citizen lost ipso facto his Argentine citizenship, &c.

"Naturalization Act, 1870."

That it was suggested, in so far as English municipal law bears upon the point, that if a British subject, with full knowledge of the law of a particular foreign State, did an act, which amounted by the law of that State to an assumption of nationality, it was a question whether he might not be voluntarily naturalizing himself as a subject or citizen of that State within the meaning of "The Naturalization Act, 1870," and so might cease to be a British subject.

That, on the other hand, if such British subject had no notice or knowledge of the consequences of his act, his action could perhaps scarcely be described as a voluntary renunciation of his British nationality.

That that point had, however, so far as your Lordship was aware, never been decided by a Court of Law, nor were there, to your Lordship's knowledge, any opinions emanating from a judicial source upon the question.

That a somewhat analogous case occurred, however, in 1890, in connection with a new Naturalization Law, which was brought forward by the Brazilian Government. That that Law provided that foreigners residing in the Empire for the period of two consecutive years, who within six months therefrom, and after the promulgation of the Law, did not declare their desire to retain their nationality, should, for all legal purposes, be considered Brazilian subjects as if they had been born in Brazil.

That that question was referred to the Law Officers of the Crown, who reported (amongst other things not material to the present purpose) that Her Majesty's Government were not called upon, from the point of view of international right, to protest against the proposed Law of the 21st September, 1889, and that, in their opinion, a person who, with notice of the Law, and an opportunity of making the declaration therein mentioned, abstained from making such declaration, would be properly held to have voluntarily become naturalized in Brazil within section 6 of the Act of 1870, and to have thereby lost his status as a British subject (Law Officers, Brazil, No. 3 of 1890, 11th February).

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion generally on the contention of the Argentine Minister, and also more particularly upon the questions indicated in paragraphs 14 and 15 of his letter.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

As to the subject of a foreign State, on taking service with the military or naval forces of the Argentine Republic, becoming ipso facto an Argentine citizen.

That the Argentine Minister does not state that service by a foreigner in the army or navy of the Republic would, by Argentine law, make such foreigner an Argentine citizen. But even if it were so it would not, ipso facto, according to our law cause him to cease to be a subject of the Crown, or deprive him of the right to its protection.

To deprive him of the character of a subject of the Crown he must have become "voluntarily naturalized" within the meaning of section 6 of the Act of 1870, and he may become so "voluntarily naturalized" either by taking formal steps for his naturalization, or by acting in a manner which, by the law of the foreign State, makes him a subject of that State, but in the latter case he must have acted with knowledge of the consequences which his acts, according to the law of the foreign State, entailed.

In the present case it is to be noted, first, that it is not stated that by Argentine law service in its army or navy effects such naturalization; and, secondly, that, even if the Argentine law did so operate, it does not appear that the operation of that law was known to the men in question.

It follows from this statement that the men remained subjects of the Crown.

The question that remains is a question of policy for your Lordship: How far it is expedient, or indeed possible, in the case of men who voluntarily accept service, with all its risks, in the armies or navies of foreign States, to make their complaints the subject of possible international difference?

It is to be remembered that if this is done in the case of British subjects it may equally be done by their respective Governments in the case of foreigners who have voluntarily accepted service in the army or navy of the Queen.

Copyright Convention. Austro-Hungarian counter draft.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. H. Sanderson's letter of the 2nd ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 22nd July last, Sir T. H. Sanderson had by your Lordship's direction, to state that the Austro-Hungarian Government, to whom the draft Copyright Convention proposed by Her Majesty's Government was submitted, had forwarded, for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government, a counter-draft, of which a translation was inclosed (Paper A).

That Sir T. H. Sanderson was to request our opinion whether the Austrian counter-draft, with the amendments shown in red ink, which were explained in the annexed Memorandum (Paper B), and which had been approved by the Board of Trade, might properly be accepted by Her Majesty's Government.

That for convenience of reference the draft Convention originally proposed by Her Majesty's Government, and approved by us, was annexed (Paper C), and Sir T. H. Sanderson was to add that your Lordship would be glad to accept the Austrian proposal as nearly in its present shape as could properly be done, having regard to the legal considerations involved.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to

Report—

Approve Austro-Hungarian counter-draft as amended.

That the draft Convention, as amended and initialled by us, may properly be accepted by Her Majesty's Government. We presume that the question of carrying the arrangements with Austria into effect under the Berne Convention and the Act of 1886 has been fully considered. We are not prepared to say that it is not competent to Her Majesty to issue an Order in Council under the earlier Acts, but the clear intention of the Act of 1886 was to provide that all subsequent international copyright arrangements should be carried out under the conditions of that Statute.

Proposed Copyright Convention with Austria-Hungary.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 17th instant, stating that with reference to our predecessors' Report of the 9th June last, respecting the proposed Copyright Convention between Great Britain and Austria-Hungary, he was directed to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Vienna, inclosing a copy of a note from the Austro-Hungarian Government suggesting certain modifications in the English text of the draft Convention.

That the amendments in question were shown in red ink on the accompanying draft, and that Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the Convention (including those amendments) might be properly signed on behalf of Her Majesty.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to add that, as the actual text of the Convention had now been agreed to by the Austro-Hungarian Government, and as the Convention would cover important British interests, it was very desirable that no further amendments should be suggested unless such were imperatively required in view of the existing provisions of English municipal law upon the subject.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to inclose copies of correspondence in print, and that he was to call our special attention to Nos. 31, 32, and 33 of the same.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Approve draft Convention as amended.

That in our opinion the draft Convention, as now amended, may properly be accepted and signed on behalf of Her Majesty.

Draft Copyright Convention with Austria.

His Majesty the Emperor of Austria, King of Bohemia, &c., and Apostolic King of Hungary, ~~&c.~~, and Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India, &c., animated with the desire to secure in the most complete manner, within their respective dominions, the rights of authors, or their legal representatives, over their literary or artistic works, have resolved to conclude a Convention to that effect, and have named as their Plenipotentiaries, that is to say:

His Majesty the Emperor of Austria, King of Bohemia, &c., and Apostolic King of Hungary, ~~&c.~~:

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India, &c.,

Who, having communicated to each other their respective Full Powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

Authors of literary or artistic works and their legal representatives, including publishers, shall enjoy reciprocally, in the dominions of the High Contracting Parties, the advantages which are, or may be, granted by law there for the protection of works of literature or art.

Consequently, authors of literary or artistic works which have been first published in the dominions of one of the High Contracting Parties, as well as their legal representatives, shall have in the dominions of the other High Contracting Party the same protection and the same legal remedy against all infringement of their rights as if the work had been first published in the country where the infringement may have taken place.

In the same manner, the authors of literary or artistic works, and their legal representatives, who are subjects of one of the High Contracting Parties, or who reside within its dominions, shall in the dominions of the other Contracting Party enjoy the same protection and the same legal remedies against all infringements of their rights as though they were subjects of or residents in the State in which the infringement may have taken place.

These advantages shall only be reciprocally guaranteed to authors and their legal representatives when the work in question is also protected by the laws of the State where the work was first published, and the duration of protection in the other country shall not exceed that which is granted to authors and their legal representatives in the country where the work was first published.

ARTICLE II.

The right of translation forming part of the copyright, the protection of the right of translation is assured under the conditions laid down by this Convention. If ten years after the expiry of the year in which a work to be protected in Her Majesty's dominions on the basis of this Convention has appeared, no translation in English has been published, the right of translating the work into English shall no longer within those dominions exclusively belong to the author.

In the case of a book published in numbers the aforesaid period of ten years shall commence at the end of the year in which each number is ~~produced~~ published.

ARTICLE III.

Authorized translations are protected as original works. They consequently enjoy the full protection granted by this Convention against the unauthorized reproduction of original works.

It is understood that in the case of a work for which the translating right has fallen into the public domain, the translator cannot oppose the translation of the same work by other writers.

ARTICLE IV.

The expression "literary or artistic works" comprehends books, pamphlets, and all other writings; dramatic or dramatico-musical works, musical compositions, with or without words; works of design, painting, sculpture, and engraving, lithographs, illustrations, geographical charts, plans, sketches, and plastic works relating to geography, topography, architecture or science, in general; in fact, every production whatsoever in the literary, scientific, or artistic domain which can be published by any mode of impression or reproduction.

ARTICLE V.

In the British Empire, and in the Kingdoms and States represented in the Austrian Reichsrath, the enjoyment of the rights secured by the present Convention is subject only to the accomplishment of the conditions and formalities prescribed by the law ~~in~~ of that ~~one of the two Contracting~~ State~~s~~ in which the work is first ~~produced~~ published; and no further formalities or conditions shall be required in the other country.

Consequently, it shall not be necessary that a work which has obtained legal protection in one country should be registered, or copies thereof deposited in the other country, in order that the remedies against infringement may be obtained which are granted in the other country to works first ~~produced~~ published there.

In the dominions of the Hungarian Crown the enjoyment of these rights is subject, however, to the accomplishment of the conditions and formalities prescribed by the Laws and Regulations both of Great Britain and of Hungary.

ARTICLE VI.

In order that the authors of works protected by the present Convention shall, in the absence of proof to the contrary, be considered as such, and be, consequently, admitted to institute proceedings in respect of the infringement of copyright before the Courts of the other State, it will suffice that their name be indicated on the work in the accustomed manner.

The Tribunals may, however, in cases of doubt, require the production of such further evidence as may be required by the Laws of the respective countries.

For anonymous or pseudonymous works, the publisher whose name is indicated on the work is entitled to protect the rights belonging to the author. He is without other proof, reputed the legal representative of the anonymous or pseudonymous author, until the latter or his legal representative has declared and proved his rights.

ARTICLE VII.

The provisions of the present Convention cannot in any way derogate from the right of each of the High Contracting Parties to control, or to prohibit by measures of domestic legislation or police, the circulation, representation, exhibition, or sale of any work or production.

Each of the High Contracting Parties reserves also its right to prohibit the importation into its own territory of works which, according to its internal Laws, or to the stipulations of Treaties with other States, are or may be declared to be illicit reproductions.

ARTICLE VIII.

The provisions of the present Convention shall be applied to literary or artistic works produced prior to the date of its coming into effect, subject, however, to the limitations prescribed by the following Regulations:—

(a.) In the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy—

Copies completed before the coming into force of the present Convention, the production of which has been hitherto allowed, can also be circulated in future.

In the same manner, appliances for the reproduction of works, such as stereotypes, wood-blocks, and engraved plates of every description, such as lithograpers' stones, if their production has not hitherto been prohibited may continue to be used during a period of four years from the coming into force of the present Convention.

The distribution of such copies, and the use of the said appliances, is, however, only permitted if an inventory of the said copies and appliances is taken by the Government in question, in consequence of an application of the interested party, within three months from the coming into force of the present Convention, and if these copies and appliances are marked with a special stamp.

Dramatic and dramatico-musical works, or musical compositions legally ~~produced~~ performed before the coming into force of the present Convention, can also be ~~produced~~ performed in the future.

(b.) In the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland the author and publisher of any literary or artistic work first produced before the date at which this Convention comes into effect shall be entitled to all legal remedies against infringement; provided that where any person has, before the date of the publication of the Order in Council putting this Convention into effect, lawfully produced any work in the United Kingdom, any rights or interests arising from or in connection with such production, which are subsisting and valuable at the said date, shall not be diminished or prejudiced.

ARTICLE IX.

The provisions of the present Convention shall apply to all the Colonies and foreign Possessions of Her Britannic Majesty, excepting to those hereinafter named, that is to say, except to—

India.
The Dominion of Canada.
Newfoundland.
The Cape.
Natal.
New South Wales.
Victoria.
Queensland.
Tasmania.
South Australia.
Western Australia.
New Zealand.

Provided always that the provisions of the present Convention shall apply to any of the above-named Colonies or foreign Possessions on whose behalf notice to that effect shall have been given by 1892

Her Britannic Majesty's Representative at Vienna within two years from the date of the exchange of ratifications of the present Convention.

ARTICLE X.

The present Convention shall remain in force for ten years from the day on which the ratifications are exchanged; and in case neither of the two High Contracting Parties shall have given notice twelve months before the expiration of the said period of ten years of their intention of terminating the present Convention, it shall remain in force until the expiration of one year from the day on which either of the High Contracting Parties shall have given such notice.

Her Britannic Majesty's Government shall also have the right to denounce the Convention, in the same manner, on behalf of any of the Colonies or foreign Possessions mentioned in Article IX, separately.

ARTICLE XI.

The present Convention shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Vienna as soon as possible. It shall come into effect ten days after its publication in conformity with the forms prescribed by the Laws of the High Contracting Parties respectively.

My Lord,

Claims for detention of vessels in Chilean harbours during the disturbances.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the question of the liability of the Chilean Government to meet claims made by British and German ship-owners on account of the detention of their vessels in Chilean harbours during the recent civil disturbances in Chile.

Treaty between Germany and Chile of February 1, 1862.

That it would be seen from the confidential communication from the German Embassy of the 13th February that the Imperial Government viewed the action taken by the late Chilean Government under President Balmaceda, with regard to the question under consideration, as amounting to an embargo upon the vessels, and consequently as an infraction of the XVIIIth Article of the Treaty between Germany and Chile of the 1st February, 1862, for which the actual Chilean Government, which had, since the date of the acts complained of, overthrown that of President Balmaceda, were bound to give compensation.

That the Chilean Government, on the other hand, apparently not only repudiated, on general grounds, all liability for the action of their predecessors in the matter, but also maintain that the particular interference with those vessels which was alleged did not, as a matter of fact, amount to "embargo," inasmuch as a general prohibition to leave port was not imposed upon the foreign ships, which were merely forbidden to clear for certain specified ports in Chile.

That it appeared from the first and third inclosures of Mr. Kennedy's despatch No. 72 of the 7th July last that the Chilean Government had communicated with Her Majesty's Minister to a similar effect.

That the contention of the Chilean Government was not acceptable to the Imperial German Government, and that the German Representative at Santiago was to receive instructions to protest against the interpretation which was placed on the Treaty.

That the German Government inquired whether Her Majesty's Government would not instruct their Representative at Santiago to make a similar protest which (assuming for the moment that the circumstances justified a protest on the part of the German Government) they would also appear to be entitled to proffer under Article XVII of the Treaty between Great Britain and Chile of the 4th October, 1854.

That despatches had lately been received from Her Majesty's Minister at Santiago from which might be gathered the general line that the Chilean Government were likely to maintain in regard to foreign claims arising out of the recent political disturbances.

That your Lordship was desirous of co-operating with the German Government, and also of supporting British claimants in so far as you could do so without infringing the principles of international law, but that your Lordship was in some doubt how far the proposed protest of that Government was, under the circumstances, justifiable.

That, with special reference to that point, Sir Thomas Sanderson was to draw our particular attention to our Report of the 5th May last, and to the terms of a telegram which was subsequently addressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Santiago.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our views as to what answer should be returned to the inquiry made by the Imperial German Government, and also with any observations which we might desire to offer upon the general question involved.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

H.M.'s Govt. would not be justified in supporting the German protest.

That we see no reason to change the opinion expressed in our Report of the 5th May last that the action of the late Chilean Government in refusing clearances for certain ports did not amount to an infraction of the XVIIth Article of the Treaty of 1854, and that Her Majesty's Government would not be justified in supporting the protest which the German Representative at Santiago is to be instructed to make.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery—(Received November 4.)

My Lord,

Nitrate Railways Chile. Question between the Company and Chilean Government.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 13th September last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Mr. Budd, written on behalf of the Nitrate Railway Company, and relating to a question which had arisen between that Company and the Chilean Government in regard to the infraction on the part of the latter of the exclusive privileges which it was alleged were vested in the Company for the construction of railways in the nitrate districts of Tarapacá.

That the question, in its various phases, had already been submitted to the late Law Officers of the Crown on three previous occasions, and that the Reports furnished by them were inclosed for our information.

That the course to be taken by Her Majesty's Government depended upon two points: (1) whether the action of the Chilean Council of State and Executive in declaring the exclusive privileges of the Company to be forfeited, and inviting tenders for new railways was Constitutional and legal according to Chilean law; (2) whether, if that were so, it was so contrary to practice and equity as to call for diplomatic remonstrance in the absence of legal remedy.

That it would be seen from the Report of the 14th May, 1891, that the Law Officers were then of opinion that Her Majesty's Minister at Santiago should not address any further remonstrance to the Chilean Government on the Company's behalf at that time, and considered that the final determination as to the propriety of further diplomatic action should be postponed until the legal proceedings before the Chilean Tribunals came to an end.

That it appeared from a recent despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Santiago (Mr. Maude, No. 66, of the 10th July), and from Mr. Budd's letter, that the Supreme Court of Chile had again affirmed its competence to entertain the matter, and that a further suit was being instituted by the Company for the defence of its rights.

But that Mr. Maude stated that, although it was understood that the present Government of Chile would not grant any new Concession, so long as the term of the Railway Company's exclusive right was unexpired and the matter remained sub judice, a Decree had been issued approving plans for the construction of an inclined plane from Junin to the heights, and a line of railway to connect the inclined plane with nitrate oficinas.

That the Directors of the Nitrate Railway Company consequently expressed their hope that Her Majesty's Government would address a protest to the Government of Chile against that measure.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers mentioned above into our consideration, together with those enumerated in the accompanying list, which were also inclosed, and would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the action of the Government of Chile, as described in Mr. Budd's letter, called for a remonstrance to them by Her Majesty's Government, and, if so, in what terms that remonstrance should be couched.

That your Lordship would also be glad to be favoured with our opinion on the questions submitted in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Further diplomatic action should not be taken yet.

That, in our opinion, nothing has taken place since the Report of the Law Officers dated the 14th May, 1891, which ought to lead Her Majesty's Government to depart from the decision then arrived at, namely, to defer the consideration of the question of the propriety of further diplomatic action until the legal proceedings before the Chilean Tribunals have come to an end.

No. 10.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received June 28.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, June 27, 1892.

Sentence on C. Mason for offence against "Explosives Act, 1883," considered inadequate by Chinese Government.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the case of a British subject named Charles A. W. Mason, an employé of the Chinese Customs, who was arrested in September last on suspicion of being concerned in a treasonable conspiracy against the Government of China, and was indicted and sentenced in Her Majesty's Supreme Court at Shanghae for an offence against the "Explosives Act, 1883" (46 Vict., cap. 3) in having dynamite in his possession for an unlawful purpose.

That your Lordship's attention was first called to the matter by a communication last autumn from the Chinese Legation in London in connection with the correspondence that was then taking place in regard to the anti-foreign movement in China.

That it was stated that the Customs authorities at Shanghae had seized thirty-five boxes of foreign rifles, which were being clandestinely passed into the interior of China.

That those arms, which were intended for the use of a Secret Society, came from Hong Kong, and were consigned to a British subject occupying the position of Assistant Commissioner of Customs (in the service of the Chinese Government) at the port of Chin-Kiang, in whose baggage had been found a quantity of a strong explosive, and who was concerned in the affair with other foreigners residing in the American settlement at Shanghae.

That, at the request of the Chinese Government, instructions were sent to the Officer administering the Government of Hong Kong to take precautions against the clandestine shipment of arms to China for possible use by rioters and insurgents.

That a Proclamation was accordingly issued at Hong Kong, and had since been renewed until the 30th September next, temporarily prohibiting the export of arms and munitions of war from the Colony.

That the proceedings against Mason on the charge named above resulted in a sentence of nine months' imprisonment, and of deportation at the end of that period, unless he could find two sureties of 2,500 dollars each for his good behaviour.

That he was further sentenced to pay the expenses of his trial and imprisonment.

That reports of the preliminary examination and subsequent trial of Mason would be found in the despatches from Mr. Mowat Nos. 18 and 19 of the 18th and 30th September, Mr. Jamieson No. 21 of the 14th October, and from Mr. Hannen No. 23 of the 30th October, 1891.

That the sentence had caused great dissatisfaction to the Chinese Government, who instructed their Minister in London to protest against it, as being altogether incommensurate to the gravity of the offence, and to request that, on its expiration, Mason should be removed to Hong Kong, and there put on his trial for some one or more of the various other indictable offences with which they maintained he was chargeable.

That some preliminary observations in reply to that complaint were addressed by your Lordship to the Chinese Minister on the 23rd February last, and that the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court for China and Siam, and the Crown Advocate of the Court were requested to furnish your Lordship with their observations as to the criticisms of the Yamên on the conduct of the trial, and their demands for a fresh trial at Hong Kong.

That their explanations would be found in Mr. Hannen's four despatches of the 6th, 7th, and 8th April.

That the Chief Justice also made some observations in regard to the arrest and torture by the Chinese authorities of Mason's servants and others, whose names were mentioned by the prisoner, and who were supposed to be connected with the Secret Society known as the "Kolao-Hwei."

That a further representation (dated the 14th May) had been received from the Chinese Minister renewing his demand for a fresh prosecution of Mason after the expiration of his present sentence, so as at least to secure his deportation from China.

That your Lordship proposed to address to Sieh Ta-jên the note, of which a draft was inclosed, dealing with the criticisms on the conduct of the prosecution, and on the nature and amount of the sentence, and also with the request for further proceedings.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion—

1. Whether, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, the sentence in question was appropriate and adequate to the offence, or might with advantage have been increased.

2. Whether the proposed note to the Chinese Minister was right and proper in its terms, or should in any part be altered or supplemented.

3. Whether any further action on the part of Her Majesty's Government was at present called for.

That your Lordship would, at the same time, be glad to be favoured with any observations of a general nature which we might have to offer on the papers.

We were also honoured with a further letter from Sir Thomas Sanderson, dated the 23rd instant, transmitting a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Peking,* inclosing a translation of a Memorial published in the "Peking Gazette" in connection with the trial and execution of members of the Secret Society known as the "Kolao-Hwei."

As that Memorial contained an allusion to the evidence stated to have been obtained against C. W. Mason, your Lordship desired that we should take it into consideration with the previous correspondence in relation to Mason's case.

We have taken all the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Sentence adequate. Approve note to Chinese Minister.

That we see no reason for believing that the sentence was inadequate to the offence; and that, in our opinion, the proposed note to the Chinese Minister is right and proper in its terms and requires no addition.

We are also of opinion that no further action on the part of Her Majesty's Government is at present called for.

We have, &c.

Draft of Letter from the Marquis of Salisbury to Sieh Ta-jên.

Foreign Office, July , 1892.

M. le Ministre,

Referring to your note of the 11th February last, and to my reply of the 23rd of that month, relative to the trial of the British subject, Charles A. W. Mason, before Her Britannic Majesty's Supreme Court at Shanghae, I have the honour to inform you that I have now received the observations of the Chief Justice of that Court and of the Crown Advocate in reply to the criticisms of your Government as to the manner in which the case was conducted, and the lightness of the sentence inflicted on the prisoner.

It will be desirable, for the sake of clearness, that I should give at full length the material portions of the statement furnished by the Crown Advocate. He writes as follows:—

"My official connection with the case began strictly on Sunday, the 27th September last, when Mr. Mowat, then Her Majesty's Acting Consul-General at Shanghae, showed me a telegram which he had received from Her Majesty's Minister directing the institution of proceedings through the Crown Advocate against Mason, and recommending that the charge should be laid under the Explosives Act, if Mr. Mowat thought that Act applicable, and otherwise under Article 81 of "The China and Japan Order in Council, 1865," which would, however, Her Majesty's Minister remarked, have the disadvantage of involving the risk of contentious matter as to the meaning of the words 'war,' 'insurrection,' and 'rebellion' used in that Article.

"When I received these instructions Mason was already in custody. The day before an information, under section 4 of the Explosives Act, had been sworn by Mr. Robert Edward Bredon, the Commissioner of the Imperial Chinese Maritime Customs at Shanghae, and by Mr. C. C. Yu, the Deputy for Foreign Affairs, to the Imperial Commissioner of Southern Trade (the Viceroy at Nanking), and Mason had been arrested on the charge under a warrant issued by the Supreme Court, and was to be brought up for examination on the following (Monday) morning.

"I at once placed myself in communication with Mr. Bredon, and informed him of the instructions which I had received. He informed me that the Deputy had been acting under the advice of counsel, and he thought the Deputy and the other Chinese authorities would desire that the same counsel should continue to take part in the prosecution. I explained to Mr. Bredon that there was no difficulty in this being done, as such a case was provided for under Rule 4 of the 2nd January, 1879, and Mr. Bredon was to see the Chinese authorities, and inform me of what they wished done in the matter.

"The subject of the nature of the charge was referred to, and Mr. Bredon informed me that they had been advised by counsel that no prosecution could be successfully carried on under Article 81 of the Order in Council in the absence of sufficient evidence of the existence of an insurrection.

"The same evening I received from Mr. Bredon a note, saying, 'Since seeing you we have decided to leave the Mason prosecution entirely in your hands,' and informing me that he would call with his witnesses at my office at 9 the following morning.

"Mr. Bredon called as arranged, and brought with him the Viceroy's Deputy, and during the further conduct of the case I was in constant communication with both Mr. Bredon and the Deputy, and received from them, I believe, all the information they could give me.

"I obtained a remand until Monday, the 5th October. The examination then began, and was continued, with intermissions, till Monday, the 12th October, when Mason was committed for trial.

"The trial was fixed for the 29th October, and up to the day of the trial, besides carefully examining the documents and verbal information supplied to me by Mr. Bredon and the Deputy, I pursued independent inquiries, but I found nothing to aggravate the case as disclosed in the depositions.

"When after Mason had pleaded guilty I was called upon by the Chief Justice to make any observations I thought right upon the evidence disclosed in the depositions, and upon the statement made by the prisoner, I endeavoured to do so in the spirit of fairness in which, it is recognized, Crown prosecutions ought to be conducted. What I said is fairly well reported in the 'North China Herald' of the 30th October.

"The Viceroy's Deputy some time after the trial called upon me and said that the whole of the proceedings, including my speech, having been reported to the Viceroy, he was commissioned by his Excellency to thank me for the trouble I had taken in the case, and to say that, while he demurred to the lightness of the sentence which had been passed, he approved of the remarks which I had made at the trial.

"That the Deputy correctly interpreted the sentiments of the Viceroy appeared from a further communication which I received. Mr. Bredon called upon me and informed me that the Taotai, having been instructed by the Viceroy to make to me some recognition of my services, had consulted him in the matter. Mr. Bredon had told the Taotai that he was quite sure of one thing, that I would accept nothing that was of any pecuniary value, and he had suggested, if I would accept them, that he should present me with a pair of complimentary scrolls. The Taotai had accordingly asked him to see me and ascertain my wishes.

"I told Mr. Bredon that he had accurately represented my views in saying that I would not accept anything of pecuniary value, and that even with regard to the scrolls I felt a hesitation in accepting them, as, while fully appreciating the kind intentions of the Viceroy, and while feeling gratified that my conduct of the case had met with his Excellency's approval, I had only done my duty; and that as I was bound to do that, independently of the view which his Excellency might take, my accepting of anything whatever might give rise to a false impression. I said, however, that I would consult the Chief Justice and Assistant Judge, and be guided by their opinion. I did so, and it appearing to them right that I should accept a testimonial which was of itself of no pecuniary value, but which would be evidence of the approval of the Chinese authorities of the action of the executive officer charged with a matter of international importance, I informed Mr. Bredon of the pleasure which it would give me to accept the scrolls, and I have since been (unofficially) informed that they are being prepared.

"I shall now proceed to deal with the criticisms of the Tsung-li Yamên as contained in the note from Sieh Ta-jên.

"The Minister says: 'In the opinion of my' (the Chinese) 'Government, neither the Judge nor the Crown Advocate seemed to realize the importance of the case, or to feel the responsibility imposed on them by the vicarious function devolving on the Crown, in virtue of British subjects residing in China being the objects of an extra-territorial jurisdiction.'

"It does not appear to me that I am called upon to say anything with regard to the action of the Chief Justice who presided at the trial. The diversity of views taken by Judges as to the proper amount of punishment to be awarded under the most similar circumstances is too well known to make any opinion of the counsel engaged in a case of any great value as against the view of the Judge to whom the measure of punishment is always the subject of the most anxious and conscientious consideration.

"With regard to my own action, I can say most truly that I was deeply impressed with the importance of the case, and with the more than usual responsibility imposed upon me by its international character, and I was most anxious that the obligations towards the Chinese Government involved in the circumstance of British subjects being the objects of an extra-territorial jurisdiction should be fully discharged, and while I was more solicitous that the duties of my position should be properly performed than that the performance of them should meet with the approval of the Chinese Government, I was very pleased to have the assurance of such approval from the Viceroy, who from his position was fully authorized to give it.

"I might allow the matter thus to rest, and leave it to the Chinese Minister to explain how my action, which had already been approved in the most flattering manner by the Viceroy, should now be made by him the subject of complaint.

"As the Minister has, however, given some reasons for the opinion he has stated, it may be as well that I should deal with them.

"The Minister, after stating what he conceives were the facts disclosed by the depositions, which he refers to as a 'wealth of material for an indictment,' and 'a wealth which would have increased had the case been probed,' complains that 'the prisoner was indicted only for a breach of the Explosive Substances Act, and then only under section 4, when he might also have been indicted for the graver offence described under section 3 of the same Act, and under section 81, "China and Japan Order in Council, 1865," for aiding and abetting insurrection and rebellion against His Majesty the Emperor of China. But instead of being arraigned on these counts, and perhaps also for a breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act, he was indicted only for having dynamite in his possession.'

"Her Majesty's Secretary of State, in his note to the Chinese Minister of the 23rd February, has so fully disposed of the suggestion that the prisoner could have been indicted under section 3 of the Explosives Act, or under the Foreign Enlistment Act, that it is unnecessary that I should say anything further on these points.

"His Lordship has also pointed out the consideration which rendered an indictment under Article 81 of the China and Japan Order in Council superfluous.

"But I may also draw attention to the circumstance already mentioned, that before I assumed charge of the prosecution the question of the preferring of a charge under the Order in Council had received the fullest consideration from the Chinese authorities concerned, and that, acting upon the opinion of their counsel, they had deliberately arrived at the conclusion that such a charge could not be laid with any chance of success, and that it must therefore be abandoned.

"Even if I had not concurred in the view taken by them, I should have incurred a very serious responsibility if I had, in disregard of their opinion, preferred such a charge and run the risk of an acquittal. To have done so would have been the more inexcusable in view of the circumstance pointed out by Her Majesty's Secretary of State that an indictment under the Order would not have aggravated the offence with which the prisoner was charged, nor tended to increase the punishment awarded.

"The Minister in making his complaint must, I conceive, have been acting in ignorance of what his own authorities had done in the matter; but if he had only carefully considered the grounds which he urged for preferring a charge under the Order in Council, and which he calls a wealth of material, he might have realized the difficulty which impressed itself on them when they decided to abandon such a charge.

"It was by reason of their being unprepared to give evidence of the existence of rebellion or insurrection that the Chinese authorities felt themselves constrained to abandon their first intention of charging an offence under the Order.

"And there was no want of probing the evidence. There being no independent evidence forthcoming as to what the Kolao Hwei Society really was, the Chinese authorities were so anxious to obtain information from Mason that they at first decided not to prosecute him, but promised him immunity if he would only tell them all he knew. This was done at an examination of Mason held at the Custom-house before the Taotai and two Commissioners of Customs on the 16th September, ten days before the information was sworn against him. Mason then made certain statements with regard to the Society and his connection with it, and I was furnished with a Minute of them, but they could not be used in evidence, having been given under the promise of immunity.

"I compared them, however, most carefully with the evidence available. I also further examined Toussaint and the men he had engaged. I also examined Mason's bank account, and compared it with reports received through Mr. Bredon from Hong Kong, and I perused numerous other papers furnished to me, and, so far as I could probe the evidence, I did so. The conclusion I arrived at was that Mason's statements, so far as he pretended to know anything about the Kolao Hwei, were utterly untrustworthy, but that there was no improbability in one statement he had made, that he had expended no money but his own, and that he had received none from any Chinese organization.

"The results of my investigations on other points are reflected in my speech. I there stated the impression made upon me with regard to the Staff of the Maritime Customs. So far as regards the 'entourage of foreign Consulates,' not once during all the communications I had with the authorities was any suggestion made of the partizanship with the Kolao Hwei which is suggested by the Chinese Minister as a ground for more deterrent punishment, and not the smallest tittle of evidence of such a thing has ever been presented to me."

As regards the sentence inflicted by the Chief Justice, I may observe that it is not in accordance with constitutional practice in this country that a judicial officer should be called upon to render an account to the Executive Government of his action in his judicial capacity, it being of the essence of his office that it should be discharged with complete freedom from administrative interference.

The Chief Justice has, however, addresed to me a reply to the observations contained in your note in so far as they concern his decision in the case. He rightly remarks that some of those observations point to considerations by which he could not, and ought not, to be influenced in giving judgment. It is his duty to administer justice according to the best of his ability, without regard to the impression which his sentence may produce on his own Government or on the Government of any other country. It is the law of Great Britain which he has to administer, and he cannot properly take into account the punishments inflicted on the subjects of another country under a different system of jurisprudence for offences which may or may not be connected with that on which he is adjudicating. He had, of course, nothing to do with the framing of the indictment; all he could properly consider was the indictment as it was put before him, the depositions, the plea and remarks of the prisoner, and the speech of the Crown Advocate. Upon these materials he was of opinion that no conspiracy against the Chinese Government had been proved to exist, and he came to the conclusion that nine months' imprisonment in Shanghae, and deportation in default of substantial securities, was an adequate punishment.

He adds that he is still of opinion that the sentence which he passed met the justice of the case.

Upon the charge as brought before him there was no power to pronounce a sentence of absolute deportation, nor are there any means by which such a sentence could be obtained without a fresh trial. It is, however, his conviction that there need be no fear of Mason remaining in the country; that the idea that the Kolao Hwei, or any other Society in China, desires his presence there is purely chimerical, and that there is no chance of his finding the securities required, or of his even desiring to find them.

These latter views of the Chief Justice have received confirmation from recent investigations.

It has lately become matter of public report that Mason's servants, and other Chinese mentioned in the course of the inquiry concerning him, have been arrested, imprisoned, and subjected to cruel torture, with the object of obtaining evidence as to his accomplices. Mason was made aware of this fact, and his humanity was appealed to to say or do anything in his power to help them. He declared to several persons that all these men are entirely innocent so far as he knows, that the plot which was sketched out in his memoranda had no real existence, but was simply concocted by his fellow-messmate and himself for their own amusement, and that the names there inserted were so inserted simply because they were the names of persons they knew, and to give an air of reality to the scheme, but that the persons themselves were absolutely innocent and ignorant of any complicity in his design. He expressed his readiness to submit all his banking transactions to the inspection of the Chinese, in order to satisfy them that the funds for the purchase of arms were provided by himself.

The Taotai accordingly appointed a Deputy conversant with foreign book-keeping, and Mason's account with the Hong Kong and Shanghae Bank was examined, with the result, as is understood, that no trace of his having received money from a suspicious source was discovered, and that the money which he had expended was practically all accounted for.

The above explanations dispose by anticipation of a considerable portion of the arguments contained in your note of the 14th instant, which reached me shortly after the receipt of the despatches from Shanghae; I need not, therefore, trouble you with any very lengthy reply to them.

I entirely agree with you, that the point to which a foreign Government has to direct its attention in such a case is the question whether the punishment awarded has or has not been adequate. The details of the procedure by which the result has been attained are not matters which it is called upon, or, indeed, in many cases very competent, to discuss.

I may, therefore, be dispensed from examining in detail the arguments contained in your note as to the proper construction to be placed on certain provisions of English statute law, and the most effective manner of framing an indictment under them. My observations on these points were not offered without professional advice, and though they have not, unfortunately, recommended themselves to you, I find that they are confirmed by the opinion of the high legal authorities by whom Her Majesty's Government are advised in such matters. I am assured that such contentions as are advanced in your note would have no chance of acceptance by an English Court of Appeal, and that without some very material alteration in the political situation of China, of a nature which Her Majesty's Government are far from anticipating, it would be hopeless to argue that the Kolao Hwei can be considered a "foreign State" within the meaning of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

The material questions to be considered are, however, firstly, whether sufficient care and diligence were used in the investigation of the case and the preparation of the evidence for the prosecution; and, secondly, whether the sentence of the Judge was proportionate to the offence.

Upon the first of these points the statements contained in your note are diametrically opposed to the account given by the Crown Advocate, and to the expressed opinion of the Viceroy and the Chinese authorities on the spot. Until Her Majesty's Government receive some evidence to the contrary, they must be allowed to believe that the view of their officer so supported is the correct one.

As regards the sentence by the Judge, it is clear, as, indeed, it had been from the beginning, that it was pronounced under the settled and honest conviction that the proceedings of the prisoner, however formidable at first sight, were merely the outcome of a crazy imagination; that they would never have had any serious issue; and that the dynamite in his possession, though certainly not acquired with any lawful intent, would not in the event have been put to an unlawful use. I may remark, parenthetically, in reply to the hypothetical case put in your note, that if it had been so used there would have been no occasion to prosecute under the Explosives Act; the prisoner would have been indictable under the common law for attempt to murder, or for the crime of murder itself if loss of life had unfortunately ensued.

I must be allowed to express my dissent from your statement, that "Mason himself declared, and to the end never faltered in his declaration, that he was a member of a secret, illegal, and criminal association, styled 'Kolao Hwei.'" In the accounts of the public examination and trial, which are all that Her Majesty's Government possess, I find no record of such a declaration. It may possibly be said that his own statements and his observations reported by other witnesses amount to a declaration of some connection with that Society, and of communications with certain conspirators. But the statements are vague, mysterious, and contradictory, and it certainly cannot be said that he has unfalteringly adhered to any consistent explanation of his proceedings.

Her Majesty's Government have, moreover, no certain evidence or information as to the nature, proceedings, or objects of the Kolao Hwei, nor as to its connection or the connection of some of its members with the recent outbreaks against foreigners, or with any treasonable designs against the Chinese Government.

Such being the state of their information, as it undoubtedly was that of the Chief Justice, they are unable to say that the sentence pronounced by him was inadequate, or involved, as contended by the Yamên, a grave miscarriage of justice.

Nor do they see any prospect of obtaining evidence on which fresh proceedings could be instituted against Mason with any hope of success. If, however, as you intimate in your note, the Chinese Government consider that they are in possession of evidence of this description, Her Majesty's Government are willing to submit it to the examination of the Law Officers of the Crown, and to take their opinion whether it would justify a fresh prosecution, only premising—

Firstly, that such evidence must relate to the commission of some offence separate and distinct from that for which the prisoner has already been charged, and that the fresh indictment must not be for a subordinate offence comprised in the act for which he has already been sentenced. This is a distinction which does not seem to have been borne in mind in the allusion which you have made to the Tichborne case. In that instance the person Castro (more commonly known under the title of "The Claimant") was sentenced for two distinct acts of perjury committed on two distinct occasions, with an interval of three years between them, at two different places, and in two distinct legal proceedings.

It will therefore be seen that the circumstances of the case of Regina v. Castro afford no real analogy to those of that now under consideration.

Secondly, that the witnesses must be such as can be eventually produced for examination and cross-examination before a British jury, and that there must be no suspicion that their testimony has been obtained by torture or intimidation. Such a suspicion would render abortive any prosecution in an English Court, and, indeed, Her Majesty's Government could not accept themselves or allow their officers to use evidence so obtained.

Law Officers to Earl of Rosebery.—(Received September 13.)

[In answer to the following reference, the Law Officers reported on the 13th September, as on p. 23:—]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, September 8, 1892.

Outrage committed by Chinese soldiers near Kirin, in North China, on Dr. J. Greig, a medical missionary.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Rosebery, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to an outrage committed by Chinese soldiers near Kirin, in North China, on Dr. James Greig, a medical missionary serving under the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland.

The circumstances under which the outrage was committed will be found in the letter from the Rev. James Carson of the 17th August, 1891, marked No. 1, inclosed in Dr. Greig's letter of the 22nd ultimo (Paper K), and in the Memorandum inclosed with Sir J. Walsham's despatch No. 8 of the 23rd January last (Paper A).

It appears from the latter document that the Chinese corporal by whom Dr. Greig was assaulted had, under the orders of the Governor of Kirin, been punished with severe corporal chastisement, besides being cashiered and deprived of the allowances he received from Government; subsequently the Taotai at Newchwang reported to the Tsung-li Yamên that the corporal had been sentenced to banishment in the "t'u" degree, and the other culprits severely bambooed.

The question whether these sentences have been properly executed will have to be further investigated, but the matter upon which Lord Rosebery is desirous of obtaining your advice is the amount of compensation to be claimed from the Chinese Government on account of the injuries inflicted on Dr. Greig, which were of a somewhat serious character, and necessitated his returning to this country for the recovery of his health.

Sir J. Walsham reported on the 21st June that he had claimed 5,000 dollars as compensation for Dr. Greig; that this was considered by the Yamên to be too much, but that the amount was, in his opinion, very moderate, and he should press for it (Paper EE).

On his arrival in this country Dr. Greig presented his claim for indemnity on account of the outrage to which he had been subjected, under two heads, viz.: (1) 2,000*l.* as a personal indemnity, or 1,500*l.* if a piece of land was ceded to the Irish Presbyterian Mission for building a hospital and mission-houses; and (2) 983*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.* on account of the expenses entailed on him, as shown under the headings marked (a), (b), (c), and (d) of Inclosure 1 in paper marked (G).

Dr. Greig's letter was forwarded to Sir J. Walsham, with instructions to take such steps with regard to the compensation to be claimed for Dr. Greig as might seem to him, under all the circumstances, to be right and proper (Paper E).

Sir J. Walsham replied that the claim advanced by Dr. Greig greatly exceeded the amount which had been demanded from the Chinese Government, viz., 5,000 dollars (about 729*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*), and that the matter was complicated by mixing it up with that of the purchase of land for missionary purposes (Paper G).

The substance of Sir J. Walsham's observations was communicated to Dr. Greig, and he was informed that, in Lord Salisbury's opinion, the claim for salary and for expenses running on in China during his absence, specified in items (c) and (d) of the statement in his letter of the 11th April (Inclosure 7 in Paper K), did not appear to his Lordship to have a sufficiently direct connection with the outrage on Dr. Greig himself to justify their inclusion in a claim for compensation of this nature (Inclosure 12 in Paper K).

Dr. Greig, however, acting under the advice of his friends, objects to the amount of compensation claimed by Sir J. Walsham as inadequate (Paper I and Paper K, and Inclosure 13 in Paper K).

In a telegram dated the 10th August Sir J. Walsham stated that the amount of 5,000 dollars was intended to cover both a personal indemnity as well as such expense as might be considered by Dr. Greig or the Irish Presbyterian Mission to be due for the outrage (Paper J).

A Memorandum has been prepared in this Department giving a résumé of cases which have occurred in China since 1868, when compensation has been demanded for outrages committed on British subjects (Paper L).

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and favour Lord Rosebery with your opinion whether the claim of 5,000 dollars advanced by Her Majesty's Minister at Peking on behalf of Dr. Greig is adequate, or should be increased, and whether it would be right and proper to make any claim on behalf of the Irish Missionary Society for repayment of Dr. Greig's salary during the time he has been incapacitated, bearing in mind the fact that his employment is purely charitable and religious, and that it is not contended that any locum tenens had to be found during his absence from China.

Lord Rosebery will also be glad to be furnished with any general observations that you may have to offer on the case.

I am, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

Report.

Amount of compensation claimed by Sir J. Walsham inadequate.

This matter involves no legal question. The right of Dr. Greig to compensation being apparently conceded, the only point is: What is the fair measure of that compensation?

Upon this our opinion is of little value. We can only indicate the principles upon which, in the case of a private legal wrong of a like nature, it would be assessed.

Dr. Greig would be entitled to compensation for (1) the pain and injury inflicted upon him; (2) for any expense to which he was put in consequence; and (3) for any pecuniary loss of salary, &c.

In view of the facts, it seems to us that the 5,000 dollars suggested by Sir J. Walsham is not sufficient.

If Lord Rosebery agrees, we suggest that a communication to that effect be sent.

Question should not be mixed up with question of site which Dr. Greig desires.

We do not think that the Government, while insisting on just compensation, should mix up that question with the question of the site which Dr. Greig desires.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received February 4.)

Royal Courts of Justice, February 3, 1892.

My Lord,

Draft Order in Council applying "The Mail Ships Act, 1891," to France.

That copies of "The Mail Ships Act, 1891," and of the Convention between Great Britain and France of the 30th August, 1890, were inclosed for reference.

That the ratifications of the said Convention were exchanged on the 23rd March last, and that as its provisions could not be put into effect until the Order in Council contemplated by "The Mail Ships Act, 1891," was issued, it was desirable that that should be done with as little delay as possible.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request our opinion whether the terms of the draft Order in Council were right and proper, and whether the Order in its then shape might be submitted to the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

Approve draft Order in Council as altered and initialled.

That, in our opinion, the draft Order in Council, as altered and initialled by us, may properly be submitted to Her Majesty in Council for approval.

We have, &c.

MAIL SHIPS ACT, 1891.

Draft Order in Council.

Whereas by "The Mail Ships Act, 1891," it is provided that where Her Majesty the Queen has made a Convention with a foreign State respecting the postal service between such foreign State and the United Kingdom, or respecting the privileges of mail ships, that is to say, ships engaged in any postal service of such foreign State, or of any part of Her Majesty's dominions, it shall be lawful for Her Majesty in Council to order that the said Act shall, subject to any conditions, exceptions, and qualifications contained in the Order, apply during the continuance of the Order as regards such Convention and foreign State and the postal service and mail ships described in the Convention:

And whereas by section 8 of the said Act it is also provided that an Order in Council may, for the purpose of a Convention with a foreign State, apply the said Act, subject to any exceptions or modifications not inconsistent with the provisions of the said Act, to any British possession, and that the said Act when so applied should, subject to those exceptions and modifications, and subject as thereinafter mentioned, have effect as if it were re-enacted, with the substitution of such British possession for the United Kingdom, provided that, before it should be applied to any British possession named in the Schedule to the said Act, the Government of such possession should have adhered to the Convention:

And whereas on the 30th day of August, 1890, a Convention was made at London between Her Majesty and the President of the French Republic respecting the postal service between France and French possessions and the United Kingdom and British possessions, the terms of which Convention are set forth in the Schedule to this Order:

And whereas the ratifications of the said Convention were exchanged on the 23rd day of March, 1891:

And whereas the Governments of certain of the British possessions named in the Schedule to the said Act, namely, Newfoundland, Queensland, New Zealand, Cape of Good Hope, and Natal have adhered to the said Convention:

And whereas it is expedient that "The Mail Ships Act, 1891," should apply as regards the said Convention and the French Republic and the postal service and mail ships described in the said Convention:

And whereas it is also expedient that the said Act should, for the purpose of the said Convention, apply to the above-mentioned British possessions, and also to all British possessions not named in the Schedule to the said Act, subject to the exceptions and modifications in this Order contained:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers in this behalf by "The Mail Ships Act, 1891," or otherwise in Her Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. "The Mail Ships Act, 1891," shall apply during the continuance of this Order as regards the Convention set forth in the Schedule to this Order, and as regards the French Republic and the postal service and mail ships described in that Convention.

2. The said Act shall apply as regards any public ship of the French Republic when employed as a mail ship in the cases authorized by Article V of the said Convention.

3. The said Act shall, for the purpose of the said Convention, apply to the following British possessions, namely, Newfoundland, Queensland, New Zealand, Cape of Good Hope, and Natal, and also to every British possession not named in the Schedule to the said Act, subject, however, to the provisions of section 8 of the said Act, and also to the exceptions and modifications following, that is to say:—

(i.) The expression "officer of Customs" shall mean an officer of the Customs Department of the possession, or, where there is no such Department, an officer or one of the officers appointed for the purposes of the said Act by the Governor in Council, of which appointment notice shall be published in the Gazette of the possession.

(ii.) The provisions of the said Act as to the amount of fines shall, in possessions having a dollar or rupee currency, be read as if the amounts were stated in dollars or rupees, as the case may be, at the rate of 5 dollars or ~~and~~ 10 rupees to the pound sterling. In Gibraltar the said provisions shall be read as if the amounts were stated in pesetas, at the rate of 25 pesetas to the pound sterling.

(iii.) In lieu of sub-sections (1) and (2) of section 7 of the said Act the following provisions shall be substituted, that is to say: Every offence may be prosecuted and every fine may be recovered by action or other legal proceeding in any Court of the possession competent to impose fines; but any fine imposed by a Court of inferior or limited jurisdiction shall not exceed either the amount authorized by the said Act and this Order, or the amount of fine which the Court may impose in the exercise of its ordinary jurisdiction, whichever of the said amounts shall be the less; and there shall be the same right of appeal (if any) against any such fine as in other cases of fines imposed by the same Court in the exercise of its ordinary jurisdiction; and every Court, whether of original or appellate jurisdiction, may reduce the amount of any fine.

(iv.) The regulations required to be made under sub-section (4) of section 7 of the said Act by the Commissioners of Customs, with the consent of the Treasury, shall in the possession be made by the Governor in Council.

(v.) Section 5 of the said Act, so far as relates to the Commissioners of Customs, shall not apply in the possession.

4. This Order may be cited as "The Mail Ships (France) Order in Council, 1892."

And the Most Honourable the Marquis of Salisbury, K.G., and the Right Honourable Lord Knutsford, two of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, are to give the necessary directions herein as to them may respectively appertain.

Draft Order in Council. Treaty between Her Majesty and the Prince of Monaco for mutual extradition of fugitive criminals of December 17, 1891.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of an Order in Council for the purpose of carrying into effect a Treaty between Her Majesty and the Prince of Monaco for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals, signed at Paris the 17th December, 1891.

That with reference to the observations contained in the separate Report of the Solicitor-General of the 21st January last on the draft Extradition Treaty between Her Majesty and the King of Portugal, Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request us to note, in regard to the last paragraph of Article II of the Treaty with the Prince of Monaco, that the latter Treaty was signed on the 17th December last, and that it was now only awaiting Her Majesty's ratification.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the Treaty might properly be ratified by Her Majesty, and, if so, whether the draft Order in Council might be laid before the Queen in Council in its then shape, after the ratifications of the Treaty had been exchanged.

The Attorney-General's Opinion.

The Solicitor-General to Foreign Office.—(Received December 26.)

[In reply to the following reference the Solicitor-General reported on the 25th December as on p. 28:—]

Foreign Office to Solicitor-General.

Sir, Foreign Office, December 24, 1892.

Statement of French Ambassador as to Mr. D. Willoughby's organizing an expedition in aid of Samory, the Sultan of a territory upon the Upper Niger engaged in campaign against the French.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Rosebery, a communication from the French Ambassador at this Court,* stating that Mr. Digby Willoughby (a British subject) is at the present moment organizing an expedition in aid of Samory, the Sultan of a large territory upon the Upper Niger, who is engaged in a campaign against the French.

M. Waddington states that Samory is awaiting Mr. Willoughby's arrival in order to commence operations against the French.

It is, however, believed that Samory, who is a very formidable opponent, and who is apparently incensed at, and altogether repudiates, a claim put forward by the Government of the French Republic that he is under the Protectorate of France, has declared war against that Power, although he may be postponing an actual advance upon the French possessions in the region of the Upper Niger until he has collected a sufficient force.

Lord Rosebery therefore suggests that Samory may be considered (and that he may be assumed for the purpose of this reference) to be "a foreign State at war with a foreign State at peace with Her Majesty," within the meaning of section 4 of "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870," 33 & 34 Vict., cap. 90.

It seems somewhat doubtful whether, even assuming them to be capable of establishment by satisfactory and sufficient legal evidence hereafter, the facts stated by M. Waddington constitute an offence against section 11 of the Act on Mr. Willoughby's part.

At the same time, the expression in M. Waddington's note to the effect that Mr. Willoughby is "at the present moment organizing an expedition in aid of Samory" is, if construed literally, almost equivalent to the expression employed in section 11 of the Foreign Enlistment Act, namely, "preparing or fitting out a (naval or) military expedition," and it might, therefore, turn out that, if the organization in question is being undertaken within the limits of Her Majesty's dominions—a point as to which Lord Rosebery does not at present feel satisfied—an offence against section 11 is being committed. But however this may be, it appears to his Lordship, as at present advised, that Mr. Willoughby's alleged action does probably constitute, at any rate, a breach both of sections 4 and 5 of the Act—assuming of course that legal evidence sufficiently confirmatory of the statements in M. Waddington's note should eventually be obtained.

M. Waddington has been privately informed, in answer to his representations, that the Law Officers of the Crown would be consulted at once upon the matters which he brought to Lord Rosebery's notice, and he has been requested to furnish any evidence in his power, and also to indicate any other sources from which he thinks such evidence may be obtainable, in support of the allegations made in his note.

Meanwhile, Lord Rosebery will be glad if you will take M. Waddington's note into your consideration, and, assuming for the present purposes that the statements therein contained are capable of legal proof, will advise his Lordship whether, in your opinion, Mr. Willoughby's action amounts to a breach of the provision of the Foreign Enlistment Act, and more particularly of sections 4, 5, and 11 of that enactment. And, if your answer to the above question should be in the affirmative, (2) what action should properly be taken by Her Majesty's Government in the matter.

His Lordship will, at the same time, be glad to be furnished with any other observations of a more general nature which you may have to offer on the case.

I am to add that, although it is very desirable that Lord Rosebery should at this early stage of the case be furnished with a preliminary opinion from the Law Advisers of the Crown on such material as he may be able to lay before them, no proceedings will, in any event, be instituted against Mr. Willoughby until you shall have had an opportunity of considering and advising Her Majesty's Government upon the actual evidence on which it is proposed to proceed.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

Report.

Evidence of the charges preferred by the French Ambassador should be procured, and, if sufficient, warrants applied for against Mr. Willoughby and others implicated.

I have been honoured by the transmission to me, by direction of the Earl of Rosebery, of a communication from the French Ambassador at the Court of St. James', stating that Mr. Digby Willoughby, a British subject, is at the present moment organizing an expedition in aid of Samory, the Sultan of a large territory upon the Upper Niger, who is engaged in a campaign against the French; and I am informed that Lord Rosebery will be glad if I will take M. Waddington's note into my consideration, and assuming for the present purposes that the statements therein contained are capable of legal proof, I am to advise his Lordship whether, in my opinion, Mr. Willoughby's acts amount to a breach of the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act, and more particularly of sections 4, 5, and 11 of that enactment. And if my answer to the above question should be in the affirmative, (2) what action should properly be taken by Her Majesty's Government in the matter. I have taken the said note into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, in my opinion, and assuming for present purposes that the statements contained in M. Waddington's note are capable of legal proof, Mr. Willoughby has been guilty of an offence against the Act under section 4, by agreeing to accept an engagement in the military service of Samory, who may be treated as a foreign State at war with a friendly State within the meaning of the Act. It would also seem highly probable that he has within Her Majesty's dominions induced other persons to agree to accept engagements in the military service of Samory, which would be a further offence within section 4 of the Act; and if he quits Her Majesty's dominions or goes on board any ship with a view of quitting Her Majesty's dominions with intent to accept an engagement in the military service of Samory, or within Her Majesty's dominions induces any other person to quit or go on board ship with a view to quitting Her Majesty's dominions with the like intent, he will be guilty of an offence under the 5th section of the Act.

It will depend upon the particular evidence, which may be forthcoming, whether organizing an expedition in aid of Samory, as mentioned in M. Waddington's note, constitutes an offence within section 11 of the Act; but the words used are apt to describe the preparation of a military expedition, and if that is being carried on in Her Majesty's dominions it is a breach of section 11 of the Act.

2. Her Majesty's Government should use all means in their power to procure evidence of the charges preferred by the French Ambassador, and should ask him to furnish the evidence at his disposal, including that which will establish that a state of war exists between Samory and the French Republic. When sufficient evidence has been obtained, instructions should be given to the Solicitor to the Treasury to apply for warrants against Mr. Willoughby and any other persons implicated.

No intimation should be made to Mr. Willoughby of the charges preferred against him.

Yours, &c.

Draft O. in C. under "Foreign Marriage Act, 1892."

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 7th instant, transmitting to us the draft of an Order in Council* making regulations with regard to the marriage of British subjects outside the United Kingdom, in accordance with the provisions of "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892" (55 & 56 Vict., cap. 23), of which a copy was inclosed for convenience of reference.

Sir Thomas Sanderson was to inclose letters from the Admiralty and Colonial Office on the subject of the draft Order, together with a Memorandum by Mr. Albert Gray upon the suggestions contained in the Colonial Office letter, and was to request that we would take the draft Order into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether it might be laid before the Queen in Council in its present shape for Her Majesty's approval.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Mr. King Kiku Kingdon's claim to be deemed a British subject.

---

* See Confidential No. 6266*.

1892

That Her Majesty's Minister at Tôkiô was informed on the 1st October last that Mr. King Kiku Kingdon must be considered as filius nullius in contemplation of English law, and that, since he was also born outside the dominions of Her Majesty, no grounds appeared to exist entitling him to claim British nationality.

That the purport of the despatch conveying that decision was communicated to Mr. N. P. Kingdon by Mr. Fraser, and that Mr. Kingdon now asked for a reconsideration of the case on the grounds stated in his letter to Her Majesty's Consul at Yokohama of the 2nd December last.

That your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion whether the onus of proving that Mr. K. K. Kingdon was a British subject ought not properly to rest with that gentleman, and whether, in a case presenting so many difficulties and doubts, he ought not to be called upon to have recourse to the Courts of Law to settle the question authoritatively should any method of doing so be open to him.

Legitimacy Declaration Act of 1858, 21 & 22 Vict., cap. 93.

That, in most cases of the kind now under consideration, proceedings under the Legitimacy Declaration Act of 1858 (21 and 22 Vict., cap. 93) afforded an easy and convenient mode of procedure. But that it was possible that if Mr. Kingdon attempted to proceed under that Act he would be met by a technical difficulty since he was not "domiciled in England or Ireland" (see section 1), nor in Scotland (section 9).

That, under those circumstances, Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that, if we considered it to be desirable that the decision of an English Court of Law should be obtained upon the case, your Lordship might be favoured with our opinion whether it was open to Mr. Kingdon to proceed under the Legitimacy Declaration Act or by any other method.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was, at the same time, to request that your Lordship might be favoured with any further observations which we might have to offer upon the various points involved, and especially as to whether, even assuming that Mr. N. P. Kingdon had, at the time of the birth of Mr. K. K. Kingdon, exchanged his English domicil of origin for a Japanese domicil of choice, which he had since continuously retained, and, granting that Mr. K. K. Kingdon (as the fact appeared to be) had, in contemplation of Japanese law, become legitimated by the subsequent marriage of his parents, Mr. K. K. Kingdon's nationality of origin was not, for purposes of English law, absolutely determinable at the moment of his birth and incapable of undergoing a change by the mere operation of the law of his parents' marital domicil by way of relation back to the date of such birth.

That it was presumed, under the circumstances stated above, that if he did not become a British subject at the date of his birth, he did not become such subject at any later period solely by virtue of the subsequent marriage of his parents causing him to be regarded as legitimate by the law of their domicil.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Mr. K. K. Kingdon is not a British subject.

That, in our opinion, there is no sufficient ground for suggesting to Mr. K. K. Kingdon that he should attempt to obtain the decision of an English Court.

It is, in our judgment, quite clear that he is not a British subject. He was not so at the time of his birth, being illegitimate; and the subsequent marriage of his parents, whatever its other consequences may be, cannot convert him into a British subject. The point was decided in the case of Shedden v. Patrick and Others, 1 Macqueen's (House of Lords) Reports, p. 535.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. Villiers Lister's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft[*] of a Treaty of Extradition proposed for negotiation between Great Britain and the Republic of Liberia; and that he was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether it might properly be submitted to the Government of the Liberian Republic.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received June 14.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, June 14, 1892.

Proposed surrender of British extra-territorial jurisdiction in Madagascar to French Tribunals.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to an arrangement now in process of negotiation whereby, upon the establishment of a satisfactory judicial system in the French Protectorate of Madagascar, Her Majesty proposed to surrender to the French Tribunals in that island the extra-territorial jurisdiction over British subjects which she had hitherto exercised therein under the provisions of the Treaty of the 25th June, 1865, between Great Britain and Madagascar, and of various Orders in Council, of which the most recent was that known as "The Africa Order in Council, 1889."

That it should, in the first place, be mentioned that France claimed to exercise an exclusive control over the foreign relations of Madagascar, under the terms of the Treaty of Peace of the 17th December, 1885, and that that Treaty was notified by M. Waddington to the Earl of Rosebery on the 17th March, 1886.

That in the Declaration of the 5th August, 1890, in consideration of another Declaration dated the same day, whereby the British Protectorate over the Islands of Zanzibar and Pemba was agreed to by France, the Protectorate established by the abovementioned Treaty was recognized by Great Britain.

That since that date application for exequaturs for Her Majesty's Consular officers in Madagascar had been made through the French Resident-General at Tamatave.

That there existed, however, a serious difference of opinion between the French and Malagasy Governments as to the interpretation to be put on the Treaty of Peace, and the extent of the rights conferred by it upon France. That the consequence of that divergence had been to bring about a condition of strained relations between the French and Malagasy Governments, and a profound reluctance on the part of the latter to accept any measure which tended to increase the power of the French in Madagascar.

That the inclosed papers marked (E), (F), (G), (H), (I), and (J) contained the communications which had passed between your Lordship and the French Ambassador at the Court of St. James' on the question of relinquishing the exterritorial privileges of this country.

That the result up to the present was that your Lordship had offered to accept a French Judiciary in substitution for the present Consular system of extra-territorial jurisdiction which was now enjoyed by Treaty upon precisely the same terms as those which were accepted on the abandonment to the French Tribunals in Tunis of Her Majesty's extra-territorial jurisdiction in that Beylicate upon the establishment of the French Protectorate in 1883-84.

But that the French Ambassador had replied that, as one of the essential conditions in the case of Tunis was that the new system should be established by a Decree of the Bey, the requirement of similar conditions in the case of Madagascar amounted in effect to a refusal to accept that system.

That the French Government were not, it was pointed out, in a position to obtain from the Hova Government a Decree similar to that which they obtained from the Bey of Tunis.

That the chief objection that your Lordship had urged upon the French Ambassador had been that a system of Judiciary adopted without such a Decree was, in practice, entirely unworkable; that its Decrees would have to be enforced, not only without the assistance of the Government of the country, but in direct defiance of it; and that, except under the condition of a permanent military occupation, such a proposal was quite impracticable.

That the French Government urged, in reply, the acceptance of a tentative system which could be terminated if in practice it should be found unworkable. That before, however, that compromise could be considered, it was necessary to determine whether, as a matter of principle, the proposed measure was admissible.

That there were two points of view from which objections might be taken, in principle, to the establishment of the proposed Judiciary in despite of the Government of the country where it was to hold its Courts. That it seemed, in the first place, necessary to inquire from whom did such Tribunals derive their jurisdiction? Not apparently from the Government of the country—for that was hostile. Not apparently from the French Government, for that had neither annexed the country, nor attained that influence in the councils of the actual Government which could of itself authorize the exercise of such jurisdiction. Not, as was apprehended, from our own Sovereign, for it was believed that no Act existed enabling her to delegate her jurisdiction in any country, in spite of the Rulers of the soil, to a third Power which had itself acquired no legal title to jurisdiction from such Rulers. But if the Courts which it was proposed to establish drew their jurisdiction from no legal source, were they theoretically in any better condition than Tribunals which might be established by mere freebooters or pirates? Would their Decrees be binding in the view of English Tribunals upon anybody? Would those Decrees, again, in the view of the English Tribunals, cover and protect the action of any one who might help to execute them? Would they be an answer to a charge of assault, or of breaking into a dwelling-place, or of manslaughter, or of any other infraction of personal rights?

That, secondly, it seemed necessary to inquire in what position would the establishment of such Tribunals, under present circumstances, place us towards the Government of Madagascar? It was a Government which we had recognized, for we had Treaties with it, and by its consent had exterritorial jurisdiction over our own subjects within the limits of the Malagasy dominions. Would the surrender of such a power, and the substitution for it of a totally different system of jurisdiction, which was repudiated by the Hova Government itself, be consistent with our relations of international agreement and comity towards that Government? Would they not be rather in the nature of an act of war? Would it affect the validity of the Treaties which exist? Would it, as some persons had said, destroy the rights of exterritoriality which we possessed, without substituting anything except the Hova Tribunals in place of those rights?

That as far as was known the French proposal was entirely without precedent, and that there appeared to be no case which bore even a distant analogy to it.

That your Lordship would, subject to our opinion and advice, be rather disposed to maintain that judicial jurisdiction was an attribute of sovereignty, and inseparable from it: that it might be delegated to another by the Sovereign, but that it could not be injected into the territory of a third Power by a nation which had not been able to cause its own sovereignty to be accepted there.

And that, of course, if there was any foundation for the apprehensions above expressed, and if the line of argument above indicated was generally sound, it would not be competent for this country to accept the proposed establishment, even on the footing of a tentative measure.

That, having regard to the peculiar nature of the case, your Lordship thought it might be more convenient to us if you abstained from putting, in the first instance, a number of specific questions, but requested us to be good enough to advise you generally upon the case as raised by the reference and accompanying papers.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Extra-territorial jurisdiction over British subjects cannot be surrendered without consent of Hova Government.

That, in our opinion, the proposal to surrender to the French Tribunals in Madagascar Her Majesty's extra-territorial jurisdiction over British subjects, without the consent of the Hova Government, is entirely inadmissible—even as a tentative or temporary measure.

The rights enjoyed by Her Majesty's Government, under Article XI of the Treaty of 1865, are to be exercised by the British Consul, or other officer duly appointed for the purpose by Her Majesty, and cannot, without the consent of the Hova Government, be delegated to the Representatives or officers of another Power.

New French Courts in Madagascar. Decree of President of French Republic establishing constitution thereof.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, November 16, 1892.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 15th September last, stating that, with reference to our predecessors' Report of the 14th June, 1892, on the subject of the establishment of French Tribunals in Madagascar, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy of a Decree of the President of the French Republic, establishing the constitution of the new French Courts in Madagascar.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the Decree into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any remarks which we might have to offer upon it, and especially as to whether the judicial system which it created was of a sufficiently satisfactory nature to be accepted by Her Majesty's Government in lieu of the existing Consular jurisdiction enjoyed by Great Britain.

That it would be observed that the Decree did not state that the consent of the Malagasy Government had been obtained to its execution.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Think French Government is not in a position to require Her Majesty to abandon her Treaty rights in Madagascar.

That, in our opinion, if the abandonment of the Treaty rights under which Her Majesty exercises jurisdiction through her Consular Courts in Madagascar is, as a matter of State policy, determined upon, Her Majesty's Government can only expect that British subjects should be dealt with in the same manner as French citizens, and this result would be arrived at if the power contained in Article III (third clause) were so exercised as to extend the jurisdiction of the Tribunals to British subjects.

We see no reason to doubt that the Decree is reasonably sufficient to provide for the wants both of French citizens and British subjects, though, of course, the law administered by the Tribunals will be French law, and the procedure also French.

We have, however, to observe that not only is there no mention of the consent of the Malagasy Government having been obtained, but that it is plain, from the form of the Decree, that no such consent is intended to be asked for, and, indeed, from the earlier correspondence, it would seem that it could not be obtained.

We do not think that the French Government is in a position to require Her Majesty to abandon her Treaty rights in existence before the establishment of the French Protectorate. The abandonment of them without the consent of the protected Power would be going beyond anything that has yet been done in similar cases.

We do not find that the arrangement for a Protectorate expressly conferred jurisdiction on French Tribunals over British or other subjects—foreigners in Madagascar. It would seem that the French Government assume that jurisdiction to arise by reason of their Protectorate. It cannot yet be treated as an established doctrine of international law that such a jurisdiction can be founded on the assumption of a Protectorate without a grant from the protected Power whose right depends upon territorial sovereignty.

No. 21.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received June 28.)

Royal Courts of Justice, June 27, 1892.

My Lord,

Registration of lex loci marriages in doubtful cases.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Phillip Currie's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to bring to our attention two points with regard to the registration, under the Foreign Marriage Acts, of marriages solemnized in accordance with the local law of a foreign country, respecting which some doubt had been expressed, and with reference to which, therefore, your Lordship desired to be favoured with our opinion for his guidance.

That the first point was whether in a case where the parties, by reason of some disability or impediment recognized by English law, though not arising under the lex loci of the foreign Christian country in which their marriage was solemnized, could not lawfully intermarry according to the law of England, a marriage between such parties ought to be registered by the Consular officer, assuming it to have been duly solemnized in accordance with the local law of the country.

That an instance of such a marriage as was referred to would be a marriage between British subjects, standing to one another in the relation of deceased sister's widower and deceased wife's sister, solemnized in Denmark according to the local law of that country.

That, in that case (1) assuming that the parties, though of British nationality, were of Danish domicil, your Lordship believed that their marriage would, even by the English Tribunals, be recognized as valid practically for all purposes except the conferring of a title upon its eldest male and other successive issue to inherit ab intestato real property situate in England; and (2) although—if the parties were domiciled in England—their marriage would clearly be invalid for all purposes of English law, yet it would be perfectly valid according to the lex loci.

That in neither of those two cases did there appear to be any serious objection either upon grounds of general principle, or upon a consideration of the scope and language of the Act and Order in Council, to the registration of such a marriage for what it might be worth as a record, should the parties desire it; and that your Lordship was disposed to think that the justice of such cases would best be met by authorizing Consular officers to register the marriage under the provisions of the Foreign Marriage Acts, but, at the same time, to append a note to the entry, drawing attention to the prohibited degree of affinity or consanguinity or other impediment existing between the parties.

Case of polygamous countries.

That the other point was whether any marriage, by whatever form, rite, or ceremony solemnized in a Mahommedan or other polygamous country, could be registered under the Foreign Marriage Acts, unless it had been solemnized in pursuance of those Acts.

That the question upon which the determination of that point appeared to rest was whether, in a Mahommedan or uncivilized country where the marriage law was repugnant to the fundamental principles of English jurisprudence and of religion and morality as understood in this country, any marriage which was solemnized in accordance with the local law, and which derived such validity as it possessed wholly and merely therefrom, could be recognized as a marriage within the meaning of that term as employed in Christian countries, and systems of jurisprudence, even for the limited purpose of registration under an English Statute relating to foreign marriages.

That it appeared to be clear that if a British subject attempted to avail himself of the forms of the lex loci in a Mahommedan or heathen country, or of the ceremony of marriage observed amongst the Mormons, even though the parties were competent to contract, the marriage was not regarded as valid in English law, and that, consequently, the essential principle underlying the recognition of lex loci marriages generally, viz., the fact that it was valid by the law of the place of its celebration, was in that case quite inapplicable.

That your Lordship was disposed to think that the expression "lex loci marriages" should be confined, in its interpretation, to such marriages alone as did not violate the essential requirement of Christian wedlock, viz., the union of one man with one woman to the exclusion of all others, and that polygamous marriages being in no sense and for no purpose marriages in contemplation of English law were not such "lex loci marriages" as were contemplated by the wording of section 4 of "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1891," and could not be registered thereunder.

That Sir Philip Currie was, at the same time, to transmit copy of a despatch from Mr. Payton,[*] Her Majesty's Consul at Mogador, asking for guidance with regard to his duties under the Foreign Marriage Acts, together with the draft of the reply which your Lordship proposed to send him, if we concurred in its terms.

That it would be found that the correctness and expediency, or otherwise, of the answers suggested in the draft depended on the principles to be decided in connection with the latter of the two points specially raised in Sir Philip Currie's letter to us.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would be so good as to take the papers into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion on the points raised therein, and also with any general observations upon the subject which we might be good enough to offer.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to

Report—

Distinction between powers of solemnization and registration.

1. That there is a distinction between solemnization and registration of marriages under the Foreign Marriage Acts.

As to solemnization at the marriage office under section 8 of "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892," no marriage can be solemnized at the official house of the marriage officer if by English law the parties cannot lawfully intermarry, but if lege loci contractûs the parties can marry, notwithstanding the impediment preventing a valid English marriage, the marriage may still be registered under section 18 of the above Act.

Rules as to registration of lex loci marriages in heathen countries.

2. Except in the case, which we do not imagine to exist, of the law of the foreign country expressly providing that valid marriages may be contracted in the way and according to the forms actually adopted, we are of opinion that no form, rite, or ceremony of marriage in a Mahommedan or polygamous country can be registered under the Foreign Marriage Acts.

3. The registration of "lex loci marriages" should be confined to marriages which do not violate the essential conditions of Christian wedlock.

Approving despatch to Consul Payton as altered.

Foreign Office, July 11, 1892.

Sir,

I am directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch No. 12 of the 12th April, asking for guidance in your duties under the Foreign Marriage Acts.

You cannot solemnize at the official house, or allow to be solemnized there in your presence under the provisions of those Acts, any marriage which would not be recognized as valid by English legal Tribunals.

The Empire of Morocco being a Mahommedan country where polygamy is recognized by the law, the doctrine of recognition of marriages valid lege loci contractûs does not apply.

The marriages to which you refer, viz., those celebrated by Roman Catholic or Hebrew priests, cannot, in Morocco, be registered as marriages under the Foreign Marriage Acts.

The question whether a marriage duly performed in a Mahommedan country with the rights, and according to the marriage law, of the Roman Catholic or Jewish Churches be valid is primâ facie determinable by the law of the domicil of the contracting parties. Before, therefore, your inquiries as to the validity of such marriages and the consequent status of their issue can be answered, it will be necessary for you to give further information upon this point.

In no case can bigamous marriages be recognized, since they violate the fundamental principles of Christian religion and morality with reference to the marriage rite, besides being per se a serious offence against the English criminal law.

For your personal information, I am to state that the "exhibit" alluded to in the marriage instructions is a copy of the certificate of the marriage according to the local law which is furnished to the parties by the local authorities which is to be appended as an "exhibit" to the certificate signed by the British marriage officer. But, having regard to the fact that Her Majesty's Consulate at Mogador is in a polygamous country, you will have no use for the various forms connected with the registration of marriages solemnized in accordance with the local law of a foreign country, which appear to have been inadvertently forwarded to you.

I am, &c.

My Lord,

As to proposal that the Powers should declare the which had been made by the German Government that a joint Declaration should be issued by the Powers parties to the Conference on Samoan Affairs, affirming that a recent decision of the Samoan Land Commission upon the construction of section 8 of Article IV of the Final Act of that Conference should be held to be ultimate and final.

That it appeared to your Lordship that that proposal involved a departure from the method of procedure prescribed in the Article and section mentioned, which expressly reserved the power of appeal to the Chief Justice of Samoa in cases of that character, and provided that the determination of the Commission should be "subject to the revision and confirmation of" the Supreme Court.

That, for that reason, your Lordship felt grave doubts whether the suggestion of the German Government could with propriety be adopted.

That a draft of reply to Count Hatzfeldt was inclosed, and that Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take it into our consideration, together with the accompanying papers, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether its terms were right and proper, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

Draft of Letter to Count Metternich.

Foreign Office, May 6, 1892.

M. le Chargé d'Affaires,

I HAVE carefully considered, in consultation with the Law Advisers of the Crown, the verbal communication which Count Hatzfeldt made to me on the 31st March last, proposing that the three Treaty Powers should affirm, by a joint Declaration, that a recent decision of the Samoan Land Commission upon the construction of section 8 of Article IV of the Samoan Act shall be ultimate and final.

I have to observe, in reply, that while Her Majesty's Government are desirous in every way to accelerate the labours of the Commission, the course proposed appears to them to be open to serious objections.

According to the provisions of the Final Act, recourse may be had from a decision of this nature to the Chief Justice of Samoa. A public declaration by the Treaty Powers to the effect contemplated would, in fact, be a modification of the terms of the Final Act, and a limitation of the rights of parties under it. Such a document, in order to have validity and binding force, should be invested with the same formalities as the Act itself, and its issue might produce an unfortunate impression upon public opinion, both native and European, in the islands.

If the decision of the Commissioners is correct, it must be assumed that that decision will be duly confirmed upon revision by the Chief Justice; whilst if, on the other hand, it is a mistaken one, Her Majesty's Government are advised that it should be set right by the Tribunal established for that purpose by the terms of the instrument which created the Commission, and on the faith of which the natives and others are acting in respect of their claims.

As regards the delays which have occurred in the settlement of the question of land titles, it seems evident, in view of the small number of claims already received, and of the very large number still outstanding, that the Commission cannot finish its work within the term of two years originally fixed.

But I have reason to believe that the Commissioners are working in perfect harmony, and that both on public grounds and from considerations of private convenience, they will make every effort to bring the investigation to as rapid a conclusion as the circumstances will permit.

I have, &c.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, May 9, 1892.

Final Act of Berlin Conference on affairs of Samoa. Duties of the Chief Justice and the Land Commissioners.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 8th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to a difference of opinion which had arisen between the Chief Justice of Samoa and the Samoan Land Commissioners in regard to the interpretation of those provisions of the Final Act of the Berlin Conference on the affairs of Samoa which affected the rights and duties of the Chief Justice and the Land Commissioners respectively.

Mr. Haggard, February 23, 1892.

That the points in dispute were clearly explained in the joint Memorandum of the Land Commissioners, copy of which was inclosed in Mr. Bazett Haggard's letter of the 23rd February, and which had been forwarded, for their consideration, to each of the three Powers who took part in the Samoan Conference.

That it would be seen that the Land Commissioners claimed, under section 6, Article IV, of the Final Act, the right to decide finally upon all undisputed claims, as well as upon disputed claims, which should be decided as valid by the unanimous voice of the Commission, their decisions to be merely referred to the Supreme Court for confirmation (not reconsideration) and for purposes of record.

That the Chief Justice, on the contrary, maintained that the final decision upon all contested claims was vested in himself, and that, to use his own words, "the Land Commission is an investigating Commission, and not a Court."

That he further claimed the right, under section 4, Article III, of the Final Act, to control and modify the procedure adopted by the Land Commissioners, but that the latter had declined to accept his ruling upon those points pending a reference to their respective Governments.

Mr. Haggard, March 1, 1892.

That the Chief Justice, meanwhile, had sought to enforce his views by the issue of two public Proclamations, copies of which would be found in Mr. Haggard's second letter of the 1st March.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion upon the questions thus raised, as well as with any general observations which we might have to offer on the whole case.

To Law Officers, April 13.

Chief Justice of Samoa, February 29, 1892.

We were also honoured with a further letter from Sir Thomas Sanderson, dated the 13th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the record of a verbal communication made by the German Embassy on the 12th April, explaining the views of the German Government in regard to the questions raised by the Chief Justice of Samoa in his letter of the 29th February.

That a wish was further expressed that the German Government might be informed what view Her Majesty's Government took of the points in dispute between the Chief Justice and the Land Commissioners.

That it would be seen that the German Government were of opinion that the Chief Justice was technically correct in holding that the final decision upon all contested claims rested with the Supreme Court, and that the Land Commissioners could not be considered as a Court of Justice, but rather as a Court of Inquiry.

That having regard, however, to the fact that the practice hitherto followed between the Commission and the Court had not been in accordance with the view now expressed by the Chief Justice, they proposed, with a view to prevent delay and expense, that the principle, if recognized by the Powers, should only apply to future cases, and should not have a retroactive effect.

That, on the other hand, the German Government were not prepared to admit that the Chief Justice had the right claimed by him of regulating the proceedings of the Land Commissioners.

That if, however, the other Powers, namely, Great Britain and the United States, thought differently, they were prepared to waive their own opinion on that point.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the communication of the German Government into our consideration, in conjunction with the papers which were transmitted to us in his letter of the 8th ultimo.

We have taken all the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

1892

Report—

Construction of section 6 of IVth Article of Final Act of the Berlin Conference. Rights and duties of the Chief Justice and Land Commissioners respectively.

That the first question depends upon the construction of section 6 of the IVth Article of the Final Act of the 14th June, 1889.

The language of that section is certainly not clear, and it is impossible to say that the question is free from doubt; but, in our judgment, looking to the provisions of the earlier sections of the same Article, and the duties to be performed, and the report made by the Commissioners, the final decision upon all disputed claims is to be by the Court, and that, in this respect, the view taken by the Chief Justice is correct.

We think that the meaning of the second paragraph of section 6, though not happily expressed, is that in the case of undisputed claims, which are decided to be valid by the unanimous voice of the Commission, the duties of the Court are purely ministerial; but that in all cases of disputed claims, or of claims as to which, though there be no rival claimant or opposing litigant, the decision of the Commissioners is not unanimous, the Court has power to decide as to the claim.

Upon the second question, we are of opinion that the contention of the Chief Justice is not well founded, and that he has no right to control and direct the actual procedure of the Commissioners except upon the question of the extension of time for the presentation of claims referred to in section 3 of Article IV.

We have, &c.

Royal Courts of Justice, July 11, 1892.

My Lord,

As to the Powers informing the Chief Justice of Samoa that the decision of Samoan Land Commission upon construction of section 8, Article IV of the Convention is final.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that, in our Report of the 2nd May last, we advised upon a proposal of the German Government that the Powers parties to the Final Act of the Conference on Samoan Affairs should affirm by a joint Declaration that a recent decision of the Samoan Land Commission upon the construction of section 8, Article IV, of that Convention was ultimate and final.

That a note was in due course addressed to the German Embassy in the terms approved in our Report, and that your Lordship had now received from Count Metternich the accompanying reply, from which we should perceive that the American Government had put forward another proposal in the matter which met with the approval of the German Government, and which the latter submitted for the concurrence of Her Majesty's Government.

That it was to the effect that identic instructions should be issued to the Consuls of the three Powers at Apia, directing them to inform the Chief Justice of Samoa that the Treaty Powers considered the above-mentioned decision of the Land Commissioners to be correct.

That, in view of the fact that the decision concerned a question which would shortly come before the Chief Justice in his judicial capacity, your Lordship presumed that Her Majesty's Government had no warrant for authorizing a formal communication of that kind to a high judicial functionary, who, in the discharge of his judicial duties, was independent of their control. That your Lordship was, however, disposed to think that it might be practicable to bring the view of the Powers upon the point privately and informally to the notice of the Chief Justice, if it should be considered that such a course was open to no objection. But that before deciding as to what steps, if any, should be taken with that view, it was necessary that Her Majesty's Government should form an opinion as to whether the interpretation placed by the Land Commission upon the wording of section 8, Article IV, of the Final Act was in itself such as could be properly upheld.

That Sir Philip Currie was accordingly to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion upon that point, as well as upon the proposition made to Her Majesty's Government in Count Metternich's note, and also with any other observations which we might be good enough to offer on the case generally.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to

Report—

Not advisable to do so.

That we are not prepared to say that the decision of the Land Commission is correct. The words "without prejudice to the rights of third parties" appear to be intended to preserve the rights of persons who claim to have been entitled to the lands as against the vendors, the title of the vendor and the sufficiency of the price not being matters with which the Commission is entitled to deal in cases where the sale took place before the 28th August, 1879.

We do not, however, think it necessary to express a decided opinion upon this question, which will be considered by the Chief Justice.

In our opinion, the course proposed by the German Government is not one which Her Majesty's Government can properly be advised to adopt.

The Chief Justice is an independent judicial officer appointed under Treaty provisions, and we cannot suppose that he would allow himself to be influenced in the interpretation of that Treaty by the views of any Governments as to the policy of a particular construction.

We have, &c.

My Lord,

Dispute as to proper destination of import and export duties in Samoa leviable under provisions of Article VI of Final Act of Berlin Conference on affairs of Samoa.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 10th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to a dispute which had arisen as to the proper destination of the import and export duties in Samoa leviable under the provisions of Article VI of the Final Act of the Berlin Conference on the affairs of Samoa.

That in February last Baron S. von Pilsach, the Adviser of the Samoan Government and the President of the Municipal Council of Apia, submitted a Memorandum to the three Treaty Powers in which he explained the system hitherto followed for the apportionment of those duties, and suggested certain modifications of the Final Act, with a view to avert the bankruptcy of the Samoan Government, and provide it with a more equitable share of the revenue.

That that Memorandum he subsequently withdrew by telegram in consequence of a decision of the Chief Justice that the customs duties belonged to the Samoan Government.

That detailed reports respecting that decision had now been received.

1892

That Sir Philip Currie was to call our attention to Mr. Consul Cusack-Smith's despatch No. 13 of the 26th April, in which was inclosed the written decision of the Chief Justice, assigning the import and export duties leviable under section 2 of Article VI of the Final Act to the use of the Samoan Government.

That in the same despatch would be found a case submitted by the Municipal Council protesting against that decision, and appealing to the Treaty Powers.

That nothing was known in the Foreign Office of a previous verbal decision of the Chief Justice, to which reference was made in the case for the Municipality, beyond what was stated in the papers.

That under section 4, Article III, of the Final Act, the Supreme Court was invested with jurisdiction over all questions arising under the provisions of the General Act, and that it would appear, therefore, at first sight, that the Chief Justice was competent to decide the question which had arisen.

That Consul Cusack-Smith, however, took exception to the decision of the Chief Justice on the ground that it was given without the judicial proceedings provided for in section 5 of Article III, and without previously informing the Municipal Council, or giving them an opportunity of stating their views. But that it was not clear that the provisions of that section applied to the case in point.

That, as matters at present stood, it would appear that, if they were deprived of the customs duties, the Samoan Government would be practically bankrupt, and unable to carry on the duties of administration, as it was generally admitted that the capitation tax could not be collected.

That, on the other hand, the Municipality stated that they would be reduced to the same position if the customs duties were withdrawn from them. That public opinion among the European community had been much aroused by the incident, and that it was obvious that Baron S. von Pilsach, the Municipal President, was placed in a very difficult position, for, in the dual capacity conferred upon him by the Berlin Act, of Adviser to the King and Government of Samoa and, at the same time, President of the Municipal Council, he represented two parties whose interests conflicted.

That under those circumstances a temporary compromise had been effected through the intervention of the Consuls pending the result of the appeal to the Treaty Powers.

That a modification of the provisions of the General Act had been suggested both by Consul Cusack-Smith and the Municipal President with a view to meet the exigencies of the situation.

That the question of modifying the Act was, however, one of policy, and would have to be considered in conjunction with the other Treaty Powers, viz., Germany and the United States.

That, before communicating with those Governments, it was necessary that Her Majesty's Government should determine whether or not the Chief Justice's decision in the matter was correct and should be upheld.

That Sir Philip Currie was accordingly to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the following points:—

1. Was it within the competence of the Chief Justice, under the provisions of the General Samoan Act, to decide the questions in dispute?

2. If so, was the decision itself such as, on the merits of the case, and according to the tenour and meaning of the Act, should be upheld?

3. Were there any proper grounds for contesting its validity owing to its having been delivered, not in open Court, but on the application of the Adviser to the King and President of the Municipal Council, and without reference to the Municipal Council itself?

That your Lordship would also be glad to receive any general observations we might have to offer on the whole case.

We were also honoured with a further letter from Sir Philip Currie, dated the 28th June, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 10th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a Memorandum of a verbal communication from the German Chargé d'Affaires explaining the views of his Government in regard to the difference of opinion which had arisen as to the proper destination of the import and export duties in Samoa leviable under the provisions of Article VI of the Samoan Final Act.

That it would be seen that the opinion of the German Government was adverse to the decision of the Chief Justice; that they expressed a hope that Her Majesty's Government would concur in their view; and that, in that event, they proposed that the three Treaty Powers should overrule the decision of the Chief Justice, and instruct their Consuls to direct the Municipal President to receive and apply the import and export duties on account of the Municipality.

That Sir Philip Currie was also to inclose a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Apia, inclosing copies of correspondence between the President of the Municipality and the Consular Board, from which it would appear that the statement of the legal advisers of the Municipality, inclosed in Mr. Consul Cusack-Smith's despatch No. 13 of the 26th April, was not submitted to the President, as it should have been, before being handed to the Consuls.

That the existence of that informality, however, would probably not prevent us from coming to a conclusion as to the merits of the case.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter of the 28th June into our consideration, in connection with those already submitted to us, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the view taken by the German Government of the matters in dispute was sound, and was one which Her Majesty's Government could properly support; and more especially whether, in the event of there being a concurrence of opinion among the Treaty Powers that the decision of the Chief Justice was incorrect, and could not be upheld, the contention of the German Government that the Treaty Powers were not bound by the decision of the Chief Justice in questions of the construction of the Samoan Act was borne out by the terms of that Act.

We have taken all the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

The decision of the Chief Justice is not in accordance with the provisions of the Final Act.

That, in our opinion, the decision of the Chief Justice is not in accordance with the provisions of the Final Act.

If the two parties, i.e., the Municipal Council and the Representatives of the Government, had submitted the question to the decision of the Chief Justice under section 4 of Article III, it would, in our opinion, have been within his competence to adjudicate upon it, and his decision would have been binding upon all parties; but in our judgment, having regard to what had taken place under the Final Act, and the system of administration actually in force thereunder, it was not competent to the Chief Justice to make, as he did in this case, a declaration as to the rights of the parties under section 3 of Article VI of the Final Act upon an informal reference, and without the matter being properly argued before him.

In our opinion, the view taken by the German Government is correct, and, assuming the Treaty Powers to be unanimous, they may, under the circumstances, decline to accept the decision of the Chief Justice, but, in the event of there being any difference of opinion between them and Samoa, and the question being referred to the Chief Justice under section 7 of Article III, his decision would be binding.

Section 3 of Article VI of the Final Act is ambiguous.

We desire to add that we think the language of section 3 of Article VI of the Final Act is ambiguous, and it would be well that a clear and explicit distribution of the duties, taxes, and charges between the Samoan Government and the Municipality of Apia should be made.

No. 26.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received September 5.)

Royal Courts of Justice, September 3, 1892.

My Lord,

As to action of Chief Justice of Samoa in enacting an Ordinance affecting real property in Navigators' Islands.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 29th August, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying correspondence relative to the action of the Chief Justice of Samoa in enacting an Ordinance affecting real property in the Navigators' Islands.

That, in transmitting that Ordinance home, Consul Cusack-Smith called attention to the fact that the Final Act of the Berlin Conference on Samoan Affairs did not appear to invest the Chief Justice with the power of enacting laws himself, though under section 8 of Article III he "may recommend to the Government of Samoa the passage of any law which he may consider just and expedient," &c.

That attached to the Ordinance was a Table of Fees, and amongst them is one of 5 dollars for the registration of every certificate of title.

That to that fee the German Government took grave exception, and, for the reasons explained in the accompanying note from the German Ambassador, they proposed to instruct their Consul at Apia not to assent to it. They further inquired whether Her Majesty's Government were inclined to instruct the British Consul in a similar sense.

That your Lordship could not find that any Article of the Samoan Final Act vested in the Chief Justice a power of legislating on his own mere motion, and your Lordship was disposed to agree generally in the views of the German Government respecting the registration fee of 5 dollars.

That before replying to the communication of the German Government, however, Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we should take the papers transmitted therewith into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion upon the following questions:—

1. Was the issue of "The Real Property Ordinance, 1891," by the Chief Justice ultra vires in view of the stipulations of the Final Act?

2. Are the objections of the German Government to the registration fee of 5 dollars well founded, and can Her Majesty's Government properly instruct Her Majesty's Consul in the sense of those objections?

3. If so, should a direct communication be also made to the Chief Justice intimating the views of the three Treaty Powers, assuming that they are unanimous in regarding "The Real Property Ordinance, 1891," as ultra vires?

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to

Report—

That—

Issue of "The Real Property Ordinance, 1891," by the Chief Justice was ultra vires. He should be so informed.

1. We are of opinion that the issue of "The Real Property Ordinance, 1891," by the Chief Justice was ultra vires.

The only power to which it could be referred with any plausibility is that contained in section 7 of Article IV of the Final Act: "The Court shall make provision for a complete registry of all valid titles to land in the Island of Samoa which are or may be owned by foreigners."

No doubt the clause should be construed liberally, but it cannot, in our opinion, be treated as authorizing the substantial alterations in positive law of real property contained in the Ordinance. These alterations form so important a part of the Ordinance that, in our opinion, they vitiate the whole Ordinance, which must be treated as ultra vires.

2. The power to make provision for a complete registry, if validly exercised, would, in our opinion, justify the imposition of a reasonable fee for registration, but, having regard to the terms of (D) 2 of section 2, Article VI, of the Final Act, we are of opinion that the fee of 5 dollars is not reasonable, and that material parts of the objections of the German Government are well founded, and that Her Majesty's Government may properly instruct her Consul in the sense of those objections.

3. Having regard to the fact that no appeal is given by the Final Act from any act of the Chief Justice within his jurisdiction, we are of opinion that a direct communication should be made to the Chief Justice intimating the views of the three Treaty Powers, assuming that they are unanimous in regarding "The Real Property Ordinance, 1891," as ultra vires.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received September 28.)

[In answer to the following reference, the Law Officers reported on the 26th September as on page 48:—]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, September 15, 1892.

Gentlemen,

Regulations to enforce provisions of Final Act of Berlin Conference on Samoan affairs.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Rosebery, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the question of passing Regulations to enforce on British subjects the provisions of the Final Act of the Berlin Conference on Samoan affairs, which formed the subject of a Report by your predecessors, dated the 1st December, 1890.

I am to draw your special attention to the letter from Baron Senfft von Pilsach, Adviser to the King of Samoa, inclosing a copy of an Ordinance passed by the Samoan Government to provide for the collection and management of the customs revenue in the port of Apia.

In forwarding this Ordinance to Her Majesty's Government, Baron von Pilsach states that it has been drawn up in conformity with the Customs Regulation Ordinance of 1881 enacted in Fiji, a few clauses having been modified to suit local requirements, and he asks that the necessary steps may be taken to render it applicable to British subjects in Samoa.

In connection with this matter, a correspondence took place in 1891 relative to the imposition of penalties under the tax laws in Samoa, and to the steps to be taken against vessels landing goods which had not been entered and passed by the Customs at Apia. These papers also appear to call for special notice.

Inquiry has been made of the German and United States' Governments as to what action, if any, they propose to take for the purpose of making the Ordinance now in question obligatory upon their respective nationals, and you will observe, by the annexed despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin, that the opinion of the former is opposed to the Ordinance both on the ground of its unsatisfactory character, and because it rests on the assumption that customs dues can be administered by the Samoan Government, which assumption is held by the German Government to be an erroneous one. The reply of the United States' Government has not yet been received.

L. O. Report, July 28, 1892, p. 43.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Rosebery with your opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Baron von Pilsach's letter, having regard to the views expressed by your predecessors on the 28th July last, relative to the apportionment of the import and export duties in Samoa leviable under the provisions of Article VI of the Final Act of the Berlin Conference on Samoan affairs.

His Lordship would also be glad to be favoured with any general observations that you may have to offer on the case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) P. W. CURRIE.

1892

Report.

We have considered the letter of Sir P. W. Currie (annexed to this Report) and the matters therein referred to, and beg to report as follows:—

As to making the Ordinance binding upon British subjects.

1. We are of opinion, having regard to the views expressed by our predecessors on the 28th July last, that the objection taken by the German Government, to the effect that the proposed Ordinance proceeds upon the basis of the decision of the Chief Justice which cannot be accepted as valid, affords a sufficient reason for declining in the present state of things to make the Ordinance binding upon British subjects. The letter of Baron von Pilsach ought, therefore, in our opinion, to be answered in that sense.

Section 39 of Article VI requires amendment.

2. As to the other points arising upon the papers submitted for our consideration, it would seem that the provisions of Article VI, section 39, of the Final Act with reference to the appropriation of the revenues paid into the Treasury require amendment, with a view to a clearer and more equitable division as between the Samoan Government and the Municipal Council, and if the three Treaty Powers adopt this view they may effect a proper adjustment under the power reserved by Article VIII, section 1, of the Final Act.

As to manner of enforcing payment of the duties.

3. It will be desirable that the Treaty Powers should, if possible, arrive at an agreement as to the manner in which payment of the duties leviable under the Final Act should be enforced, with a view to making the provisions agreed upon simultaneouly effective as against their own subjects. In the meantime, we do not think that anything should be done making British subjects liable to penalties which cannot also be enforced against subjects of the other Treaty Powers.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bramston's letter of the 20th August last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit for our consideration the accompanying draft Order in Council for the Pacific Ocean.

That the draft was prepared by Mr. Justice Wright before his elevation to the Bench, and was based upon "The Africa Order in Council, 1889," and the three existing Western Pacific Orders in Council.

That certain alterations of detail had been made in the original draft at the suggestion of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs and of the High Commissioner for the Western Pacific, but that it did not appear necessary to trouble us with the particulars of those alterations.

That the divorce jurisdiction conferred by section 47 was not possessed by the Court under the existing Orders, but was added under the advice of the Law Officers in their Report, dated 9th May, 1890; that it was unnecessary to trouble us with the correspondence mentioned in that Report.

That Mr. Bramston was to refer us to section 85, applying "The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881," and to ask whether in our opinion the exceptions (c) and (d) might properly be included in the proposed Order. That it might be anticipated that that Act would on occasion be put into operation by a Deputy Commissioner on an island remote from any higher Court, and that a vessel might be at hand by which the accused could be conveyed promptly to the British possession from which he was a fugitive, while the opportunity might be lost if a delay of fifteen days was prescribed, and that, in the absence of any Court competent to review the proceedings, the accused would gain no such advantage from such delay as was apparently contemplated by the Act.

That a more important question was raised by the definition of British subject in section 3.

That Mr. Bramston was to explain that the islands of the Western Pacific were scattered over so many hundred miles of ocean, that communication between them was difficult, and that they might be classed under three heads—

(a.) Islands inhabited by native tribes and under no civilized Government.

(b.) Similar islands over which Her Majesty has declared a Protectorate.

(c.) Islands which have become part of Her Majesty's dominions, and have been licensed for limited periods to British subjects for the purpose of collecting guano, planting cocoa-nuts, or other industry of the like nature.

That islands of the last class (c) were inhabited only by the licencees and their servants; and that it was apprehended that they might be regarded as territory acquired by settlement, and were subject to the common law of England and Statutes of general application; while by "The British Settlements Act, 1887," Her Majesty in Council might make laws for such islands.

That Mr. Bramston was to inquire whether it would be proper and in accordance with the terms of "The British Settlements Act, 1887," to make all persons in such islands subject to the provisions of the Order, and, if so, whether the additions in the Appendix to his letter would be sufficient for the purpose.

That as regarded the islands of class (a), it was most desirable that, if possible, persons naturalized in the Australian Colonies should be made subject to the jurisdiction of the Court, and that, unless the words "British subjects" in the Pacific Islanders Protection Acts and "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," were to be confined to natural-born subjects of Her Majesty, there would seem to be sufficient authority in those Acts for doing what was desired; and that it would be seen that in the Western Pacific Order of 1877, Article 4, the definition of British subject included a subject of Her Majesty by naturalization as well as by birth. That that Order was approved by the Law Officers of the time in their Reports, dated 3rd January and 16th March, 1877, and that no question appeared to have been raised on that point.

That persons who had been naturalized in the Colonies were granted Foreign Office passports entitling them to protection as British subjects on the continent of Europe except in their country of origin, but that doubts had been suggested whether under section 16 of the Naturalization Act of 1870, 33 Vict., cap. 14, persons naturalized in a British Colony could be regarded as British subjects in the Pacific Islands, and that your Lordship would be glad to receive our advice upon the point.

That Mr. Bramston was to inclose, for our perusal in connection with the question, extracts of correspondence, as noted in the margin.* That he was also to invite attention to the accompanying copy of a Report from the late Law Officers, dated the 14th June, 1892, where the question was incidentally raised in connection with the ownership of a British vessel.

That with regard to the islands in class (c), the further question arose whether the jurisdiction of the High Commissioner's Court might be exercised over the native inhabitants of islands which had been taken under the protection of Her Majesty, and over foreigners resorting thereto.

That it was submitted that when an uncivilized people asked for or accepted the protection of a civilized State, the assumption of a Protectorate by the latter carried with it the acquisition of so much of the sovereignty of the uncivilized State as was necessary to make the protection effective, including the power of dealing judicially with persons of whatever nationality who oppressed or ill-treated the subjects of the protected States, or committed crimes against the person or property of other foreigners who, for want of competent Courts, were unable to obtain redress from the Rulers of the protected State, and that Mr. Bramston was to invite our attention to the papers noted in the margin and to the extracts of correspondence above referred to, and to request that we would advise your Lordship whether in protected islands (a) foreigners, (b) natives, might be made justiciable under the proposed Order, and, if so, whether the additional words shown in red ink in the Appendix were sufficient for the purpose.

That Part XV of the draft Order relating to births, marriages, and deaths would also require careful consideration. That Mr. Bramston was to invite attention to the extracts of correspondence noted in the margin, which would place the matter fully before us, and to request us to advise upon it.

That your Lordship would be glad to be advised generally upon the sufficiency of the draft Order, and more particularly upon the special questions adverted to in Mr. Bramston's letter.

We were further honoured with a letter from Mr. Bramston, dated the 25th August last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy of a Report by the late Law Officers (Law Officers to Colonial Office, 30th April, 1891), and of the Order in Council to which it related, as your Lordship thought that it might be desirable that we should be aware of the steps taken in South Africa for enforcing jurisdiction in the British Protectorate south of the Zambesi.

We have also the honour to acknowledge the receipt of a further letter from Mr. Bramston, dated the 3rd September last, inclosing copy of a letter from the Foreign Office with the Report of the late Law Officers therein referred to.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion—

1. The exceptions (c) and (d) may properly be included in the proposed Order. It is by no means clear that they are justified by the terms of "The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881," but we think that they are within the powers conferred by section 5 of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890." The changes proposed may, we think, be regarded as adaptations and modifications of the Act within the meaning of that section.

2. It would, from a legal point of view, be proper, and in accordance with the terms of "The British Settlements Act, 1887," to make all persons in islands which have become part of Her Majesty's dominions, and have been licensed for limited periods as above mentioned, subject to the provisions of the Order.

The additions in the Appendix to Mr. Bramston's letter of the 20th August last would not be sufficient for the purpose, but, after a conference with Mr. Bramston, we have approved of recitals and consequential alterations sufficient to show that the scheme of the Order is to extend to islands which are British possessions, or under British protection, if as a matter of policy it is determined so to extend the Order, and we have identified the draft by our initials.

* See List of Papers.

3. Persons naturalized in the Australian Colonies are not British subjects for any purposes outside the limit of the Colonies in which they are naturalized, and cannot properly be dealt with otherwise than as foreigners.

The definition in the Western Pacific Order of 1877 would not include such persons, and adds nothing to the meaning of the words "British subject." We think that, on the whole, it would be better to omit the definition altogether, leaving the general law to say who is and who is not a British subject. The instructions sent out to local authorities might explain the full force of the expression "British subject."

4. The right to make foreigners or natives in protected islands "justiciable" under the Order should only be exercised with the assent, express or implied, of their respective Sovereigns in cases where there is a Sovereign to give jurisdiction. As to the natives, the right will depend in each case upon the Treaties made with the local Sovereign Power where there is such local Sovereign Power.

As to foreigners, the late Law Officers have advised that, in the case of Protectorates recognized under the Berlin Act of 1885, such assent by the Signatory Powers may be inferred from the terms of that Act, and in this we concur.

It is going a considerable step further to imply assent in the case of Protectorates not contemplated by the Berlin Act, but the precedent set by that Act, and the general arguments in support of the jurisdiction of a Protecting Power in similar cases, make it right, in our opinion, to assume that the signatories of the Berlin Act will not object to the exercise of jurisdiction over their respective nationals, and we think that such jurisdiction may be assumed by the Order, if it be thought advisable as a matter of policy.

With reference to the alterations proposed in the Appendix, we refer to and repeat the observations contained in our answer No. 2.

5. We have considered the sections of Part XV of the proposed Order, and see no reason in law why they should not stand as part of the Order. In particular we are of opinion that section 115 validating past marriages en masse may, in point of law, properly be included in the Order. The section is in fact founded upon, and, in its material parts, is, the same as section 1 of "The Foreign Marriages Act, 1892," following the repealed Statute of 1849.

request for copy of note from Persian Government of December 10, 1889.

letter from Mr. C. L. Nichols,* one of the liquidators of the Persian Investment Corporation (Limited), asking to be furnished with a copy of the communication addressed to Her Majesty's Legation at Tehran on the 10th December, 1889, by the Persian Government, notifying the cancellation of the Lottery Concession.

That the despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran sending home the document in question was inclosed.

That the precise purpose for which the paper was required was not mentioned, and that it was only stated that the liquidators were advised that it was necessary for them to produce it at the trial of the action against Malcom Khan. But that it might be assumed that it was with a view to establishing the contention of the liquidators that Malcom Khan had full knowledge of the forfeiture and withdrawal of the Concession at the time he received the money of the Persian Investment Corporation.

That the letter which was addressed to the liquidators on the receipt of our Report of the 3rd July was also inclosed.

That in your Lordship's opinion it was not desirable that the Foreign Office should be mixed up more than might be absolutely unavoidable in the legal proceedings.

That, at the same time, having regard to the nature of the document in question, which was sent to Her Majesty's Legation "in order that those concerned may be informed," your Lordship doubted whether you would be justified, in the event of your being called upon under a subpœna duces tecum of a Court of Justice to produce it, in taking the objection that its production would be contrary to the interest of the public service.

That Sir T. Villiers Lister was, accordingly, to request that we would take the matter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the nature of the reply, which should be returned to the liquidators.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

Document may be furnished under conditions.

That, in our opinion, under the circumstances of the case, the document of the 10th December, 1889, should be produced upon a subpœna duces tecum; and that a copy may be furnished to the solicitors for the liquidators.

We think, however, that the solicitors for the liquidators should be required to state in writing that they are advised by their counsel that the production of the document is necessary for the purposes of evidence in their case, and that it will not be used for any other purpose. Upon this assurance being given the copy may be supplied.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, July 19, 1892.

Libel published in this country upon H. M. the Shah by Jemal-ed-Din.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a communication which had been addressed to you by the Persian Minister at this Court. That it related to the proceedings of a certain Sheikh Jemal-ed-Din, who was residing in London.

That that person was born in Persia, his parents being natives of Afghanistan. That, at the beginning of last year, the Shah received an anonymous letter grossly abusing him, and, being convinced that Jemal-ed-Din was its author or instigator, His Majesty caused him to be arrested and expelled across the Turkish frontier.

That frequent complaints had been addressed to Her Majesty's Government by the Shah with regard to the proceedings of Jemal-ed-Din since he had taken up his residence in this country.

That His Majesty alleged that that person sends from here to Persia papers grossly abusing him, and inciting the priests and others to rebel against his authority.

* Mr. Nichols, December 15, 1891; Sir H. D. Wolff's No. 239 of December 20, 1889; and to Liquidators of Persian Investment Corporation, July 4, 1891.

1892

That as specimens of those documents, the Persian Minister inclosed in his letter to your Lordship translations of circular letters or exhortations addressed to the priests of various parts of Persia, urging them to proclaim the dethronement of the Shah, and to declare it unlawful to obey him.

That those circulars also brought charges against the Shah which His Majesty considered to be of a nature to call for action on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

That your Lordship would be glad if we would report to you whether any, and if so what, legal proceedings could be taken in this country against Jemal-ed-Din, either by Her Majesty's Government or by the Persian Government, supposing him to be the writer of such documents as were inclosed in the letter from the Persian Minister.

That other papers, as marked in the margin,[*] connected with the matter, were inclosed for our information.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

H. M.'s Govt. cannot be advised to take any action in this case.

That, in our opinion, the facts stated afford no ground for the institution of legal proceedings by Her Majesty's Government.

It is competent to the Persian Representatives in this country to prosecute the author or publisher of any libel published here upon His Majesty the Shah.

Her Majesty's Government cannot be advised to take any action in this case, and has no administrative power of expelling the author of the letters complained of.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received November 4.)

[In reply to the following reference, the Law Officers reported on November 4 as on p. 53:—]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, November 3, 1892.

Persian Lottery Concession.

BY direction of the Earl of Rosebery, I have the honour to request your attention to the Reports from the late Law Officers of the Crown noted in the margin, and for convenience of reference inclosed herein. They relate to a Concession granted by the Shah of Persia, dated the 20th July, 1889, conferring for a period of seventy-five years the exclusive privilege of conducting all operations in connection with lottery loans and other similar issues in Persia.

The Concession in question was on the 5th December cancelled by the Shah, on the ground that he had signed it under a misapprehension, and that he found that its conditions were contrary to the religious law of Persia.

Out of this act of the Shah there arose various claims against the Persian Government, to which it is not now necessary to refer; but litigation has ensued, in which Malcom Khan, late Persian Minister at this Court, and his brother, Mikayl Khan, late a member of the Persian Legation, are involved; and the Earl of Rosebery desires to have your advice on some points which will be mentioned hereafter.

It is important to call your attention in the first instance to the dates of certain transactions in the matter. The Persian Government allege that they officially informed the Persian Minister in this country of the withdrawal of the Concession by a telegram, dated the 5th December, 1889. The fact of its being cancelled was notified in writing to Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran by the Persian Foreign Office on the 8th December; and Sir H. Wolff on the same day telegraphed the information to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. On the 10th December the official notification of that date, of which the original is inclosed in Sir F. Lascelles' despatch No. 25 of the 8th February, 1892, was substituted for the one of the 8th December, which was thereupon cancelled.

On the 25th November, 1889, a telegram was received from Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran, stating that he had just been informed by the Amin-es-Sultan (Grand Vizier) that Malcom Khan, the Persian Minister, who was interested in the Lottery Concession, had been recalled. On the 3rd December Malcom Khan himself, in conversation with the Permanent Under-Secretary of State, formally announced his recall as definitive. His letters of recall were dated December 1889, but no particular day is mentioned in them, and he did not have audience of Her Majesty the Queen to deliver them till 10th March, 1890.

The Concession was originally granted to the nominee of Malcom Khan, a certain Buzie de Caerdoel. This person by agreement of 3rd October, 1889, undertook to sell his rights to the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate (Limited), who, in order to pay part of the purchase money, borrowed 20,000*l.* from the New Oriental Bank Corporation on the collateral security of the Concession, and on the 12th October paid this 20,000*l.* to General Mikayl Khan (a member, as has before been stated, of the Persian Legation), who by assignment of M. Buzie de Caerdoel, dated 12th October, had become the holder of the Concession.

On the 15th November the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate entered into a preliminary contract for the sale of the Concession to the Persian Investment Corporation; and on the 18th of the same month they further contracted with General Mikayl Khan for a reduction of the price to be paid to him on account of the Concession.

The Contract of Sale of the 15th November was, with some modifications, accepted by the Persian Investment Corporation, and under the terms of the Contract of Adoption, the Persian Investment Corporation paid certain sums, out of which General Mikayl Khan, as assignee of the original concessionnaire, received on the 14th December a cheque for 20,000*l.*, which was handed to him by the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate, and paid into Malcom Khan's private account at the Western Branch of the Bank of England, such further payment having been made on the faith of a written assurance from Malcom Khan, dated the 20th November, 1889, and addressed to the solicitors of the Persian Investment Corporation, who were also acting for the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate, that "La dite Concession signée et ratifiée par le Schah est parfaitement correcte et inattaquable."

Legal proceedings were instituted some time ago against Mikayl Khan and his brother, Malcom Khan, by the liquidators of the Persian Investment Corporation, and on the recommendation of the Law Officers of the Crown (see their Report of the 12th May, 1891), a written assurance was obtained from the Persian Minister at this Court that "His Imperial Majesty the Shah will not claim diplomatic privilege on behalf of Mirza Malcom or his brother, Mikayl Khan, in the event of proceedings being instituted in this country in connection with the withdrawal of the Persian Lottery Loan Concession."

The Law Officers further advised that it would be desirable to obtain directions from the Government of His Majesty the Shah to the Persian Minister here that the latter should assist in establishing the repudiation of Malcom Khan and Mikayl Khan. The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs did not, however, consider it advisable to take any steps beyond obtaining from the Persian Minister the assurance on the part of the Shah contained in the Persian Minister's letter of the 22nd May, quoted above.

On the 24th June the liquidators requested that Her Majesty's Government would furnish them with such evidence as might constitute legal proof that—

1. The Concession was absolutely forfeited and withdrawn by the Shah, and
2. That Malcom Khan had full knowledge of such forfeiture and withdrawal at the time he received the money of the Corporation.

The applicants had already been informed by this Department that the Persian Minister would, if communicated with, probably be found ready to give evidence concerning the money which Malcom Khan received from their Corporation, and on the advice of the Law Officers (see their Report of the 3rd July, 1891), it was further intimated to the liquidators that Her Majesty's Government could not, in the state of circumstances then existing, give any further information or any evidence upon the question of the Persian Concession, but that Her Majesty's Government had no doubt that the Persian Minister would be able to give the necessary proof of the facts it was desired to establish.

On the 15th December, 1891, the liquidators of the Persian Investment Corporation asked for a copy of the communication addressed to Her Majesty's Legation at Tehran on the 10th December, 1889, by the Persian Government, notifying the cancellation of the Lottery Concession. The Marquis of Salisbury, after consulting the Law Officers of the Crown (see their Report of the 4th January, 1892), informed the solicitor for the liquidators that, before complying with their request, he must call upon him to state in writing—

1. That he was advised by Counsel that the production of the document would be necessary for the purposes of evidence in the case, and

2. That it would not be used for any other purpose. His Lordship said that upon such an assurance, a copy of the Notification would be supplied to the liquidators.

The Law Officers also advised that the document itself should be produced upon a subpœna duces tecum.

In the early part of the present year some further correspondence took place with the liquidators of the Persian Investment Corporation regarding the production of documents required by them, and on the 18th March they were informed that a responsible person from this Office would attend the court to prove the receipt and handwriting of these documents.

In reply to a request from them for assistance in obtaining from the Persian Legation evidence that Malcom Khan had received the telegram of the 5th December, 1889, hereinbefore mentioned, the liquidators were informed (8th April) that inquiries would be made at Tehran whether the Persian Government would authorize such evidence being given, and on the 25th April Lord Salisbury, having ascertained that instructions on the subject had been sent to the Persian Minister, so informed the liquidators.

In a letter of the 24th October, herein inclosed, the solicitors to the Persian Investment Corporation state that Counsel advises that, in their action against Malcom Khan, it will be necessary to produce evidence of the recall of Malcom Khan, and of the date when his appointment was cancelled; also to produce at the trial the telegram of the 8th December, 1889, from Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran, as well as his despatch forwarding the official Notification of the 10th December, 1889, from the Persian Government. They also state that they are advised that the Persian Minister in London should put forward some member of his Staff to give evidence as to Malcom Khan's recall, and to officially disclaim diplomatic privilege for the defendant, who is pleading complete immunity from process of the English Courts on the ground that he was Persian Minister.

Lord Rosebery proposes, in the matter of these proceedings, to follow, subject to your opinion, the lines of the advice given to Lord Salisbury by your predecessors in office. His Lordship, however, before taking action in the matter, wishes to know whether you concur in intimation being made to Messrs. Arber and Lewis that upon a subpœna duces tecum a responsible person from the Foreign Office will produce in court the telegram from Sir H. D. Wolff of the 8th December, 1889, and the despatch from Sir F. Lascelles of the 8th February, 1892, inclosing the Notification of the 10th December, 1889, from the Persian Government, also Malcom Khan's letters of recall, dated December 1889, and the Notice of his audience of the Queen to present them, inserted in the "London Gazette" of the 11th December, 1889, and the letter from the Persian Minister of the 22nd May, 1891, stating that the Shah will not claim diplomatic privilege for Malcom Khan or his brother.

As to any evidence to be procured from the Persian Legation, Lord Rosebery proposes to inform Messrs. Arber and Lewis that they should apply to the Persian Minister, and that this Department cannot assist them in the matter further than has already been done.

I am to request that you will take this letter, together with the accompanying papers, into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Rosebery, at your earliest convenience, with your opinion on the questions more particularly raised therein, as well as with any observations which you may think it desirable to offer upon the present aspect of the case, in so far as it concerns this Department.

I am, &c.
(Signed) P. CURRIE.

We have taken the questions submitted to us in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 3rd instant into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

List of documents that may be produced in Court. Messrs. Arber and Lewis should apply to Persian Minister for evidence from Persian Legation.

That, in our opinion, intimation may properly be made to Messrs. Arber and Lewis that, upon a subpœna duces tecum, a responsible person to be named by the Foreign Office will produce in court the telegram from Sir H. D. Wolff of the 8th December, 1889, the despatch from Sir F. Lascelles of the 8th February, 1892, inclosing the Notification of the 10th December, 1889, Malcom Khan's letters of recall of December 1889, the Notice in the "London Gazette" of the 11th December, 1889, and the letter from the Persian Minister of the 22nd May, 1891.

It would be right that Messrs. Arber and Lewis should be informed that as to evidence to be procured from the Persian Legation they must apply to the Persian Minister, and that the Department cannot assist them further.

No. 31.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received January 23.)

Royal Courts of Justice, January 21, 1892.

Draft Treaty with Portugal for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 25th November last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit the accompanying papers respecting a Treaty which your Lordship proposed to negotiate with Portugal for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals.

That the Treaty was based generally on the lines recently concluded by Her Majesty's Government with foreign countries, but that Sir Thomas Sanderson was to call our special attention to the last paragraph of Article 2, which provides that the Portuguese Government may, in its absolute discretion, refuse to deliver up any person, whether a subject of Her Majesty or not, charged with a crime punishable by death in this country.

That there was no English precedent for a clause of that description, but that in the present instance it had been adopted as a basis of negotiation in order to meet the views of Portugal, in which country no death penalty could be imposed by law.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to add that the Government of India was desirous of making a separate arrangement with Portugal respecting the extradition of criminals between British and Portuguese India, and that the Portuguese Government would be requested to give some assurance that they would be ready to conclude such an arrangement as part of the basis on which the Treaty was submitted to them for negotiation.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the draft Treaty might be properly submitted to the Portuguese Government, and with any general observations from a legal point of view which we might wish to offer.

We were also honoured with a note from Sir Thomas Sanderson, dated the 17th ultimo, inclosing a letter from the India Office (14th December, 1891) respecting the draft Treaty.

We were further honoured with a letter from Sir T. Villiers Lister, dated the 23rd December last, transmitting a further despatch from Sir G. Petre on the subject.

The Attorney-General's Opinion.

I have taken the papers into my consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Approves of the draf Treaty.

That, in my opinion, the draft Treaty may properly be submitted to the Portuguese Government.

It is to be regretted that that Government is unwilling to agree to extradite persons charged with capital offences, but the objection is of less importance having regard to Portuguese law, and it is certainly desirable that there should be an arrangement for the extradition of persons charged with other offences.

As regards the last paragraph but one of Article II, it should, in my opinion, be permitted to stand. My reasons for the opinion are partly those expressed by the Law Officers in their opinion respecting the Extradition Treaty with Russia (Law Officers to Treasury, 12th December, 1885); and, in addition, I would call attention to the fact that the clause, being permissive only, could not in practice be used to obtain the surrender of persons for trivial offences, and extradition under it will always be subject to the control of the Secretary of State. In my opinion, the provisions contained in the paragraph are salutary, and not open to any serious objection.

I have, &c.

The Solicitor-General's Opinion

I have also taken the papers into consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Approves of the draft Treaty with the exception of the last paragraph but one in Article II which should be omitted.

That, in my opinion, the draft Treaty, subject to the excision of the paragraph hereafter mentioned, may properly be submitted to the Portuguese Government; and I agree with the Attorney-General in his observation as to the extradition of persons charged with capital offences.

The last paragraph but one in Article II, in my opinion, is open to serious objection, and should be omitted.

It purports to confer upon the Secretary of State a discretionary power of surrendering persons to Portugal for offences which are not specified in the Treaty, which may be of a trivial character, and in respect of which there is no obligation to reciprocal action on the part of the Portuguese Government.

This provision comes before me for consideration for the first time.

Extradition Treaties.

It appears to have been first inserted in 1885, and I ascertain that objection was then made to it by Sir J. Ingham, and that his objection was overruled by the then Law Officers. The Treaties with Russia and Mexico were then being considered, and, in accordance with the opinion given by the Law Officers, it was inserted in those Treaties. It has since been adopted in at least one Treaty, that with Colombia, which was not submitted in draft to the Law Officers.

I feel bound to make the strongest protest in my power against its adoption. The Treaty, when the Extradition Acts have been put into force in respect of it by Order in Council, becomes part of the criminal law of this country; and it is, in my judgment, wholly unconstitutional to put the operation of that law in the discretion of the Secretary of State.

The provision is not needed, for the offences to which, if operative at all, it would apply, are not offences of a gravity which requires, or, in my opinion, justifies, their being made the subject of extradition. I doubt myself whether the Courts would hold that this provision had the effect of allowing the Secretary of State, at his discretion, to surrender to Portugal a person charged with committing an offence not mentioned in the Treaty, on the ground of contravention of some Law in Portugal said to correspond with provisions in English Statutes not specified in the arrangement made between the countries; and if a claim were made by Portugal for the surrender of such a person, and the High Court were to hold that the clause was inoperative, some diplomatic unpleasantness would probably result. I, however, assume it to be operative, and ask to what crimes it will apply.

They are such indictable offences under the Criminal Law Consolidation Acts of 1861 as have not been enumerated in the list of crimes contained in the Treaty. I take a few examples. Under 24 & 25 Vict., cap. 96, the following are indictable offences:—

Unlawfully hunting deer in uninclosed land after one summary conviction (section 12);

Unlawfully hunting deer in inclosed land (section 13);

Fraudulently destroying, cancelling, or obliterating a valuable security (section 27), a document of title to lands (section 28), or a will (section 29);

Sacrilege (section 50).

Taking reward for recovery of stolen property (section 101).

Under 24 & 25 Vict., cap. 97:—

Injuries to buildings by rioters (section 12); unlawful and malicious injuries to dwelling-houses, or the severing of fixtures therefrom by the tenant (section 13);

Destroying a tree or shrub, &c., in pleasure grounds to the value of 1*l.* (section 20);

Injuring a turnpike gate maliciously (section 34);

Malicious injury to property of any kind, public or private, to the amount of 5*l.* (section 51).

Under 24 & 25 Vict., cap. 100:—

Not providing apprentices or servants with food (section 26);

Setting spring guns against trespassers (section 31);

Causing bodily harm by furious driving (section 35);

Obstructing a clergyman or other minister in the performance of his duty (section 36);

Wilfully obstructing a peace officer in the execution of his duty (section 38).

As the Treaty now stands it will be impossible for any one to know whether extradition will be claimed or granted in regard to these matters by either the British or the Portuguese Government.

I submit that the penalty of being arrested in the one country, detained there, often necessarily for a long period, while evidence is obtained, and then sent as a prisoner to the other country, is far too serious a procedure to be properly applied to offences of this character.

In the second edition of my book which was published in 1874 I protested against the provisions of the Act of 1873, and I feel it my duty now to urge the omission of a clause which is quite unnecessary, and in my belief mischievous, and likely to cause legal and diplomatic difficulties.

I have, &c.

32. Revolt, or conspiracy to revolt, by two or more persons on board a ship on the high seas against the authority of the master.
33. Dealing in slaves in such a manner as to constitute a criminal offence against the laws of both States.

Extradition is also to be granted for participation in any of the aforesaid crimes, provided such participation be punishable by the laws of both the Contracting Parties.

* Extradition may also be granted, at the discretion of the State applied to, in respect of any other crime for which, according to the laws of both the Contracting Parties for the time being in force, the grant can be made.

The Portuguese Government, however, may in its absolute discretion refuse to deliver up any person charged with a crime punishable with death.

ARTICLE III.

Either Government may, in its absolute discretion, refuse to deliver up its own subjects to the other Government.

ARTICLE IV.

The extradition shall not take place if the person claimed on the part of the British Government, or the person claimed on the part of the Portuguese Government, has already been tried and discharged or punished, or is still under trial, within the territories of the two High Contracting Parties respectively, for the crime for which his extradition is demanded.

If the person claimed on the part of the British Government, or if the person claimed on the part of the Portuguese Government, should be under examination, or is undergoing sentence under a conviction, for any other crime within the territories of the two High Contracting Parties respectively, his extradition shall be deferred until after he has been discharged, whether by acquittal, or on expiration of his sentence, or otherwise.

ARTICLE V.

The extradition shall not take place if, subsequently to the commission of the crime, or the institution of the penal prosecution, or the conviction thereon, exemption from prosecution or punishment has been acquired by lapse of time, according to the laws of the State applied to.

ARTICLE VI.

A fugitive criminal shall not be surrendered if the offence in respect of which his surrender is demanded is one of a political character, or if he prove that the requisition for his surrender has in fact been made with a view to try or punish him for an offence of a political character.

ARTICLE VII.

A person surrendered can in no case be kept in prison, or be brought to trial in the State to which the surrender has been made, for any other crime or on account of any other matters than those for which the extradition shall have taken place, until he has been restored or had an opportunity of returning to the State by which he has been surrendered.

This stipulation does not apply to crimes committed after the extradition.

ARTICLE VIII.

The requisition for extradition shall be made through the Diplomatic Agents of the High Contracting Parties respectively.

The requisition for the extradition of an accused person must be accompanied by a warrant of arrest issued by the competent authority of the State requiring the extradition, and by such evidence as, according to the laws of the place where the accused is found, would justify his arrest if the crime had been committed there.

If the requisition relates to a person already convicted, it must be accompanied by the sentence of condemnation passed against the convicted person by the competent Court of the State that makes the requisition for extradition.

A sentence passed in contumaciam is not to be deemed a conviction, but a person so sentenced may be dealt with as an accused person.

ARTICLE IX.

If the requisition for extradition be in accordance with the foregoing stipulations, the competent authorities of the State applied to shall proceed to the arrest of the fugitive.

---

* Omitted by the Solicitor-General.

1892

ARTICLE X.

If the fugitive has been arrested in the British dominions, he shall forthwith be brought before a competent Magistrate, who is to examine him and to conduct the preliminary investigation of the case, just as if the apprehension had taken place for a crime committed in the British dominions.

In the examinations which they have to make in accordance with the foregoing stipulations, the authorities of the British dominions shall admit as valid evidence the sworn depositions or the affirmations of witnesses taken in the dominions of Portugal, or copies thereof, and likewise the warrants and sentences issued therein, and certificates of, or judicial documents stating the fact of, a conviction, provided the same are authenticated as follows:—

1. A warrant must purport to be signed by a Portuguese Judge, Magistrate, or officer.

2. Depositions or affirmations, or the copies thereof, must purport to be certified under the hand of a Portuguese Judge, Magistrate, or officer, to be the original depositions or affirmations, or to be the true copies thereof, as the case may require.

3. A certificate of or judicial document stating the fact of a conviction must purport to be certified by a Portuguese Judge, Magistrate, or officer.

4. In every case such warrant, deposition, affirmation, copy, certificate, or judicial document must be authenticated either by the oath of some witness, or by being sealed with the official seal of the Minister of Justice, or some other Portuguese Minister; but any other mode of authentication for the time being permitted by the law in that part of the British dominions where the examination is taken may be substituted for the foregoing.

ARTICLE XI.

If the fugitive has been arrested in the dominions of Portugal his surrender shall be granted if upon examination by a competent authority it appears that the documents furnished by the British Government contain sufficient primâ facie evidence to justify the extradition.

The Portuguese authorities shall admit as valid evidence records drawn up by the British authorities of the depositions of witnesses, or copies thereof, and records of conviction or other judicial documents, or copies thereof: Provided that the said documents be signed or authenticated by an authority whose competence shall be certified by the seal of a Minister of State of Her Britannic Majesty.

ARTICLE XII.

The extradition shall not take place unless the evidence be found sufficient, according to the laws of the State applied to, either to justify the committal of the prisoner for trial, in case the crime had been committed in the territory of the said State, or to prove that the prisoner is the identical person convicted by the Courts of the State which makes the requisition, and that the crime of which he has been convicted is one in respect of which extradition could, at the time of such conviction, have been granted by the State applied to. In Her Britannic Majesty's dominions, the fugitive criminal shall not be surrendered until the expiration of fifteen days from the date of his being committed to prison to await his surrender.

ARTICLE XIII.

If the individual claimed by one of the two High Contracting Parties in pursuance of the present Treaty should be also claimed by one or several other Powers, on account of other crimes or offences committed upon their respective territories, his extradition shall be granted to that State whose demand is earliest in date.

ARTICLE XIV.

If sufficient evidence for the extradition be not produced within two months from the date of the apprehension of the fugitive, or within such further time as the State applied to, or the proper Tribunal thereof, shall direct, the fugitive shall be set at liberty.

ARTICLE XV.

All articles seized which were in the possession of the person to be surrendered at the time of his apprehension shall, if the competent authority of the State applied to for the extradition has ordered the delivery thereof, be given up when the extradition takes place; and the said delivery shall extend not merely to the stolen articles, but to everything that may serve as a proof of the crime.

ARTICLE XVI.

All expenses connected with extradition shall be borne by the demanding State.

ARTICLE XVII.

The stipulations of the present Treaty shall be applicable to the Colonies and foreign possessions of both of the High Contracting Parties, so far as the laws for the time being in force in such Colonies and foreign posssesions respectively will allow.

The requisition for the surrender of a fugitive criminal who has taken refuge in any of such Colonies or foreign possessions may be made to the Governor or chief authority of such Colony or possession by the chief Consular authority of the other State in such Colony or possession.

Such requisitions may be disposed of, subject always, as nearly as may be, and so far as the law of such Colony or foreign possession will allow, to the provisions of this Treaty, by the said Governor or chief authority, who, however, shall be at liberty either to grant the surrender, or to refer the matter to his Government.

The High Contracting Parties shall, however, be at liberty to make special arrangements in their respective Colonies and foreign possessions for the surrender of criminals who may take refuge therein, on the basis, as nearly as may be, and so far as the law of such Colony or foreign possession will allow, of the provisions of the present Treaty.

Requisitions for the surrender of a fugitive criminal emanating from any Colony or foreign possession of either of the High Contracting Parties shall be governed by the rules laid down in the preceding Articles of the present Treaty.

ARTICLE XVIII.

The present Treaty shall come into force ten days after its publication, in conformity with the forms prescribed by the laws of the High Contracting Parties. It may be terminated by either of the High Contracting Parties at any time on giving to the other six months' notice of its intention to do so.

The Treaty shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at as soon as possible.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same, and have affixed thereto the seal of their arms.

Claim against Portuguese Government of Messrs. A. Cohen and Co. for illegal detention of goods. Case of the "Norseman."

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 9th September last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin* relative to a claim advanced against the Portuguese Government by Messrs. A. Cohen and Co., British subjects, trading at Beira, in the Portuguese possessions on the East Coast of Africa, on account of losses alleged to have been sustained by them through the arbitrary acts of the Portuguese authorities at Beira in April 1891.

That the circumstances were as follows:—

That Messrs. A. Cohen and Co. shipped from Cape Town, per the "Norseman," a stock of goods for opening up stores at M'panda's, some way inland from Beira.

Law Officers' Report, July 6, 1891. Confidential No. 6207, p. 19.

That the "Norseman" was one of the vessels under the command of Sir John Willoughby, which were stopped at Beira under circumstances which formed the subject of the reference to our predecessors from the Foreign Office of the 29th May, 1891, and as to which they reported, on the 6th July, 1891, that, in their opinion, Her Majesty's Government were entitled to demand compensation from the Portuguese Government.

That a copy of the statement, sworn before Her Majesty's Vice-Consul at Delagoa Bay, describing the details of the occurrence, which accompanied the reference of the 29th May, 1891, was inclosed, together with a full report on the items of the claim. (See inclosures to Colonial Office letter of the 12th August, 1892.)

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion—

1. Whether Her Majesty's Government were entitled to demand, on behalf of Messrs. Cohen and Co., compensation from the Government of Portugal in respect of the acts complained of;

2. If yes, to what extent could the items and amount of the claim of 5,000*l.* now presented be properly supported by Her Majesty's Government; and

3. On what special grounds could such claim most advantageously be based.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion—

1. Her Majesty's Government is entitled to demand on behalf of Messrs. A. Cohen and Co. compensation from the Government of Portugal in respect of the acts complained of.

2. The greater part of the items claimed cannot properly be supported.

---

* Inclosures in Colonial Office letters of January 11 and August 12, 1892; Statement by Sir J. Willoughby.

1892

The item of 2,500*l.* alleged to have arisen from loss of credit occasioned by the registration of the deed of hypothecation is too speculative and remote, and cannot be maintained.

The item of 1,500*l.* for loss of profit seems to be greatly exaggerated, though some allowance might fairly be claimed under this head, say 500*l.*

The item of 100*l.* for loss of interest on capital cannot be maintained together with the claim for loss of profit.

1,000*l.* damages may be claimed.

The other items, though imperfectly vouched and not clearly made out, would justify a further demand for damages, say 500*l.*, making altogether 1,000*l.*

3. The special ground on which the demand may fairly be made is the illegal detention of the goods.

RUSSIA.

No. 33*.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received November 23.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, November 23, 1892.

Seizure by Russians of six British sealing-vessels. Pursuit beyond 3-mile limit.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the seizure by Russian Government vessels in Behring Sea of six British sealing-vessels, named the "Ariel," "Willie McGowan," "Rosie Olsen," "Vancouver Belle," "Mary," and "Carmolite," and of three of the boats of the "W. P. Sayward," and to the loss of one boat belonging to the "E. B. Marvin," with three men on board.

That under "The Seal Fishery (Behring Sea) Act, 1891," Orders in Council were passed on the 24th June, 1891, and 9th May, 1892, prohibiting the catching of seals by British ships in Behring Sea to the east of certain limits therein described, but that none of the above-named vessels were, at the time they were seized, in the waters affected by those Orders.

That the circumstances under which the seizures of the three first-named vessels took place were given in a letter from the Colonial Office of the 13th October last, which was accompanied by affidavits on the part of the masters and others on board those vessels.

That an affidavit by the master of the "W. P. Sayward" respecting the seizure by the Russians of three of the boats belonging to that vessel formed Inclosure 3 of the Colonial Office letter of the 20th October, 1892.

That it would be observed, on examination of the affidavits in the cases of the "Ariel," "Willie McGowan," and "Rosie Olsen," that the crews of those vessels had strongly protested, not only against the treatment they received at the hands of the Russian authorities, but also with reference to the alleged illegality of the seizures, which it was asserted were effected outside Russian territorial waters, at distances from the nearest Russian land, in the case of the "Ariel" of between 30 and 40 miles, of the "Willie McGowan" of 42½ miles, and of the "Rosie Olsen" of 30 miles.

That according to the affidavit of the master of the "W. P. Sayward" his vessel was about 20 miles from Copper Island, which was a Russian possession, when three of her boats were seized by a Russian steam-launch.

That the case of the "E. B. Marvin" appeared to differ from those of the other sealers, inasmuch as in the affidavit received from the master of that vessel there was no direct evidence that her missing boat had been captured, nor was it distinctly laid down at what distance from land the vessel was situated when the boats left her on the morning of the 5th August for the purpose of seal-hunting (see Inclosure 4 in Colonial Office letter of the 1st November).

That in a note addressed to Sir R. Morier by M. Chichkine, the Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs at St. Petersburgh, it was stated that the "Vancouver Belle," "Mary," and "Carmolite" were released with a warning by their captors, to whom their officers expressed their gratitude for the treatment received by themselves and their crews while detained on board the Russian cruiser "Vitias" (Inclosure 1 in Sir R. Morier's No. 251 of the 16th October).

That the same document contained a denial of alleged ill-treatment of the crews of the "Ariel," "Willie McGowan," and "Rosie Olsen," who were said to have been guilty of riotous behaviour after being landed on Russian territory at Petropavlovsk.

That M. Chichkine subsequently furnished Sir R. Morier with a translation in French of a "Communiqué" in the Russian "Official Messenger" containing a detailed account of the facts relating to the seizures of the British sealers, which it stated were effected in the cases of the "Willie McGowan," "Ariel," and "Rosie Olsen" at distances of 21, 22, and 13 miles from the nearest Russian coast, and in those of the "Vancouver Belle," "Mary," and "Carmolite" at 18, 8, and 28 miles respectively from the nearest Russian coast (Inclosure in Sir R. Morier's No. 255 of the 21st October).

That thus it would be seen that, according to the statements of the Russians, as well as of the masters of all the schooners, the seizures were effected beyond the usually recognized territorial limit of 3 miles.

That in consideration of the question at issue between Her Majesty's Government and that of Russia, it was necessary to bear in mind what rights were claimed by Russia in her waters in the Pacific.

That in a note addressed by M. de Giers to the United States' Chargé d'Affaires at St. Petersburgh on the 8th (20th) May, 1882, it was laid down that "the prohibition of hunting and fishing in these waters extends strictly to the territorial waters of Russia only" (see United States' White Book, Ex. Doc. No. 106, H.R., 1889, p. 262).

That in the case of the "Araunah" the late Law Officers of the Crown laid it down, in their Reports of the 2nd May and 9th October, 1890, that even if that vessel, at the time of seizure, was herself outside the 3-mile territorial limit, the fact that she was, by means of her boats, carrying on fishing within Russian waters without the prescribed licence, warranted her seizure and confiscation according to the provisions of the municipal law regulating those waters.

That in the reports received from Mr. Howard and Sir R. Morier of their interviews with the Representatives of the Russian Foreign Office (Mr. Howard's No. 213 and Sir R. Morier's No. 217 of the 17th and 23rd September), the latter appeared to have raised the question whether, supposing the sealers had been taken in the open sea, the Russian cruisers would not have been justified, if they had previously observed them in flagrante delicto in territorial waters, in pursuing them thence into the open sea until they overtook and captured them.

That on that point our attention was invited to a Memorandum sent home with Sir R. Morier's despatch No. 218 of the 23rd September, bearing on the claims of Russia to territorial rights beyond the limit of 3 marine miles from low-water mark.

That with regard to the right of the authorities of a foreign State to pursue within a reasonable time and bring back into harbour a ship which had sailed beyond the territorial water of that State, we should find that, in the case of the British barque "St. Mary's Bay," which was seized outside the 3-mile territorial limit of Chilean waters by the harbour authorities of Valparaiso, our predecessors were of opinion that the Chilean authorities did not by their action infringe any principle of international law (Law Officers, 5th November, 1891).

But that it appeared clearly from the affidavits above referred to, and the accompanying Russian protocols, that the three vessels in question were not followed out of the territorial waters of Russia, but were taken in the open sea.

That your Lordship was yourself disposed to think it would be difficult for Her Majesty's Government to object to such seizures, in cases where the offence and flight of the incriminated vessels had been continuous, and the pursuit had been commenced while they were still within territorial waters.

That it seemed, moreover, that much might be said in justification of a pursuit and subsequent capture, even if the offending vessel had made good her escape from territorial waters before the pursuit was commenced, provided always that the pursuit was begun within a reasonable time after the offence, and also at the earliest possible moment available, having regard to the means of pursuit at hand.

That on those points, however, your Lordship specially desired to be favoured with our opinion for your assistance in the further consideration of the general question.

That on receiving the protests and depositions of the masters, mates, and others on board the British vessels respecting their capture and subsequent treatment, Sir R. Morier was instructed to communicate to the Russian Government the evidence forwarded to Her Majesty's Government, and to state that they would await the result of the inquiries being made before advancing any definite claims on behalf of the owners and crews (see R. Morier's No. 202 of the 18th October).

That a draft of a note* had been prepared by his Excellency for presentation to the Russian Government, and, after some slight alterations, was forwarded for our opinion.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers which were transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the terms of the proposed draft note to the Russian Government sufficiently and properly meet the requirements of the case, or, if not, in what respects they might advantageously be altered or amended; and that Sir Thomas Sanderson was to add that your Lordship would, at the same time, be glad to be favoured with our views upon the questions specially raised on p. 17 of his letter, as well as with any observations which we might desire to offer on the matter generally.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

1. That we have made some unimportant alterations in the draft of the proposed note to the Russian Government, and we think it sufficiently and properly meets the requirements of the case subject to this observation: The argument beginning on p. 4 of the draft proceeds on the ground that even if the vessels had been poaching in territorial waters their subsequent seizure was not the result of a "hot pursuit" under circumstances to justify such seizure in the open sea upon principles of international law, but there is nowhere the allegation that they had not been so engaged.

It is obvious that the position of the Government would be morally, as well as legally, much stronger if it feels justified in denying the alleged fact that the vessels had been poaching in territorial waters on the occasions in question.

2. We think your Lordship's views (set forth at pp. 16 and 17 of Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 16th instant) correctly indicate the considerations by which the legality of a seizure outside territorial waters for an offence within them ought properly to be determined.

We have, &c.

British Vice-Consulate at Las Palmas.

solemnized at the British Vice-Consulate at Las Palmas, Grand Canary, on the 14th July last. That the facts, as stated by Mr. Monckton, were as follows:—

That after due notice had been given, as required by "The Marriage Act, 1890," section 7 (1), and at the time and place above mentioned, the marriage was solemnized by Captain Harford, Her Majesty's Consul for the Canary Islands, whose public office was at Santa Cruz, in the Island of Teneriffe, and who was a Consular officer authorized to solemnize and register marriages in the manner provided by the 19th section of "The Consular Marriage Act, 1849," the Vice-Consul at Las Palmas not being so authorized.

That it was also alleged, and that it might be assumed as proved for the purposes of the reference to us, that in respect of the hours between which a marriage must take place, and of all other matters, the requirements of English law were duly complied with.

Marriage Circular of 20th August, 1853.

That the instructions relating to Consular marriages which were embodied in a Circular despatch of the 20th August, 1853, contained the following direction:—

"The only place where marriages under this Act ('The Consular Marriage Act, 1849,') may be solemnized is the British Consulate, that is, the public office of the Consul-General, Consul, Vice-Consul, or Consular Agent, as the case may be."

That the terms of that Circular were subsequently approved by the then Queen's Advocate, Sir R. Phillimore, in a Report with which he favoured Lord Stanley on the 4th June, 1867 (see Law Officers' Reports for 1867, France, No. 50, at pp. 40 and 41).

That the interpretation placed on that direction by the Consul was, according to Mr. Monckton, that the Vice-Consul's office was temporarily the Consul's office when the Consul was there, such Vice-Consul being an officer under the Consul's superintendence, and such office being within the district of the said Consul.

That is was clear, however, that that view could not be entertained, having regard to our Report of the 10th March, 1888 (see Law Officers' Reports for 1888, Madagascar, No. 31, at pp. 37-39).

That the 7th section, paragraph 1, of "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1891" (which was passed in the month following the solemnization of the incriminated marriage), however, provided:—

"Where a marriage purports to have been solemnized and registered, in pursuance of the Foreign Marriage Acts or any of them . . . . . , in a British Consulate, it shall not be necessary in support of the marriage to give any proof of the authority of the marriage officer within the meaning of this Act by or before whom the marriage was solemnized and registered, nor shall any evidence to prove his want of authority, whether by reason of his not being a duly authorized officer, or of any prohibition or restriction under the Marriage Regulations, or otherwise, be given in any legal proceedings touching the validity of the marriage."

That your Lordship requested that we would be so good as to take the case into consideration, and would favour you with our opinion (a) whether section 7 (1) of the Act of 1891 could be held to operate retrospectively, and, if so, whether the marriage would be entitled to the benefits of that section; and (b) assuming that the marriage should, in our opinion, be invalid, whether the parties should be advised to go through a legal form of marriage without delay.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

The parties should be advised to be legally married without delay, as a grave question may arise as to the validity of the marriage.

That, in our opinion, the provisions of the Act of 1891, even if retrospective, would not cure any defect in the marriage due to the fact of its having been solemnized at the office of the Vice-Consul at Las Palmas instead of at the Consulate of Captain Harford at Santa Cruz; and, inasmuch as a grave question may arise as to the validity of the marriage, we are of opinion that the parties should be advised to be legally married without delay.

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received February 27.)

[After reciting the reference which follows, they report on 25th February as on p. 66:—]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Case of the "Trojan." Compensation to parties injured by the action of the Kaïmakam of Tenedos.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, January 8, 1892.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquis of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list which relate to the case of the "Trojan."

Certain other books and papers referred to in the course of this reference, which do not form a part of the correspondence in the case, are also inclosed, and will be found noted on a second list.

This case is laid before you at some length, because the precedents, so far as they have been discovered, appear primâ facie to be somewhat contradictory, and because the appeals to writers on international law in the course of the correspondence with the Porte give the case an importance greater than it would otherwise have deserved.*

The facts of the case appear to be briefly as follows:—

The British steamer "Trojan" appeared off the Island of Tenedos in the month of October 1889, and was met by the Harbour-master, who stated that she must not enter the harbour; the master did, nevertheless, land by means of a small boat, and at the Health Office was referred to the Kaïmakam, who refused permission for the "Trojan" to touch at Tenedos. Certain reasons were subsequently given by the Kaïmakam to the Sublime Porte in justification for his action; but the facts on which these reasons were founded are disputed by the owners of the "Trojan," and it would appear that the Ottoman Government recognized that they were insufficient; for six months after the events just related the Kaïmakam was removed by the Porte for his conduct in this case. It may be added that from the British point of view the "Trojan" had a perfect right to touch for trade or otherwise at Tenedos, and that the circumstances alleged by the Kaïmakam, even if they had been such as he stated to the Porte, would not in any way have authorized the refusal to allow the ship to touch. It may be assumed that the Porte, judging by its subsequent dismissal of the Kaïmakam, held the same view of the case as that held by Her Majesty's Government.

The owners of the "Trojan" now claim pecuniary compensation from the Ottoman Government for the loss suffered by them through the action of the Kaïmakam.

The case raises the question of the responsibility of a Government for the acts of its Agents.

It may be assumed, it is thought, from the account of the case given in the papers—

1. That the Kaïmakam was acting within the scope of his official duties, i.e., that had any of the facts alleged by him to the Porte been sufficient to justify a refusal to permit the "Trojan" to touch at Tenedos, he was the officer whose duty it was, at least in the first instance, to take cognizance of those facts and to act on them.

2. That his action was not taken in any military capacity, although he called armed policemen to enforce his decision; and that his action was not prompted by any such considerations for the direct benefit of the Ottoman Government as usually prompt the actions of the private agents of private principals.

3. That his action may be attributed to mistake, to ignorance, or to error of judgment.

4. That he is, in his private capacity, liable under Ottoman law to a civil suit for damages at the instance of the owners of the "Trojan."

5. That such a suit, even if successfully prosecuted, is hardly likely to indemnify the owners of the "Trojan" for the loss his action entailed on them.

6. That although the Kaïmakam was not dismissed for some six months after his refusal to allow the "Trojan" to touch at Tenedos, the Porte did by such dismissal disavow the action of its Agent as quickly as the circumstances of the case and the general slowness of Ottoman administrative procedure allowed.

7. That although the "Trojan" was, on two successive visits to the island, refused permission to touch, it can hardly be said that the Porte made itself responsible for the Kaïmakam's action because it had failed to furnish him with proper instructions before the second visit. For the Porte pleads, and probably justly, that the interval between the visits was too short to allow of the necessary inquiries being made.

In his note to the Porte of the 25th May last Sir W. White quoted from section 350 of Calvo's International Law, 3rd edition, a passage to show that a Government is bound to make compensation for the wrongful acts of its Agents, even though it neither authorized such acts nor approved them. This passage appeared, on the face of it, strongly to support the view that in the present case the Porte was bound to compensate the owners of the "Trojan." But in a note of the 1st October last, the Porte has, correctly it would seem, pointed out that the passage cited is not apposite, as its application is limited by words omitted from Sir W. White's quotation, to acts committed abroad by the Agents of the Government. The paragraph quoted by Sir W. White from Bluntschli also fails, it is thought, to give that writer's opinion on cases similar to that now under consideration. The opinion of both Bluntschli and Calvo appears to be correctly quoted by the Porte, and is very clearly to the effect that in the case of the wrongful acts of Government Agents (with the exception, in the case of Calvo, of acts done abroad), the Government which appointed them is not materially responsible for acts which it neither brought about nor concurred in.

This question appears to be somewhat summarily treated by writers on international law, with the exception of Calvo, who has written on it in considerable detail. His statement respecting the material responsibility of Governments for the acts of their Agents is as follows:—

"Dans l'intérieur des limites juridictionnelles, les Agents de l'autorité de toute classe sont personnellement seuls responsables dans la mesure établie par le droit public interne de chaque État. Lorsqu'ils manquent à leurs devoirs, excèdent leurs attributions ou violent la loi, ils créent selon les circonstances, à ceux dont ils ont lésé les droits, un recours légal par les voies administratives ou judiciaires; mais à l'égard des tiers, nationaux ou étrangers, la reponsabilité du Gouvernement qui les a institués reste purement morale et ne saurait devenir directe et effective qu'en cas de complicité ou de déni de justice manifeste."

The same writer sums up as follows:—

"Lorsqu'il s'agit de ses fonctionnaires ou agents, un Gouvernment peut être tenu pour responsable des conséquences de leurs actes, dans les circonstances suivantes: si, ayant été en temps opportun pour l'empêcher prévenu du fait illicite que son Agent avait l'intention de commettre, il ne l'a pas empêché;

"Si, ayant eu le temps d'annuler l'acte de son Agent, il ne l'a pas fait immédiatement;

"Si, informé du fait accompli, il ne s'est pas empressé de blâmer la conduite de son Agent et de prendre les précautions nécessaires pour en empêcher le renouvellement."

The passages quoted in the Ottoman note inclosed in Sir W. White's despatch No. 125, Commercial, of the 1st October, 1891, from Bluntschli, are to the same effect.

Sir R. Phillimore's International Law contains the following passage on diplomatic intervention in support of private claims:—*

"The State must be satisfied that its citizen has exhausted the means of legal redress afforded by the Tribunals of the country in which he has been injured. If those Tribunals are unable or unwilling to entertain and adjudicate upon his grievance, the ground for interference is fairly laid. But it behoves the interfering State to take the utmost care (1) that the commission of the wrong be clearly established; (2) that the denial of the local Tribunals to decide the question at issue be no less clearly established."

In harmony with these expressions of opinion are the carefully reasoned theoretical positions set out by Sir A. Cockburn at pp. 36 and 37 of his "Reasons for dissenting from the Award" of the "Alabama" Arbitration Tribunal. It is true that Sir A. Cockburn was the sole dissenting member of the Tribunal; but the Award does not in any way affect the soundness of the arguments to which attention is now called; the Award was founded on the ground that "due diligence" had not been used by the Government of Great Britain, whereas Sir A. Cockburn held the contrary opinion.

A very important case in support of Calvo's opinion is cited in section 1269 of his work (fourth edition). It is thought that much weight should be attached to this case, because it involved the repayment by the Government of the United States to that of Brazil of a sum of 14,000*l.* exacted fifteen years before from the latter Government as compensation for injuries caused by the corrupt or mistaken decision of a Brazilian Judge.

The opinion of the United States' Attorney-General will be found at p. 553 of vol. xiii of the published "Opinions of the Attorneys-General of the United States."

In this opinion reference is made to a Report by Mr. Caleb Cushing, given at p. 229 of vol. vii of the above-mentioned collection of opinions, in which the question of the liability of a Government for the acts of its non-military and non-diplomatic Agents is very carefully considered.

Mr. Cushing observes that the Government of the United States guarantees neither to natives nor to foreigners the honesty or capacity of its officials. He makes what appears to be a most important distinction between (a) such Agents of a Government as stand towards it in the same relation as a private agent does to a private principal; these agents act for the direct benefit of the principal; and (b) such Agents of a Government as are appointed by it in its capacity of parens patriæ, who are not moved by considerations of the immediate benefit of the Government. As examples of Agents included in the first category may be cited revenue officials, whose acts, like those of private agents, may be assumed to have been, or to have been intended to be, for the advantage of their principals. In the second category will be placed judicial and most administrative officials, whose actions are not primâ facie prompted by any consideration for the immediate benefit of their principal, the Government.

To the acts of the former class of officials the legal maxim "respondeat superior" would, in Mr. Cushing's opinion, as a rule apply, but not to the acts of officials of the latter category.

Calvo, whose work is again referred to because he appears to have treated the question of a Government's responsibility for the acts of its Agents at greater length than other modern writers on international law, holds a Government to be materially responsible when it acknowledges that, or it is clearly shown that, the injury suffered was the direct consequence of its own Regulations and orders, and that it is similarly responsible for acts carried out abroad, where such acts have a truly national character and the Agents accomplishing them are official representatives, the delegates of the public force or otherwise; it so happens, however, that the only Government Agents who well can act abroad are Diplomatic and Consular Representatives and officers of the military (naval) forces; it is suggested that the distinction made by Calvo should be made to rest not on the place where the acts are carried out, but on the character of the Agent. Diplomatic Agents are to a very considerable extent appointed for the express purpose of declaring the opinions held by their Governments, while one of the most important functions laid upon Consuls consists in issuing papers required for sending goods to, or for visiting, the countries for the Governments of which they act; they are, in most cases, required to charge fees for these and other services, and are often to a very large extent fiscal officers. The strict discipline and implicit obedience which are essential to the very existence of a military force worthy of the name, and which a Government would hardly acknowledge to be lacking in its army or navy, afford good ground for holding that its acts must be considered as the acts of the Government from which it depends; at the same time, the overwhelming power wielded by a military force usually renders resistance, or appeal to a higher authority, impossible. These considerations weigh equally, whether the force act at home or abroad.

It is thought that the distinction referred to above, made by Mr. Cushing between Government Agents who may be supposed to act for the direct benefit of their principal, and others who do not so act, together with the distinction just suggested between Diplomatic, Consular, and Military Agents, as opposed to other agents, will, in part at least, account for the many apparent contradictions which are afforded by the cases which have come before this Department.

It is stated in the accompanying Memorandum, prepared by Sir E. Hertslet in 1877, that there appears to be no instance on record in which the British Government has given compensation to a foreigner for an injury sustained at the hands of a public officer, but several cases are cited in which compensation has been demanded by Her Majesty's Government of foreign Governments on account of the improper action of the Agents of those foreign Governments. It will be perceived that in nearly every one of the cases cited the military, or quasi-military, element of the Government was largely concerned.

Convention between Great Britain and the United States, 8th February, 1853.

Under a Convention signed on the 8th February, 1853, the Governments of Great Britain and of the United States appointed Commissioners to settle various claims made by private individuals against the one or the other of the Contracting Parties. The Commissioners were to decide on the matters brought before them "according to justice and equity;" it is therefore thought that their decisions will not have been in disagreement with international law (Article 1). In the following among the cases decided compensation was awarded, or, but for special circumstances unconnected with the points now under consideration, would have been awarded for mistakes or errors of judgment on the part of the officials:—

1. The "Jones" was seized by a British naval officer as being engaged in the Slave Trade, but the Court at Sierra Leone, before which she was brought, held that there had been "no probable cause of seizure." (See especially pp. 133 and 141.)

2. The "Lady Shaw Stewart," improperly seized and sold by the United States' Customs authorities. (See pp. 208 and 209.)

3. The "Beaver," the same circumstances as No. 2. (See pp. 212 and 214.)

4. The "Only Son." Customs duty improperly levied by British Customs officials on merchandize not intended for importation. (See pp. 244 and 245.)

5. The "Prince of Wales," a British ship which the United States' Customs officials wrongly supposed not to be entitled to participate in the carrying trade on Colombia River, and which they threatened to confiscate (no doubt for the benefit of the United States' Treasury), if she did carry on that trade.

It will be observed that in all these cases the Government Agents implicated were either military or fiscal officers.

In the case of the "Jane Francis," Her Majesty's Government claimed compensation from the Venezuelan Government for losses accruing to that ship by reason of a mistake made by a Venezuelan Consul, to the effect that a certain Venezuelan port was open to the direct foreign trade. In this case the official concerned was a Consul, a part of whose duty it was to issue clearances to vessels proceeding to Venezuelan ports.

Attention is also called to the case of the murder of Mr. Tunstall in the United States by a Sheriff's posse while executing a process against certain property, which execution Mr. Tunstall did not attempt to prevent by force.

Law Officers' Report, 10th December, 1885.

The most important documents in this case are the United States' note of the 1st June, 1885, Mr. Calderon Carlisle's Report thereon of the 27th June, 1885, and the Report by the Law Officers of the Crown of the 10th December, 1885.

The view underlying the opinions of Calvo, of Phillimore, and of the United States' Government, as expressed in the note on the Tunstall case, and the view very clearly put forward by the British Government in Mr. Benuzzi's case (p. 6 of the above-mentioned Memorandum), that a Government is not responsible for such acts of its Agents as it neither orders nor approves, is coupled with the view that the proper remedy of the injured party is an application to the Courts of Law.

Law Officers' Report, 26th August, 1879.

This view is supported by a Report by the Law Officers of the Crown, dated the 26th August, 1879, which is in harmony with Calvo and Phillimore, in stating that a claim may be made diplomatically against the Government where there is either a manifest denial of justice, or where, owing to the peculiar laws of the country concerned, no appeal to the Courts of Law is possible.

It will be perceived that the Porte refers the parties aggrieved, in connection with the "Trojan" case, to the Ottoman Tribunals, and points out that in Ottoman law the Kaïmakam is materially responsible for his official actions.

I have the honour to request you to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the parties aggrieved by the action of the Kaïmakam of Tenedos in the case of the "Trojan" should be referred for their remedy to the Ottoman Tribunals, or whether Her Majesty's Government should apply to the Ottoman Government for compensation for those parties; in the latter case, I am to request you to indicate generally the substance of the arguments which should be used in support of the claim to be made on the Porte.

Finally, I have to request you to favour Lord Salisbury with any general observations which, in your opinion, will be of use to his Lordship in treating this case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. V. LISTER.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands signified to us in Sir T. Villiers Lister's letter of the 8th January last, have the honour to

Report—

H. M.'s Govt. should apply to Ottoman Govt. for compensation to parties injured by action of Kaïmakam of Tenedos.

That, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government should apply to the Ottoman Government for compensation to the parties injured by the action of the Kaïmakam of Tenedos.

Important distinction between injuries alleged to have been suffered by persons resident in the foreign State and injuries inflicted upon persons visiting or desiring to visit such State for lawful, but temporary, purposes.

It appears to us that there is an important distinction between injuries alleged to have been suffered by persons resident in the foreign State and injuries inflicted upon persons visiting or desiring to visit such State for lawful, but temporary, purposes. A British subject who takes up his residence in a foreign country is entitled, sometimes under Treaty and sometimes by the comity of nations, to the same protection from the Government and the Tribunals of Justice as is given to subjects or citizens of the country, and, if he has reason to complain of injuries to person or property, or of a denial of justice, he must adopt such means of obtaining redress as are provided by the laws of the State in which he has chosen to reside, and it is only upon clear proof that such means are ineffective, or that the injury of which he complains was caused by an act authorized by the Executive Government of the country in which he resides, that he can appeal to his Government for diplomatic intervention.

But it cannot be required of British subjects that they should resort to the Tribunals of a country in which they do not reside, there to carry on litigation against a private individual who, when holding public office and clothed with Government authority, has prevented their visiting such country for lawful purposes of trade.

The importance of this distinction is recognized by Sir Robert Phillimore in his Commentaries (3rd edition, vol. ii, p. 6), and we observe that the passage quoted, in Sir T. V. Lister's letter to us from Sir Robert Phillimore, refers only to the case where the person complaining has been denied ordinary justice in the foreign country, and it is in the same passage laid down that the State of the foreigner may insist upon reparation immediately when he has received positive maltreatment.

The distinctions suggested by Mr. Cushing in his Report, or those indicated by Calvo, do not appear to us to be relevant to the present case where British subjects not resident in Turkey were injured by the wrongful act of a Government official who could and did employ armed force to compel obedience to his orders.

We have, &c.

Sir R. Phillimore's Commentaries, Third Edition, Vol. II, pp. 4 and 6.

The State, to which the foreigner belongs, may interfere for his protection when he has received positive maltreatment, or when he has been denied ordinary justice in the foreign country. The State of the foreigner may insist upon reparation immediately in the former case. In the latter, the interference is of a more delicate character. The State must be satisfied that its citizen has exhausted the means of legal redress afforded by the Tribunals of the country in which he has been injured. If these Tribunals are unable or unwilling to entertain and adjudicate upon his grievance, the ground for interference is fairly laid. But it behoves the interfering State to take the utmost care, first, that the commission of the wrong be clearly established; secondly, that the denial of the local Tribunals to decide the questions at issue be no less clearly established.

The distinction between domiciled persons and visitors in or passengers through* a foreign country is never to be lost sight of; because it must affect the application of the rule of law which empowers a nation to enforce the claims of its subjects in a foreign State. The foreign domicil does not indeed necessarily take away this rule of law, but it renders the invocation of it less reasonable, and the execution of it more difficult.

A subject who has deliberately domiciled himself in another State can have no ground of complaint if he be subjected to many taxes and impositions, from which the simple stranger would, by the usage of nations, be exempt. Moreover, he must be taken to have considered the habits of the people, the laws of the country, and their mode of administration, before he established therein his household gods, and made it the principal seat of his fortunes. He cannot therefore expect that every complaint which, with respect to these matters, he may be disposed to urge upon his native Government, will of necessity be entertained by it. More especially, if, being permitted by the law of his domicil, he have purchased land, and thus incorporated himself, as it were, into the territory of a foreign country, he cannot require his native Government to interfere on the subject of the operation of municipal laws, or the judgment of Municipal Tribunals, upon his rights of immovable property in this foreign land.

The case must be one of flagrant violation of justice, which would lay the foundation of an international remonstrance in such a matter, unless, indeed, the provisions of some particular Treaty, or some public Proclamation of the foreign Government, take the case out of the application of the general law.

Production of papers in Courts of Law.

Loss of registered packet sent by post by Consul Henderson.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. Villiers Lister's letter of the 1st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers relating to the loss of a registered packet which was sent by post from Cadiz to Alexandretta, and on which a policy of insurance was effected by Mr. Henderson, formerly Her Majesty's Consul at Aleppo, and now holding a similar position at Cadiz.

That the packet contained the original transfer deed, duly stamped (as well as a duplicate of that deed), by which, in circumstances fully explained in the correspondence, two persons named Catoni and Vaquil (or Vequil) agreed to transfer to Mr. Henderson certain property at Aleppo.

Suit between Mr. Henderson and Lloyd's.

That it appeared that Vequil pleaded the loss of the stamped deed as a pretext for declining to carry out his contract; and that Mr. Henderson, being thus unable to recover the property, had made a claim upon the underwriters under the policy of insurance.

That, at the instance of the underwriters, who declined to believe that the position assumed by Vequil was legally tenable, and at the request of Lloyd's Committee, a Report was called for by the Secretary of State from Her Majesty's Embassy at Constantinople. That the Report received was drawn up by Mr. Stavrides, Dragoman to the Embassy, who, after declaring himself unable to give a reasonable explanation of the legal devices adopted by Mr. Henderson with regard to the projected sale of the property, expressed his belief that before claiming an indemnity from Lloyd's he should first exhaust all legal remedies against Vequil, and that Vequil's bad faith and the worthlessness of his plea would be alike susceptible of easy proof.

That a copy of the Report of Mr. Stavrides was sent to Lloyd's Committee. That it was the practice of the Foreign Office in writing to Lloyd's to mark "Confidential" all letters which were to be so treated, but that on the occasion in question there was no intimation that the communication was of a confidential nature.

That the Secretary of State, having been later requested by Lloyd's to permit a copy of the Report to be communicated confidentially to the underwriters interested, inquired by telegraph of Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople whether his Excellency had any objection to the proposal, and that on learning that his Excellency had none, your Lordship gave the required authority.

That it now appeared probable that, in a suit between Mr. Henderson and the Underwriting and Agency Association of London, which was shortly to come before a Court of Law, the Secretary of Lloyd's would receive a subpœna from Mr. Henderson's solicitors, calling for the production of his correspondence with the Foreign Office. That the Secretary was advised by the solicitors of Lloyd's that he should claim "privilege" as to its production; and that he inquired whether the Secretary of State would wish any representation to be made on behalf of the Foreign Office against the production of the correspondence in Court.

That it was not stated, nor was it clear, to whom it was suggested that that representation should be addressed (that it was, however, presumably to be made to the Court before which the case was to be tried, and not to Mr. Henderson or his solicitors).

That Sir T. Villiers Lister was accordingly to request that we would take the case under our consideration, and would favour your Lordship with our opinion—

1. Whether the Secretary of Lloyd's could claim "privilege" in respect of the production of the documents mentioned, and, if so, on what grounds;

2. Whether it was competent for the Secretary of State, and, if it were within his power, whether, under the circumstances, it was in our opinion proper and desirable that he should raise objection to the production by the Secretary of Lloyd's of the correspondence, including copies of despatches from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, and of the Report by Mr. Stavrides now in the possession and control of the Secretary;

3. Whether, should the Secretary of State be subsequently subpœnaed to produce the original documents, your Lordship should take the responsibility of refusing so to do; and

4. Generally as to what answer should be returned to the letter from Lloyd's of the 18th January, 1892.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Secretary of State should make no objection to the production of the documents.

That, in our opinion, there is no ground for making objection on the part of the Secretary of State to the production of any of the documents referred to in Sir T. V. Lister's letter to us. The defendants in the action could probably object to their production on the ground that they were communications made, and opinions obtained, for the purpose of their defence; and we do not see how, under any circumstances, they could be used as evidence in the cause.

Should the Secretary of State be subpœnaed to produce the original documents, a clerk from the Foreign Office should attend the Court with them.

We advise that the letter of the 18th January, 1892, should be answered by saying that the Secretary of State makes no objection to the production of the documents.

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received July 30.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, July 29, 1892.

Surrender of six Armenian Turkish subjects to the Turkish police by the master of the "Izgar." Action of Vice-Consul Russell.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, as noted in the margin,* reporting the circumstances under which six Armenian Turkish subjects were surrendered to the Turkish police by the master of the British steam-ship "Izgar," and inclosing copy of a despatch which his Excellency had addressed to Mr. Vice-Consul Russell, disapproving his action in the matter, and giving him instructions for his future guidance in like cases.

That the six persons in question had taken passage on board the vessel at Constantinople for Marseilles. That at the Dardanelles they were, with the concurrence of the British Vice-Consul, removed from the vessel by the Turkish police on the ground that they were guilty of an offence against Turkish law through leaving Turkey without permission and without passport.

That Turkish law, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, was presumed to have conferred upon the Turkish authorities the right to apprehend those men within Turkish jurisdiction in respect of the breach of the Turkish law which they had apparently committed in leaving Turkey without passports and without permission to emigrate from that country.

That the question, however, arose whether the British authority whose concurrence was necessary for the arrest of persons on board British vessels in Turkish waters would, on general principles, be justified in withholding his assent to the arrest of a Turkish subject accused of an offence against the law in Turkey on the ground of the offence being of a political nature, or one of a trivial character such as that of which the six Armenians were accused.

That, in any case, it was presumed that if the surrender of the Armenians was necessary to secure the ends of justice, Mr. Russell should not have instructed the master of the "Izgar" to hand them over to the Turkish police without a request made in due form by the Judicial authorities conveyed to him officially in writing, such request specifying the nature of the charge made against them.

That it was also presumed that the British Consular officer applied to by the Turkish authorities should, whenever possible, communicate with, and take the instructions of, Her Majesty's Embassy before authorizing an arrest on board a British vessel by Turkish police.

Law Officers' Report, February 28, 1891.

That, in connection with the general question of the surrender of political and other criminal offenders when on board British merchant-vessels in Turkish territorial waters, Sir Philip Currie was to call our attention to the Memorandum of the 28th February, 1891,† with which we were good enough to favour your Lordship in answer to the reference made to us from the Foreign Office on the 27th January of that year. That it would, however, be seen that the reference and Memorandum in question directly dealt only with the surrender of fugitive offenders who were the subjects of Great Britain or of other foreign Powers enjoying extra-territorial jurisdiction in Turkey, and not with the surrender under analogous circumstances of subjects of the Ottoman Porte within the limits of the territorial jurisdiction of the Power to which they owed allegiance.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Sir C. Ford in regard to the proceedings of Mr. Vice-Consul Russell, and his Excellency's directions to him on the question of arrests on board British vessels under such circumstances as were described in the inclosed papers.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to

Report—

Approve action of Vice-Consul Russell.

That, in our opinion, Mr. Vice-Consul Russell acted rightly in permitting the arrest upon a British ship in Turkish waters of Turkish subjects who were charged with an offence against the law of that country. No question of extradition arises, and the British authority would not be justified in withholding assent to the arrest of a Turkish subject accused of an offence against the law in Turkey on the ground of that offence being of a political nature, or one of a trivial character.

It appears to us that a sufficient demand was made by the Turkish officials having the duty of executing Turkish law to entitle them to be allowed to arrest the persons in question, and, although it may be advisable, as a general rule, that Her Majesty's Embassy should be consulted before sanction is given to an arrest by Turkish police on board a British vessel, we are unable to see that in this particular case any advantage would have been gained by such consultation.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received August 8.)

Royal Courts of Justice, August 5, 1892.

My Lord,

Case of British steamer "Euxine," prevented by the Turkish authorities from trading with Bartin. Compensation claimed by the owners.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. Villiers Lister's letter of the 29th June last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the case of the British steamer "Euxine."

That the facts of the case were briefly as follows:—

That the Turkish authorities had prevented the British steamer "Euxine" from trading with, and landing and embarking passengers at, Bartin, a small port in the Black Sea, on the ground that it was situated at a distance of 4½ miles from the mouth of the river of the same name, and was consequently not a seaport, but came under the designation of "inland waters."

That it appeared that the "Euxine" had previously been in the habit of trading with Bartin, for the service of which port she was specially built, and was never interfered with till 1889, and that as she drew very little water she was able to reach Bartin, whereas other vessels could not; but that in that year, owing to the recent action of the sea on the river-bed, it had become possible for certain Turkish steamers, of greater draught than the "Euxine," which had been previously unable to do so, to reach that place; and that Sir W. White, Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, was of opinion that it was on that account that the "Euxine" was excluded from Bartin, although on the occasion in question she was furnished at Constantinople with the usual Firman, in which Bartin was named as one of the Turkish ports at which she intended to call.

That Sir W. White protested against the proceedings of the Turkish authorities, and claimed compensation for the loss sustained by the owners of the "Euxine."

Law Officers, June 14, 1864. Confidential No. 1405, p. 118.

That the Porte had, in correspondence on other cases, maintained that Ottoman rivers and internal waters were not open to the ships of foreign nations, and that the Law Officers reported in 1864, with regard to the proposed formation of an International Company for facilitating the navigation of the Nile and of all navigable canals, that the right of navigating the rivers and canals of the Ottoman Empire under the British flag was not secured to British subjects by Treaty.

That the Porte had admitted the right of taking part in the "coasting trade" to the subjects of any country which granted a similar right to Ottoman subjects, and would, therefore, presumably allow British vessels to trade at Bartin, were that port situated on the coast. But that the Porte had maintained that, as Bartin was situated 4½ miles up the river, it was not a seaport.

That the most important documents in connection with the case would be found in Sir W. White's despatch No. 67, Commercial, of the 5th July, 1889; Sir W. White's despatch No. 125, Commercial, of the 28th November, 1889; Sir W. White's despatch No. 133, Commercial, of the 2nd November, 1891; Sir C. Ford's despatch No. 26, Commercial, of the 30th March, 1892; and Sir C. Ford's despatch No. 40, Commercial, of the 20th May, 1892.

That it would be perceived from the papers that Her Majesty's Government had always maintained that British subjects had a right to participate in the coasting trade of the Ottoman Empire, so long as other Powers were permitted to do so; and that, in regard to the port of Bartin, numerous British and foreign vessels were long in the habit of running to that port, which, it would be seen from Sir W. White's note to the Porte inclosed in his despatch No. 133, Commercial, of the 2nd November, 1891, was not considered by Her Majesty's Government to be an inland port in any such sense as that ships running to it from the sea were to be considered as engaging in "internal" or river navigation.

That Sir T. Villiers Lister was to request us to take the papers into our consideration, and to favour your Lordship with our opinion on the following questions:—

1. Should Her Majesty's Government press the Ottoman Government for compensation to the owner of the "Euxine" for the interruption of the voyage which his ship made to Bartin in May 1889?

2. Should compensation be demanded for the owner of the "Euxine" for the action of the Ottoman Government in preventing that vessel, after that date, from running to Bartin, for the service of which port she was specially constructed?

That Sir T. V. Lister was, at the same time, to add that your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with any other observations which we might be good enough to offer upon the case generally.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

No good grounds exist upon which Her Majesty's Government can claim compensation.

That, in the absence of distinct evidence that Bartin is a seaport and frequented by sea-going vessels of other nations, no good grounds exist upon which Her Majesty's Government can make a claim for compensation to the owner of the "Euxine," either in respect of the interruption of the voyage in May 1889, or for preventing, after that date, the continuance of the voyages of that vessel to Bartin.

We see no justification for the contention that the river at Bartin is excepted from the proposition laid down in the Report of the Law Officers of the 14th June, 1864, and the fact that the voyages of the "Euxine" continued without interruption from November 1888 to November 1889 cannot prevent the Turkish authorities from at any time asserting the exclusive privilege of their own subjects to the river trade.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received September 21.)

[In reply to the following reference, the Law Officers reported on September, 18, 1892, as on p. 73 :—]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Christian marriages in Ottoman dominions.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, September 2, 1892.

A BRITISH subject and a citizen of the United States having been married at Smyrna according to the forms of the Established Church of Scotland, by a minister thereof, application has been made to Her Majesty's Consul-General to register the marriage as a marriage duly solemnized in accordance with the local law.

As, however, it appeared that the Consul-General was not present at the particular ceremony in question, there was no difficulty in disposing of the case by informing him that he could not comply with the request on that ground.

The circumstance has, however, raised a question of principle of some importance as to whether one of Her Majesty's Consular officers could properly register such a marriage if he had been duly present at it.

Law Officers' Report, June 27, 1892, p. 37.

In a Report inclosed herewith and marked (A), which was furnished to the Marquis of Salisbury by your predecessors on the 27th June last upon a somewhat analogous case, the following passage occurs :—

"Except in the case, which we do not imagine to exist, of the Law of the foreign country expressly providing that valid marriages may be contracted in the way and according to the forms actually adopted, we are of opinion that no form, rite, or ceremony of marriage in a Mahommedan or polygamous country can be registered under the Foreign Marriage Acts."

Inquiry as to the existence in Turkey of such a Law having been addressed to Mr. Stavrides, Dragoman to Her Majesty's Embassy at Constantinople, as an expert in Ottoman jurisprudence, that gentleman has reported in the paper also herewith inclosed and marked (B) that "Christian communities, whether Greek, Armenian, or Catholic, have the right, according to the Sheriat and in virtue of the Berats and Firmans which are invariably granted to their respective Patriarchs and Bishops, to solemnize marriages according to their own laws; and that such marriages, which are of course monogamous, are held good by the whole of the Ottoman authorities; in other words, the marriage is valid whenever it is performed according to the ritual of the community to which the parties belong."

On a previous occasion, in answer to a question as to the nature and provisions of the laws (if any) regulating the marriages of Christians, whether Ottoman subjects or otherwise, in the Ottoman dominions, Mr. Stavrides reported in the paper inclosed and marked (C), that Ottoman law has nothing to do with foreign subjects; that the moment the marriage of a foreigner is declared valid by his own authorities, it is recognized as valid by Ottoman law; that the marriage of Christians, whether Ottoman subjects or otherwise, are governed by the laws of their respective Churches; and that no distinction is drawn between Christian Ottoman subjects and foreign Christians.

It is the desire of the Secretary of State that British subjects residing in the Ottoman dominions should enjoy, as far as possible, any facilities for the registration of marriages which can properly be afforded to them under the Foreign Marriage Acts. But it would obviously be very unfortunate that Consular officers should be authorized to register, and give encouragement to the celebration of marriages in a form which might subsequently render their validity open to serious question in an English Court of Law.

I have, therefore, the honour to request, by direction of the Earl of Rosebery, that you will favour his Lordship with your opinion as to (1) whether, on the statements of Mr. Stavrides as given above, Her Majesty's Consular officers in the Ottoman dominions can under any circumstances rightly and properly be authorized to attend and register marriages of British subjects as being valid according to the lex loci; and, if so, (2) what classes of marriages may be so registered, that is to say, whether the authority should apply only to marriages celebrated according to the rites of the Church of England by a clergyman of that Church, or also, without distinction, to those celebrated by the Ministers of other Christian religious persuasions according to the ritual of their several Churches.

I am, &c.

(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

Report.

H. M.'s Consular officers may register marriages valid according to the lex loci.

Section 18 of the Act of 1892 provides in express terms for the registration by Consular officers of marriages duly solemnized in a foreign country, in accordance with the local law, between parties one of whom at least is a British subject. This must mean the local law applicable to the parties to the marriage.

In Turkey the local law applicable to Christian marriages is, upon the statement before us, not Mahommedan but the appropriate Christian law.

No distinction between the various Christian religious communities.

Section 21 of the same Act authorizes the making by Her Majesty of Regulations determining the conditions under which, and the mode in which, marriages solemnized in accordance with the local law of a foreign country may be registered under the Act.

We are of opinion—

1. That upon the statement of Mr. Stavrides of the local law Her Majesty's Consular officers may rightly and properly be authorized, and, indeed, are by the Act of 1892 authorized, to attend marriages and, on being satisfied that they have been rightly solemnized according to local law, as above explained, to register the same in accordance with the Regulations made by the Order in Council (sections 18 and 21).

2. We are further of opinion that such authority does apply not only to marriages celebrated according to the rites of the Church of England, but also and without distinction to those celebrated by other Christian religious communities according to the ritual of their several Churches.

Behring's Sea Seal Fisheries Arbitration.

That the draft embodied certain Articles already agreed upon between the two Governments, defining the questions to be so referred.

That copies of those Articles, and of another also previously agreed upon for the appointment of a Joint Commission to examine into the conditions of seal life, and the measures necessary for its preservation, would be found in a despatch from Sir Julian Pauncefote (marked E).

That it had further been agreed between the two Governments, as shown in the correspondence marked (B) and (F), that the Tribunal of Arbitration should consist of seven members, of whom two should be chosen by the United States, two by Great Britain, and three by France, Italy, and Sweden respectively.

That it was the intention of Her Majesty's Government that of the two Arbitrators chosen by Great Britain, one should be selected by the Canadian Government, whose choice would no doubt fall on a Canadian jurist.

Treaty of Washington, May 8, 1871. Treaty No. 529.

That the Articles of the Convention relating to the procedure before the Tribunal were taken, with certain modifications, from the provisions of the Treaty of Washington of the 8th May, 1871, relative to the arbitration with regard to what have been commonly known under the generic title of the "Alabama claims." That a copy of that instrument was inclosed (marked C). That copies of our previous Reports were also forwarded for convenience of reference (marked G, H, J).

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and would favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with any observations or criticisms on the terms of the draft Convention which might occur to us, and with our opinion whether it might properly be accepted by Her Majesty's Government as it stood, or whether, from a legal point of view, it required amendment in any, and, if so, in what respects.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

Approve draft of Convention proposed by Mr. Blaine.

That, in our opinion, the draft Convention may properly be accepted by Her Majesty's Government as it stands.

SEAL FISHERIES ARBITRATION.

Draft of a Convention.

(CORRECTED ON FEBRUARY 3, 1892.)

The United States of America and Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, being desirous to provide for an amicable settlement of the questions which have arisen between their respective Governments concerning the jurisdictional rights of the United States in the waters of Behring Sea, and concerning also the preservation of the fur-seal in or habitually resorting to the said sea, and the rights of citizens and subjects of either country as regards the taking of fur-seal in or habitually resorting to the said waters, have resolved to submit to arbitration the questions involved, and to the end of concluding a Convention for that purpose have appointed as their respective Plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America, James G. Blaine, Secretary of State of the United States; and Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Sir Julian Pauncefote, G.C.M.G., K.C.B., Her Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the United States:

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective Full Powers, which were found to be in due and proper form, have agreed to and concluded the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

The questions which have arisen between the Government of the United States and the Government of Her Britannic Majesty concerning the jurisdictional rights of the United States in the waters of Behring Sea, and concerning also the preservation of the fur-seal in or habitually resorting to the said sea, and the rights of the citizens and subjects of either country as regards the taking of fur-seal in or habitually resorting to the said waters, shall be submitted to a Tribunal of Arbitration, to be composed of seven Arbitrators, who shall be appointed in the following manner, that is to say: two shall be named by the President of the United States; two shall be named by Her Britannic Majesty; his Excellency the President of the French Republic shall be jointly requested by the High Contracting Parties to name one; His Majesty the King of Italy shall be so requested to name one; and His Majesty the King of Sweden and Norway shall be so requested to name one. The seven Arbitrators to be so named shall be jurists of distinguished reputation in their respective countries.

In case of the death, absence, or incapacity to serve of any or either of the said Arbitrators, or in the event of any or either of the said Arbitrators omitting or declining or ceasing to act as such, the President of the United States, or Her Britannic Majesty, or His Excellency the President of the French Republic, or His Majesty the King of Italy, or His Majesty the King of Sweden and Norway, as the case may be, shall name, or shall be requested to name forthwith, another person to act as Arbitrator in the place and stead of the Arbitrator originally named by such Head of a State.

And in the event of the refusal or omission for two months after receipt of the joint request from the High Contracting Parties of His Excellency the President of the French Republic, or His Majesty the King of Italy, or His Majesty the King of Sweden and Norway, to name an Arbitrator, either to fill the original appointment or to fill a vacancy as above provided, then in such case the High Contracting Parties shall nominate by joint agreement, or, if they fail to agree, his Excellency the President of the Swiss Confederation shall be jointly requested by the High Contracting Parties to name one or more persons, as the case may be, to act as such Arbitrator or Arbitrators.

ARTICLE II.

The Arbitrators shall meet at . . . . within three months after the date of the exchange of ratifications of this Treaty, and shall proceed impartially and carefully to examine and decide the questions that shall be laid before them as herein provided on the part of the Governments of the United States and Her Britannic Majesty respectively. All questions considered by the Tribunal, including the final decision, shall be determined by a majority of all the Arbitrators.

Each of the High Contracting Parties shall also name one person to attend the Tribunal as its Agent to represent it generally in all matters connected with the Arbitration.

ARTICLE III.

The written or printed Case of each of the two parties, accompanied by the documents, the official correspondence, and other evidence on which each relies, shall be delivered in duplicate to each of the Arbitrators and to the Agent of the other party as soon as may be after the organization of the Tribunal, but within a period not exceeding three months from the date of the exchange of the ratifications of this Treaty.

ARTICLE IV.

Within three months after the delivery on both sides of the written or printed Case, either party may, in like manner, deliver in duplicate to each of the said Arbitrators, and to the Agent of the other party, a Counter-Case, and additional documents, correspondence, and evidence, in reply to the Case, documents, correspondence, and evidence so presented by the other party,

The Arbitrators may, however, extend the time for delivering such Counter-Case, documents, correspondence, and evidence, when, in their judgment, it becomes necessary, in consequence of the distance of the place from which the evidence to be presented is to be procured.

If in the Case submitted to the Arbitrators either party shall have specified or alluded to any Report or document in its own exclusive possession, without annexing a copy, such party shall be bound, if the other party thinks proper to apply for it, to furnish that party with a copy thereof; and either party may call upon the other, through the Arbitrators, to produce the originals or certified copies of any papers adduced as evidence, giving in each instance such reasonable notice as the Arbitrators may require.

ARTICLE V.

It shall be the duty of the Agent of each party, within one month after the expiration of the time limited for the delivery of the Counter-Case on both sides, to deliver in duplicate to each of the said Arbitrators and to the Agent of the other party a written or printed argument showing the points and referring to the evidence upon which his Government relies; and the Arbitrators may, if they desire further elucidation with regard to any point, require a written or printed statement or argument, or oral argument by counsel, upon it; but in such case the other party shall be entitled to reply either orally or in writing, as the case may be.

ARTICLE VI.

In deciding the matters submitted to the Arbitrators, it is agreed that the following five points shall be submitted to them, in order that their award shall embrace a distinct decision upon each of said five points, to wit:—

1. What exclusive jurisdiction in the sea now known as the Behring Sea, and what exclusive rights in the seal fisheries therein, did Russia assert and exercise prior and up to the time of the cession of Alaska to the United States?

2. How far were these claims of jurisdiction as to the seal fisheries recognized and conceded by Great Britain?

3. Was the body of water now known as the Behring Sea included in the phrase "Pacific Ocean," as used in the Treaty of 1825 between Great Britain and Russia, and what rights, if any, in the Behring Sea, were held and exclusively exercised by Russia after said Treaty?

4. Did not all the rights of Russia as to jurisdiction and as to the seal fisheries in Behring Sea east of the water boundary, in the Treaty between the United States and Russia of the 30th March, 1867, pass unimpaired to the United States under that Treaty?

5. Has the United States any right, and, if so, what right, of protection or property in the fur-seals frequenting the Islands of the United States in Behring Sea when such seals are found outside the ordinary 3-mile limit?

ARTICLE VII.

If the determination of the foregoing questions as to the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States shall leave the subject in such position that the concurrence of Great Britain is necessary to the establishment of Regulations for the proper protection and preservation of the fur-seal in, or habitually resorting to, the Behring Sea, the Arbitrators shall then determine what concurrent Regulations outside the jurisdictional limits of the respective Governments are necessary, and over what waters such Regulations should extend, and to aid them in that determination, the Report of the Joint Commission, to be appointed by the respective Governments, shall be laid before them, with such other evidence as either Government may submit.

The Contracting Powers furthermore agree to co-operate in securing the adhesion of other Powers to such Regulations.

ARTICLE VIII.

The High Contracting Parties having found themselves unable to agree upon a reference which shall include the question of the liability of each for the injuries alleged to have been sustained by the other, or by its citizens, in connection with the claims presented and urged by it, and, being solicitous that this subordinate question should not interrupt or longer delay the submission and determination of the main questions, do agree that either may submit to the Arbitrators any question of fact involved in said claims and ask for a finding thereon, the question of the liability of either Government upon the facts found to be the subject of further negotiation.

ARTICLE IX.

The High Contracting Parties having agreed to appoint two Commissioners on the part of each Government to make the joint investigation and Report contemplated in the preceding Article VII, and to include the terms of the said Agreement in the present Convention, to the end that the joint and several Reports and recommendations of said Commissioners may be in due form submitted to the Arbitrators, should the contingency therefor arise, the said Agreement is accordingly herein included as follows:—

Each Government shall appoint two Commissioners to investigate, conjointly with the Commissioners of the other Government, all the facts having relation to seal life in Behring Sea, and the measures necessary for its proper protection and preservation.

The four Commissioners shall, so far as they may be able to agree, make a joint Report to each of the two Governments, and they shall also report, either jointly or severally, to each Government on any points upon which they may be unable to agree.

These Reports shall not be made public until they shall be submitted to the Arbitrators, or it shall appear that the contingency of their being used by the Arbitrators cannot arise.

ARTICLE X.

Each Government shall pay the expenses of its members of the Joint Commission of Investigation referred to in the preceding Article.

ARTICLE XI.

The decision of the Tribunal shall, if possible, be made within three months from the close of the argument on both sides,

It shall be made in writing and dated, and shall be signed by the Arbitrators who may assent to it.

The decision shall be in duplicate, one copy whereof shall be delivered to the Agent of the United States for his Government, and the other copy shall be delivered to the Agent of Great Britain for his Government.

ARTICLE XII.

Each Government shall pay its own Agent and provide for the proper remuneration of the counsel employed by it and by the Arbitrators appointed by it, and for the expense of preparing and submitting its Case to the Tribunal. All other expenses connected with the Arbitration shall be defrayed by the two Governments in equal moieties.

ARTICLE XIII.

The Arbitrators shall keep an accurate record of their proceedings, and may appoint and employ the necessary officers to assist them.

ARTICLE XIV.

The High Contracting Parties engage to consider the result of the proceedings of the Tribunal of Arbitration as a full, perfect, and final settlement of all the questions hereinbefore referred to.

ARTICLE XV.

The present Treaty shall be duly ratified by the President of the United States of America, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and by Her Britannic Majesty; and the ratifications shall be exchanged either at Washington or at London within six months from the date hereof, or earlier if possible.

In faith whereof, we, the respective Plenipotentiaries, have signed this Treaty, and have hereunto affixed our seals.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, February 29, 1892.

Extradition of a fugitive criminal, Leda Lamontagne, from the United States to Canada.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers* respecting the extradition of a fugitive criminal, Leda Lamontagne, from the United States to Canada.

That the criminal in question was extradited by the United States upon a charge of arson, and was arraigned in Canada upon that charge, but that before she was tried she was called as a witness against her brother, then on his trial for murder, and that upon her refusal to give evidence under those circumstances she was eventually sentenced by the Court to a year's imprisonment for contempt.

That a representation from the United States' Government, alleging that Leda Lamontagne's extradition was sought rather for the purpose of obtaining her evidence on the occasion of the trial of her brother on a charge of murder than on the ground ostensibly put forward in the extradition demand, and that there had been an abuse of of the Treaties and of the process of extradition, would be found at p. 1 of the printed correspondence.

That your Lordship requested Lord Knutsford to cause an immediate inquiry to be made into the circumstances of the case, and that copies of two despatches from the Governor-General of Canada, inclosing Reports by the Committee of the Privy Council of Canada, were received in explanation. That these were printed as inclosures in the letter from the Colonial Office of the 1st October, 1891 (see p. 8 of print).

That the correspondence was sent to the Home Office on the 22nd October, with a request that your Lordship might be favoured with the opinion of Mr. Secretary Matthews upon the case; and that Sir Thomas Sanderson was to call our special attention to the letter from the Home Office of the 6th November, and to the Memoranda by Mr. F. Lushington and Mr. Godfrey Lushington therein inclosed (vide pp. 23 and 27 of print), as well as to the various Minutes by the Superintendent of the Treaty Department of, and by the Legal Adviser to, the Foreign Office, which were to be found at pp. 13, 14, 27, 28, 29, 31, and 32 of the same document.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would be good enough to take the papers into our consideration, and to favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to offer upon the case, which was in some respects novel, and raised points of extradition law and usage of considerable difficulty and importance.

That your Lordship, therefore, thought it might be found more convenient if you referred the whole matter to us for our general consideration, instead of requesting our opinion specially on any particular questions which might arise in connection with the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the letter of the Home Office of the 6th November, 1891, and the Memorandum by Mr. Godfrey Lushington inclosed therein, correctly state the law upon this matter.

It would probably be convenient to establish the rule suggested in Mr. Wharton's letter of the 11th July, 1891, "that the fugitive is delivered up for the sole purpose of being tried for the offence for which he was surrendered, and that in regard to other matters occurring previously to his extradition, he is not to be regarded as being subject to the jurisdiction of the Government which obtains his surrender until he shall have had an opportunity to leave it and return to the jurisdiction of the surrendering Government;" but it is not yet established, by any decision of the Supreme Court, that this rule represents the law of the United States, and, as Mr. Lushington points out, there have been conflicting decisions in the State Courts.

Think the remission of a portion of the sentence passed upon Leda Lamontagne by the Canadian Court should satisfy the United States.

It is clearly not the law in this country, for Pooley v. Whetham decided that a person surrendered to this country for an extradition offence might, after being acquitted of that charge, be detained in custody under an attachment for contempt of Court committed before the surrender, the Court holding that such contempt was not an offence within section 19 of "The Extradition Act, 1870."

We agree that the action of the Canadian Judges was of very questionable propriety, and might naturally give rise to suspicion and remonstrance on the part of the United States; but having regard to the fact that the prisoner was tried and convicted of the extradition offence, which was one of a very grave character, we think the remission of a portion of the sentence should satisfy the United States, and prevent the prisoner suffering from the excessive sentence inflicted by the Canadian Judges for contempt of Court.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received March 19.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, March 17, 1892.

Claim of Messrs. Oakes and Foster, U. S. citizens, on account of illegal seizure and detention of their fishing schooner "Howard Holbrook" by Colonial authorities of Newfoundland.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin* relative to a representation made by the United States' Minister at this Court respecting the claim of Messrs. Oakes and Foster, United States' citizens, of Gloucester, Massachusetts, for 7,232 dol. 42 c. on account of the illegal seizure and detention of their fishing schooner "Howard Holbrook" by the Colonial authorities of Newfoundland.

That it appeared from Mr. Lincoln's note and the other papers that the "Howard Holbrook" sailed on the 22nd April, 1890, on a voyage to the fishing-grounds off the east coast of Cape Breton Island, and arrived on the 30th of that month at St. Jacques, Newfoundland, where a bait licence was procured, for which Pinelli Dominique, the master, paid 92 dollars.

That on the same day the vessel proceeded to take bait-fish on board, which was shipped under the supervision of the Captain of the Government vessel belonging to the Bait Protection Service.

That on the following day (the 1st May), the "Howard Holbrook" was boarded by the master of another vessel, in the service of the Newfoundland Government, the "Fiona," who, after examining the amount of bait on board, seized her, on the ground that she was in possession of more bait-fish than was allowed by the licence aforesaid.

That Pinelli Dominique, the master of the "Howard Holbrook," was also arrested on a warrant issued by the Stipendiary Magistrate, on the complaint and information of one James McGrath, of the Bait Protection Service.

That he was taken on board the "Fiona," and there tried, where the following Judgment was pronounced by the Stipendiary Magistrate upon him:—

"That the said defendant, for his said offence, do pay a fine of 500 dollars, or, in default, be imprisoned in Her Majesty's gaol at Harbor Breton for three months; to forfeit the penal amount of his bond and also his licence; and that the said vessel, the 'Howard Holbrook,' on board of which said herring have been found to be unlawfully shipped, with the herring so taken, in violation of the provisions of the said Bait Act, shall be confiscated and sold."

That subsequently the owners of the "Howard Holbrook" made a deposit of 5,000 dollars, by way of security to abide the result of an appeal to the Supreme Court of Newfoundland, and that the master and his men were released. That in the meanwhile, however, the voyage of the vessel was stated to have been broken up, and a great loss occasioned to the owners, as shown in the documents inclosed in Mr. Lincoln's letter.

That it appeared from the Judgment of Mr. Justice Little, in the Supreme Court on Circuit of Newfoundland, inclosed with the Colonial Office letter of the 10th February, that the result of Messrs. Oakes and Foster's appeal was as follows:—

That the Newfoundland Bait Act of 1889, in section 1, made the issue of a licence obligatory, but that it did not enjoin the levy of a fee, nor authorize any limitation in the licence as to the amount of bait-fish to be obtained.

That no sufficient legal sanction could be pleaded in support of the imposition of those two latter conditions, which had been simply laid down by Circular instructions forwarded to the officers of the Bait Protection Service in a letter signed by the Colonial Secretary (vide Memorandum of Instructions relative to carrying out the provisions of the Bait Act of 1889, dated Colonial Secretary's Office, St. John's, April 9, 1890. Inclosure 1 in Colonial Office letter of the 8th February, 1892).

That the Court held that that was not the intention of the Act, and that Regulations of that kind should have been enacted by Proclamation; and that, consequently, the master of the "Howard Holbrook," having complied with the law in obtaining a licence, was wrongly prosecuted for having any excess of fish on board, and should not have been charged a fee in respect thereof.

That in a letter from the Colonial Office of the 8th ultimo would be found a copy of the Newfoundland Bait Act of 1889, and of the Regulations issued under it for the contravention of which the "Howard Holbrook" was seized; and that in a further letter from the Colonial Office of the 4th January last was inclosed an opinion of the Attorney-General of Newfoundland, commenting on Mr. Justice Little's Judgment, and on the claim now advanced.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would be good enough to take the papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to—

1. Whether the action of the Newfoundland authorities entitled the owners (and master) of the "Howard Holbrook" to compensation; and, if so,

2. Whether they should be referred to their remedy by an action for damages, and, in that case, against whom should that action be brought.

That your Lordship would, at the same time, be glad to be favoured with any observations on the case generally which we might be good enough to offer.

We were also honoured with two notes from Sir Thomas Sanderson, dated the 3rd and 16th instant, inclosing further letters from the Colonial Office on the subject.*

We have taken all the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

As to grant of compensation to owners and master of the "Howard Holbrook."

That, in our opinion, the action of the Newfoundland authorities does entitle the owners and master of the "Howard Holbrook" to compensation, and that it is advisable that the amount of such compensation should be settled by the direct action of Her Majesty's Government, without recourse to legal proceedings.

Behring Sea seal fisheries. Draft O. in C. under Convention of April 18, 1892.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, April 29, 1892.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 28th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy of a Convention concluded on the 18th day of April, 1892, between Her Majesty and the President of the United States for the preservation of fur-seal in Behring's Sea during the pendency of the arbitration on that subject which had been agreed upon by the said two High Contracting Parties.

That the Order in Council issued on the 23rd day of June, 1891, under the provisions of "The Seal Fishery (Behring's Sea) Act, 1891," expired on the 1st day of May, 1892, and that, in view of the provisions of Article I of the said Convention of the 18th April, 1892, it was necessary to prohibit seal catching by British ships in Behring's Sea during the pendency of the arbitration.

That the exact period to be occupied by the arbitration could not be known, and that it might therefore be desirable, in view of the terms of section 1 (i) of "The Seal Fishery (Behring's Sea) Act, 1891," to prohibit seal catching within the area defined in the previous Order, until the 1st May, 1893, when a further Order could, if necessary, be issued.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to inclose a draft of an Order in Council for that purpose; and that he was to request our opinion whether it might properly be submitted in its then form to Her Majesty in Council for her approval.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Approve draft O. in C.

That, in our opinion, the draft Order, as initialled by us, may properly be submitted to Her Majesty in Council for her approval.

Draft Order in Council.

At the Court at Present:

THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

Whereas by "The Seal Fishery (Behring Sea) Act, 1891," it is enacted that Her Majesty the Queen may, by Order in Council, prohibit the catching of seals by British ships in Behring Sea, or such part thereof as is defined by the said Order, during the period limited by the Order:

And whereas the expression "Behring Sea," in the said Act, means the seas known as Behring Sea within the limits described in an Order under the said Act:

And whereas an Order in Council was issued on the 23rd day of June, 1891, prohibiting the catching of seals by British ships in Behring Sea, as therein defined, until the 1st day of May, 1892:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, in virtue of the powers vested in her by the said recited Act, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, is hereby pleased to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

This Order may be cited as "The Seal Fishery (Behring Sea) Order in Council, 1892."

2. From and after the date of the present Order until the 1st day of May, 1893, the catching of seals by British ships in Behring Sea, as hereinafter defined, is hereby prohibited.

3. For the purposes of the said recited Act and of this Order, the expression "Behring Sea" means so much of that part of the Pacific Ocean known as Behring Sea as lies between the parallel of 65° 30′ north latitude and the chain of the Aleutian Islands, and eastward of the following line of demarcation, that is to say, a line commencing at a point in Behring Straits on the said parallel of 65° 30′ north latitude, at its intersection by the meridian which passes midway between the islands of Krusenstern or Ignalook and the Island of Ratmanoff or Noonarbook; and proceeding thence in a course nearly south-west through Behring Straits and the seas known as Behring Sea, so as to pass midway between the north-west point of the Island of St. Lawrence and the south-east point of Cape Choukotski to the meridian of 172° west longitude; thence from the intersection of that meridian in a south-westerly direction, so as to pass midway between the Island of Attou and the Copper Island of the Kormandorski couplet or group in the North Pacific Ocean, to the meridian of 193° west longitude.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received August 11.)

As to whether the payment of an "honorarium" to Sir G. Baden-Powell will affect the tenure of his seat in Parliament.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, August 9, 1892.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 18th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to inform us that it was considered necessary for the proper presentation of the British arguments in the Behring Sea Arbitration that Sir George Baden-Powell, who had acted as one of Her Majesty's Commissioners for inquiry into the conditions of seal life in that sea, should be employed to assist the British Agent and the Counsel appointed by Her Majesty's Government to conduct the proceedings on their behalf, in drawing up the Case and Counter-Case, and throughout the course of the Arbitration.

That recognizing the value of the work already gratuitously performed by Sir George Baden-Powell on the Behring Sea Commission, and the constant attendance and work which his further employment would entail, your Lordship proposed to offer him, as an honorarium, the sum of 1,000*l.*

That Sir George Baden-Powell sat in the Parliament recently dissolved as Member for the Kirkdale Division of Liverpool, and had been re-elected to serve as Member for the same Division in the new Parliament.

That the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury had sanctioned the payment of the above-mentioned sum to Sir George Baden-Powell, but that before proceeding to make any offer on the subject to that gentleman, your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion as to whether the acceptance of the amount in question would in any way affect the tenure of the seat in Parliament to which Sir George Baden-Powell had recently been elected.

The Attorney-General's Opinion.

I have taken the matter into my consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

It will not do so.

That I am of opinion that the payment to Sir George Baden-Powell of an "honorarium" in respect of his services will not affect the tenure of his seat in Parliament.

The amount should be paid to him in respect of his past services, say up to the completion of his Report in June last.

I have, &c.
(Signed) RICHARD E. WEBSTER.

The Solicitor-General's Opinion.

I have also taken the matter into my consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

It will not do so. Danger of precedent.

That I agree that if the payment be made solely in respect of services rendered before the date of Sir George Baden-Powell's return at the last election, his seat will not be vacated; but I feel bound to add that the making of such payment would be a serious departure from Constitutional practice, and would constitute a very dangerous precedent.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received September 10.)

[In answer to the following reference, the Law Officers reported on the 9th September as on page 83:—]

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 13, 1892.

Right of United States' citizens to copyright in Canada.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquis of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted in the annexed list, which relate to the right of United States' citizens to copyright in Canada.

In the year 1891 an Act (Paper A) was passed in the United States to amend title 60, cap. 3, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to copyrights. This Act grants copyright in the United States to aliens under certain conditions stated therein.

The final section of the Act provides for its application to the subjects or citizens of foreign States, under certain circumstances, by Proclamation of the President.

On the 16th June, 1891, a note was addressed by the Marquis of Salisbury to the United States' Minister at this Court (Paper B), in which it was stated "that the law of copyright in force in all British possessions permits to citizens of the United States of America the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as to British subjects."

On the faith of this assurance, the President of the United States issued his Proclamation applying the Act to subjects of Great Britain. (Mr. Lincoln, 2nd July, 1891: Paper C.)

On the 4th January, 1892, a complaint was received from the United States' Government, that citizens of the United States were refused copyright in Canada. (Sir J. Pauncefote, No. 35, Treaty, 22nd December, 1891: Paper D.)

This complaint was repeated on the 9th January, 1892, by the United States' Minister at this Court (Paper E).

The Canadian Government were requested to furnish a Report upon the subject, which was received on the 26th July last. (Colonial Office letter, 26th July, 1892: Paper F.)

The contention of the Canadian Government is, that the Canadian Copyright Act (cap. 62 of the Revised Statutes of Canada: Paper G) is the only Act under which copyright can be granted in Canada, and that it does not apply to citizens of the United States not domiciled in Canada, because no International Treaty relating to copyright exists between Great Britain and the United States.

No such Treaty does in fact exist.

The whole question is discussed in paragraphs 44 to 48 and 51 of the Report of a Departmental Committee (Paper H) appointed to consider a Canadian Copyright Act which was passed by the Dominion Government in 1889, but which has not been confirmed, and is not now in force.

It would seem that, irrespective of the Canadian Copyright Act now in force (cap. 62 of the Revised Statutes of Canada) any literary or artistic work first produced in Canada, or simultaneously first produced in the United States and Canada, is entitled under section 8 (1) of "The International Copyright Act, 1886" (Paper I) to copyright throughout Her Majesty's dominions, and, therefore, in Canada; and that if no provision for registration has been made in Canada under section 8 (1) (a) of the said Act of 1886, then any person, whether a British subject or an alien, whose work has been first published in Canada, or simultaneously first published in Canada and the United States, can entitle himself to a remedy against infringement by registering at Stationers' Hall under the Imperial Copyright Acts.

No Order in Council has been issued under section 8 (3) of "The International Copyright Act, 1886;" no Act such as is contemplated in section 8 (4) of the Act of 1886 has since been passed or is now in force.

The Canadian Copyright Act could probably be made to apply to citizens of the United States by the conclusion of a Copyright Treaty between Great Britain and the United States in the sense of the assurances given in Lord Salisbury's note of the 16th June, 1891 (Paper B); but it would be preferable to avoid this course, which would probably be distasteful to Canada.

Under these circumstances, I am to request that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion whether a work simultaneously first produced in the United States and in Canada by a citizen of the United States is entitled to copyright in Canada under section 8 (1) of "The International Copyright Act, 1886;" and generally with any observations which you may have to make as to the proper course to be taken in the matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

Report.

United States' citizens have the benefit of copyright on the same basis as British subjects in all British possessions.

We are of opinion that a work "simultaneously first produced" in the United States and in Canada by a citizen of the United States is entitled to copyright in Canada by virtue of section 8 (1) of "The International Copyright Act, 1886."

We think also that the law of copyright in force, not only in the United Kingdom, but in all British possessions, including Canada, does give to citizens of the United States the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as to British subjects, and that there is not any necessity for negotiating a Treaty with the United States of America.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 25, 1892.

Behring Sea fisheries. Seizure of the British steamer "Coquitlan" by U. S. revenue-cruizer "Corwin."

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Rosebery, the papers noted in the accompanying list which relate to the seizure of the British steamer "Coquitlan" by the United States' revenue-cruizer "Corwin."

This seizure is reported to have been made in the harbour of Port Etches, and consequently within the territorial waters of Alaska; but it was effected in respect of an alleged violation of the United States' Revenue Laws, which apparently took place (if at all) outside the 3-mile zone, and also outside the limits of the waters of the Behring Sea, viz., in 60° 15′ north latitude and 146° 47′ west longitude. (See Map, Paper B.)

The circumstances under which it was said to have occurred were reported to the Governor-General of Canada by the Sealers' Association at Victoria, British Columbia. (Papers A, C, D, F, G, I, M.)

The owners of the "Coquitlan" having signified their desire to give suitable security to the United States' Government, in order that the release of the vessel and her cargo, including seal-skins (Paper F), might, if possible, be effected, Mr. Herbert, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington, was authorized to endeavour to ascertain whether security would be accepted by the United States' Government, and, if so, what security would be required, and at what place, and to whom it should be given. But he was also told to make it clear that this suggestion did not come from Her Majesty's Government, but from the owners of the vessel, and was made without prejudice to any contention against the legality of the seizure which Her Majesty's Government might have to advance. (Paper H.)

The United States' Secretary of State replied that it was not within the power of the Executive to intervene to determine the conduct of the Judicial Branch within whose control the vessel and her cargo would appear to be, and he suggested that an application should be made to the Court of Sitka. (Papers J, K, P, S.)

The United States' Government have informed Mr. Herbert that the "Coquitlan" was seized for violating Sections 2867, 2868, 2806, and 3109 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, copies of which are inclosed in Mr. Herbert's despatch No. 206 of the 2nd instant. (Papers I and W.)

Your attention is invited to a Memorandum drawn up by Mr. Calderon Carlisle, the legal adviser of Her Majesty's Legation at Washington, containing his opinion as to the legality of the seizure of the "Coquitlan" on the facts stated by the Sealing Association of Victoria. (Paper Q.)

Mr. Carlisle has also furnished Mr. Herbert with a further Memorandum, from which it appears that his opinion is adverse to the grounds on which the United States' authorities base their action in regard to that vessel. (Papers V and W.)

Mr. Carlisle maintains that the seizure was unlawful, and considers that only a narrow and unjust construction of Sections 2806 and 3109 of the United States' Revised Statutes would enable the Court to deliver a decision adverse to the owners.

I am now to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and favour Lord Rosebery with your opinion whether they afford ground for a protest on the part of Her Majesty's Government against the action of the United States' authorities in regard to the seizure of the "Coquitlan," and the proceedings to be taken against her in the District Court of Sitka; and, if so, as to the nature of the protest which should be addressed to the Government of the United States, together with any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

I am, &c.

Opinion of the Law Officers.

H. M.'s Govt. should claim release of the vessel and compensation, and should also specially protest against the assumption of jurisdiction in respect of foreign vessels for anything done outside the 3-mile limit.

It appears from the papers before us that the steam-ship "Coquitlan" twice entered the territorial waters of the United States within the 3-mile limit, viz., at Tonki Bay on the 18th June, and at Port Etches on the 22nd June.

On the first occasion she put in for shelter, and finding there certain sealing-schooners, towed six of them outside the 3-mile limit, and there transferred stores and received skins, apparently within 4 leagues of United States' territory. At the time of the transhipment the schooners were not bound to the United States, nor was the steamer. On the second occasion the reason for entering the territorial waters was the necessity of obtaining water for the steamer, added to the desire to meet the sealing-schooners at the port, deliver the mails, and make an appointment to exchange stores for skins outside the 3-mile limit.

On neither occasion was there any intention to discharge or take in cargo otherwise than by transhipment and outside the 3-mile limit.

On this state of facts we are of opinion that no right to seize ships or cargo, or to detain crew or passengers, arose under Sections 2806, 2867, 2868, or 3109 of the United States' Revised Statutes, and that no breach was committed of any of those Sections. As to 2806, because that Section would seem to apply only to merchandize brought into the United States for the purpose of landing there. As to Sections 2867 and 2868 (independently of any question of the legality of the provision relating to a 4-leagues limit), because neither the transferring nor the receiving vessel was bound to the United States. As to 3109, because the Section from its whole tenour has reference only to vessels arriving in the waters of the United States from foreign adjacent territory for the purpose of unloading or taking in cargo, in which case notice of entry and permit are required.

According to the deposition of A. N. Brown the case really relied upon is that under Sections 2867 and 2868, but as to these we are clearly of opinion there has been no offence committed, because both Sections apply only to vessels bound to the United States.

It is certainly arguable that an offence under Section 3109 has been committed for not reporting the "Coquitlan" having arrived in the waters of the United States, but we agree with Mr. Carlisle that this would involve a narrow and unjust construction of the Act, and that the facts of this case are not within the mischief against which it is directed. It is to be noted, also, that Section 3109 specifies no time within which report is to be made, and the seizure of the "Coquitlan" was effected, apparently, within some three hours after dropping anchor in Port Etches. But in fact the not reporting does not seem to have been put forward as the ground of arrest.

In so far as the case is rested upon Sections 2806 and 3109, which deal with matters within the jurisdiction of the United States, we see no ground for a protest if the matter stopped there.

If we are right, the Court having jurisdiction or a Court of Appeal ought to dismiss the suit, and presumably would do so. But as regards Sections 2867 and 2868 (which would seem to be the Sections mainly relied upon), we think the right apparently claimed on the part of the United States to bring foreign vessels within the jurisdiction of the municipal law of the United States of America by reason of anything done outside the 3-miles limit so important, we are of opinion that there is sufficient ground for a protest.

We think it desirable that the protest should set out the facts, as reliably ascertained, and should claim release of the vessel and compensation, and should also specially protest against the assumption of jurisdiction in respect of foreign vessels for anything done outside the 3-mile limit.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received September 19.)

[In reply to the following reference, the Law Officers reported on the 17th September as below:—]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Seizure of British steamer "Coquitlan" by United States' revenue-cruizer "Corwin."

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, September 13, 1892.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge, by direction of the Earl of Rosebery, your letter of the 9th instant respecting the seizure of the British steamer "Coquitlan" by the United States' revenue-cruizer "Corwin," in which it is stated that you are of opinion that there is sufficient ground for a protest against the action of the United States' authorities in this matter.

You add that you consider it desirable that the protest should set out the facts, as reliably ascertained, and should claim the release of the "Coquitlan," and compensation, and should also especially protest against the assumption of jurisdiction by the United States in respect of foreign vessels for anything done outside the 3-mile limit.

I have now the honour to forward the draft of a note which has been drawn up in accordance with your suggestions, and which Lord Rosebery proposes to instruct Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington to address to the United States' Government.

I am to request that you will be good enough to take this note into your consideration, and favour Lord Rosebery with your opinion as to whether its terms are right and proper.

A copy of your opinion and the papers which were submitted to you are inclosed herewith for reference if required.

I have, &c.

Approve proposed protest as altered.

1. I have made the alterations in the proposed protest which I think desirable.* The Solicitor-General approves.

Draft Note.

Foreign Office, 1893.

THE Undersigned, Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, has the honour, by instructions from his Government, to call the attention of Mr. Foster, Secretary of State of the United States, to the following facts in regard to the seizure of the British steamer "Coquitlan" by the United States' revenue-cruizer "Corwin."

According to information furnished to the Canadian Government by the Sealers' Association of Victoria, British Columbia, in a letter dated the 4th July, it appears that on the 9th June last they dispatched the British steamer "Coquitlan," under the command of Captain McLellan, laden with provisions and stores for the sealing fleet in northern waters. She had on board ~~five~~ three passengers, two of them being master mariners representing the Association, another Mr. Brown, a reporter for the "Victoria Daily News," and afterwards she took on board two sailors homeward bound from one of the sealing-schooners met by her.

The purposes of the voyage were threefold: firstly, and principally, to convey mails to the fleet, containing positive instructions to every vessel not to enter Behring Sea; secondly, to supply the vessels with provisions and stores for the further prosecution of their voyages in Russian and Japanese waters; thirdly, to bring back all seal-skins already taken.

No trading or other communication with the shores was contemplated; neither did the vessel carry any liquor or goods for trading purposes, and she received positive instructions from her owners and from the Association not to transgress the law in any manner.

The steamer proceeded first to Cape Tonki, at the north-east end of K~~o~~*a*diak Island, Alaska Territory, ~~which had at first been selected as the place of rendezvous, though, in consequence of the dangerous character of the harbourage, Port Etches was subsequently chosen~~.

On arrival off Tonki, as a gale was blowing, the vessel was forced to seek shelter in Tonki Harbour, where she found several of the sealing-schooners which she was instructed to meet lying at anchor. The next day, the weather having moderated, the steamer, owing to the dangerous character of the entrance ~~of~~ to the harbour, towed ~~the~~ six of the schooners out to sea, where ~~the~~ transfers of stores and skins were made, outside of the 3-mile limit.

The "Coquitlan" then sailed ~~for~~ in the direction of Port Etches, about 200 miles north-eastward, longitude 146° 27′ west, latitude 60° 15′ north. She was obliged to enter the port on the 22nd June, having (in consequence of leakage of her tanks) been without fresh water for over twenty-four hours, ~~and met there.~~ There were then in Port Etches twenty-five of the sealing-schooners. After delivering their mails and directing them to meet her outside the 3-mile limit next day, she immediately commenced to fill her water-tanks.

About ~~three~~ three to five hours after she had dropped anchor, the United States' revenue-cutter "Corwin" entered the harbour, and sent an officer on board the "Coquitlan," ~~to seize~~ who seized her on a charge of transferring stores and skins within 12 miles, or 4 marine leagues, of the Alaskan shore. The "Coquitlan" was then sent to Sitka in charge of Lieutenant Linnar, of the United States' navy, where she has been since held with her cargo, ~~and~~ the captain and four passengers and crew being detained as prisoners, ~~with the exception of~~ Mr. Brown, ~~who being~~ a United States' citizen, was ~~released~~ allowed to go free.

The sworn deposition made before the Customs Collector at Victoria by Mr. Brown, of which a copy is inclosed herewith, testifies to the accuracy of the above statement, and gives evidence of the intention of the master of the "Coquitlan" scrupulously to avoid any acts to the detriment of the United States' revenue.

The Undersigned, having addressed himself to Mr. Foster for an explanation of the seizure, has been informed that the vessel had been seized for violating Sections 2867, 2868, 2806, and 3109 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which are follows:—

"Section 2806. No merchandize shall be brought into the United States from any foreign port in any vessel unless the master has on boerd manifests in writing of the cargo signed by such master.

"Sec. 2867. If, after the arrival of any vessel laden with merchandize, and bound to the United States within the limits of any collection district, or within 4 leagues of the coast, any part of the cargo of such vessel shall be unladen for any purpose whatever before such vessel has come to the proper place for the discharge of her cargo, or some part thereof, and has been there duly authorized by the proper officer of the Customs to unlade the same, the master of such vessel, and the mate or other person next in command, shall respectively be liable to a penalty of 1,000 dollars for each such offence, and the merchandize so unladen shall be forfeited, except in case of ~~same~~ some unavoidable accident, necessity, or distress of weather. In case of such unavoidable accident, necessity, or distress the master of such vessel shall give notice to, and together with two or more of the officers or mariners on board such vessel, of whom the mate or other person next in command shall be one, shall make proof upon oath before the Collector or other chief officer of the Customs of the district within the limits of which such accident, necessity, or distress happened, or before the Collector or other chief officer of the collection district within the limits of which such vessel shall first afterwards arrive, if the accident, necessity, or distress happened not within the limits of any district, but within 4 leagues of the coast of the United States, the Collector or other chief officer is hereby authorized and required to administer such oath.

"Sec. 2868. If any merchandize so unladen from on board any such vessel shall be put or received into any other vessel, except in the case of such accident, necessity, or distress, to be so notified and proved, the master of any such vessel into which the merchandize shall be so put and received, and every other person aiding and assisting therein, shall be liable to a penalty of treble the value of the merchandize, and the vessel in which they shall be so put shall be forfeited.

"Sec. 3109. The master of any foreign vessel, laden or in ballast, arriving in the waters of the United States from any foreign territory adjacent to the northern, north-eastern, or north-western frontiers of the United States, shall report at the office of any Collector or Deputy Collector of the Customs which shall be nearest to the point at which such vessel may enter such waters; and such vessel shall not proceed further inland, either to unlade or take in cargo, without a special permit from such Collector or Deputy Collector, issued under and in accordance with such general or special regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, from time to time prescribe. For any violation of this Section such vessel shall be seized or forfeited."

Her Majesty's Government having carefully considered the facts as set forth above, in consultation with the legal advisers of the Crown, are led to the conclusion that no breach of any of the Sections of the United States' Revised Statutes quoted above was committed by the "Coquitlan," and that, consequently, no right to seize the ship or her cargo, or to arrest her crew or her passengers, arose under those Sections. It appears to them that Section 2806 applies only to merchandize brought into the United States in the ordinary course of a trading adventure, and for the purpose of landing there, and has no application in the circumstances of this case.

It further appears to them that Section 3109 ~~from its whole tenour has reference~~ is intended to refer only to vessels arriving in the waters of the United States from foreign adjacent territory for the purpose of unloading ~~or~~ and taking in cargo, in which case notice of entry and permit are required.

These points, ~~however,~~ dealing with matters within the jurisdiction of the United States, ~~may properly form~~ are such as might properly have been the subject of a decision by a Court of competent jurisdiction, but they do not appear to have been relied upon as justifying the arrest.

But in so far, ~~however,~~ as the case against the vessel is rested on Sections 2867 and 2868, Her Majesty's Government ~~feel it to be their duty to protest against~~ desire to point out that those Sections apply only to vessels bound to the United States, and further, they feel it their duty to protest against any claim on the part of the United States to bring foreign vessels within the jurisdiction of their municipal laws by reason of anything done outside the limit of 3 miles from the coast.

The Undersigned is therefore instructed to protest against any assumption of such jurisdiction, and to claim the release of the vessel, cargo, passengers, and crew, and the payment of suitable compensation for their arrest and detention.

The Undersigned avails himself, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received October 29.)

Behring Sea Arbitration.

Proposed Bye-law of Scottish Fishery Board.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, October 28, 1892.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 24th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to a Bye-law which the Fishery Board of Scotland proposed to make under the powers conferred upon them by section 7 of the Herring Fisheries (Scotland) Act of 1889 (52 and 53 Vict., cap. 23), prohibiting beam-trawling over the waters inside a line drawn from Duncansby Head in Caithness to Rattray point in Aberdeenshire.

That the Bye-law in question would be found set out in terms in the letter from the Scottish Office of the 8th instant.

That it would be seen that it was proposed to revoke a former Bye-law (No. 8 of 1890) made under the above-mentioned Act, by which beam-trawling was prohibited over a limited area of the waters prescribed in the Act, namely, within a line drawn from the Ord of Caithness to Craighead, near Buckie.

That the position of that line and of the full area prescribed by the Act would be found marked on the accompanying Map.

That the Bye-law now suggested would have the effect of extending the prohibition to the extreme limit allowed, thus inclosing an area of water bounded by a line from shore to shore of 85 miles in length.

That a correspondence with the Scottish Office was inclosed, which took place previous to the passing of the Act when the question was raised, whether the Fishery Board of Scotland were justified by international law in making Bye-laws purporting in general terms, and in respect of persons other than British subjects, to control waters outside the territorial limits usually recognized by international law, and that it would be seen that it was eventually decided as matter of policy to introduce a Bill into Parliament giving the Fishery Board the required jurisdiction, in so far as Municipal legislation could confer it, while abstaining from any direct allusion to the limitations which considerations of international law might dictate as to its attempted enforcement or application in the case of the subjects and vessels of foreign Powers.

That we were aware that the Act of 1889, which was passed subsequently to that correspondence, had been quoted and appealed to by the United States' Government in the written Statement of Case presented by them in the Behring Sea Arbitration as an instance of legislation by this country controlling waters outside the 3-mile limit, and that its operation was assumed by the United States not to be restricted to offending British vessels, because it was applicable to "any person" without an exception being made in favour of foreigners.

That your Lordship assumed that in the Counter-Case of Her Majesty's Government it would be found expedient to state distinctly that, in the absence of special International Agreements, that or similar Acts authorized the issue of Municipal Regulations applicable to British subjects only, and that such Regulations were not intended to be enforced against foreign vessels outside the 3-mile limit; and that in that connection your Lordship was desirous of bringing to our special attention the observations made by the Legal Adviser to the Foreign Office in his Memorandum of the 22nd August, 1888.

That a correspondence with the Scottish Office on that subject was inclosed; and that it would be seen that, although no attempt had ever been made to enforce the Act of 1889 against foreign vessels, no opinion had ever been obtained from the Law Officers on the point, nor was any special allusion made to it in the instructions to the Commanders of Her Majesty's cruizers engaged in the superintendence of the Scottish fisheries.

That, under those circumstances, Sir Philip Currie was to request us to be so good as to favour your Lordship with our opinion—

1. Whether the proposed Bye-law in its present or any, and if so what, modified form could be allowed without injury to the interests of Great Britain in relation to foreign Powers.

2. Whether, in view of the contention, which it would probably be necessary to maintain in the Counter-Case of Her Majesty's Government in the Behring Sea Arbitration, it would not be advisable to issue confidential instructions to the Commanders of Her Majesty's cruizers engaged in the superintendence of the Scottish fisheries, that they must carefully abstain from attempting to enforce the provisions of the Act against foreign vessels outside territorial waters.

3. Whether, having regard to the present state of international doctrine and usage upon the subject, Her Majesty's Government might safely claim as territorial waters not only such as were included within the 3-mile limit measured from low-water mark, but might also contend on their own behalf, and be prepared similarly to admit in the case of foreign countries, that [adopting the language of the North Sea Fisheries Convention of 1882, Article II(2)], "as regards bays the distance of 3 miles shall be measured from a straight line across the bay in the part nearest the entrance at the first point where the width does not exceed 10 miles."

That a volume of correspondence on the subject of maritime jurisdiction was inclosed for reference, if necessary, and also a copy of the North Sea Fisheries Convention of 1882.

We were also honoured with a note from Sir Philip Currie, dated the 28th instant, inclosing a further letter from the Scottish Office on the subject of the proposed Bye-law.*

---

* Scottish Office, October 26, 1892.

1892

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

No objection to proposed Bye-law if binding—outside the "3-mile limit"—on British subjects only. "10-mile limit" not part of international law.

That, in our opinion—

1. There is no objection to the proposed Bye-law so long as it is treated as binding—outside the "3-mile limit"—on British subjects only.

2. It would be advisable to issue such instructions as are mentioned in the second question, applicable to all cases happening outside the "3-mile limit."

3. It would be reasonable to ask for, and reasonable to concede, the "10-mile limit," but that limit cannot be said to have received such general assent as to make it part of the international law.

Case for the Opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown in Scotland.

A QUESTION has arisen as to the confirmation of a Bye-law passed by the Fishery Board for Scotland in regard to which the Secretary for Scotland desires the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown.

On the 26th May, 1888, the Fishery Board for Scotland submitted to Her Majesty's Secretary for Scotland a proposed Bye-law to regulate beam-trawling in the estuary of the Clyde in the following terms:—

"Bye-law (No. 4) made by the Fishery Board for Scotland under the Powers conferred on the Board by 'The Sea Fisheries (Scotland) Amendment Act, 1885.'

"1. This Bye-law shall extend and apply to the Firth of Clyde and those parts of the sea connected with it within or to the north and east of a line drawn from Dava Lighthouse to Pladda Lighthouse, thence to the lighthouse on Ailsa Craig, and thence to Corsewall Lighthouse.

"2. Within the aforesaid limits no person, unless in the service, or by the orders of, the Fishery Board for Scotland, shall, at any time from the date when this Bye-law comes into force, use any beam-trawl for taking sea-fish; and the master or the person actually in command of any vessel acting in contravention of this Bye-law shall, on conviction, be liable to a fine not exceeding 100*l.*; and, failing immediate payment of the fine, to imprisonment for a period not exceeding sixty days, without prejudice to diligence by poinding or imprisonment, if no imprisonment has followed on the conviction—all in terms of the said Act.

"3. This Bye-law shall come into force on the 7th August, 1888, and shall remain in force until the 7th August, 1891.

"By order, (Signed) "DUGALD GRAHAM, Secretary.

"Dated at Edinburgh, this 22nd day of May, 1888."

By the Sea Fisheries (Scotland) Amendment Act of 1885 (48 & 49 Vict., cap. 70, sec. 4), it is provided that no Bye-law shall be valid until it is confirmed by the Secretary for Scotland. And a Bye-law shall not be confirmed by the Secretary for Scotland until after one month from the time when notice of intention to apply for its confirmation has been given by the Fishery Board by advertisement in one or more papers circulating in the counties adjoining the part of the sea to which such Bye-law is proposed to apply. It is further provided that the Secretary for Scotland shall allow any person to make a representation for his interest against the confirmation of any Bye-law, and a notice of objection being given by such person to the Fishery Board within the said period of one month, and may, if he see fit, allow parties to be heard thereon.

Objections to the aforesaid proposed Bye-law have been made to the Fishery Board on these grounds:—

(a.) That it is ultra vires of the Fishery Board by public international law;
(b.) That it is ultra vires of the Fishery Board by Statute; and (c.) That it is not advisable in the public interest.

The first of these objections has been referred to and decided by the Foreign Office; the third is a matter for the Fishery Board to decide on evidence, and for which the Board must be responsible; but on the second Her Majesty's Secretary for Scotland desires to have the opinion of the Scotch Law Officers of the Crown.

The Fishery Board for Scotland was constituted in its present form by the Fishery Board (Scotland) Act of 1882 (45 & 46 Vict., cap. 78). By section 5 (1) of that Act the Board is to have all the powers and duties conferred upon the then Board of British White Herring Fishery by the Herring Fishery Acts and the Sea Fishery Acts, 1868 and 1875, and any Order in Council following thereon.

By section 2 of the same Act the expression "Herring Fishery Acts" is defined to mean the Acts mentioned in the first Schedule to the Act.

By the Fishery Board Act of 1882 the Board is particularly required (section 5) to take cognizance of everything relating to the coast and deep-sea fisheries of Scotland, and to take such measures for their improvement as the funds under their administration, and not otherwise appropriated, may admit of.

Under the Herring Fisheries Acts the Fishery Board has a general power of regulating the fisheries on the "coasts of Scotland."

In the Herring Fisheries Act of 1860 (23 & 24 Vict., cap. 92), section 2, and again in the British White Herring Fishery Act of 1867 (30 & 31 Vict., cap. 52), the expression "coasts of Scotland" is defined to mean and include all (a) bays; (b) estuaries; (c) arms of the sea; and (d) all tidal waters within the distance of 3 miles from the mainland or adjacent islands.

But the Sea Fisheries Amendment Act of 1885 seems to some extent to supersede the definition of the above expression, "coasts of Scotland;" section 4 of that Act confines the power of the Fishery Board to make Bye-laws "within the exclusive fishery limits of the British Islands." The Sea Fisheries Act of 1883 defines the meaning of the expression, "within the exclusive fishery limits of the British Islands," as "that portion of the seas surrounding the British Islands within which Her Majesty's subjects have by international law the exclusive right of fishing, and where such portion is defined by the terms of any Convention, Treaty, or Arrangement for the time being in force between Her Majesty and any foreign State, includes, as regards the sea-fishing boats and officers and subjects of that State, the portion so defined."

The first Schedule attached to that Act is the Convention which, under the Act, was confirmed, and the "Articles thereof shall be of the same force as if they were enacted in the body of this Act."

Article II of the Convention states that "the fishermen of each country shall enjoy the exclusive right of fishery within the distance of 3 miles from low-water mark along the whole extent of the coasts of their respective countries, as well as of the dependent islands and banks.

"As regards bays, the distance of 3 miles shall be measured from a straight line drawn across the bay, in the part nearest the entrance, at the first point where the width does not exceed 10 miles."

The questions to which the Secretary for Scotland would wish to have the answers of the Law Officers are:—

1. Is the Fishery Board acting within the statutory powers in proposing a Bye-law to regulate fishing in the estuary of the Clyde, within a line drawn from Campbeltown to Pladda, and thence by Ailsa to the point of Corsewall?

If the Law Officers should answer the above question in the affirmative, then—

2. Seeing that the principal fishing-ground on the Ballantrae banks is not protected by the proposed line, would the Fishery Board be within their statutory powers in drawing a line from the Mull of Kintyre to the point of Corsewall?

Crown Office, Edinburgh, July 20, 1888.

Opinion.

We are of opinion that the Bye-law in question is ultra vires of the Fishery Board.

The Sea Fisheries (Scotland) Amendment Act of 1885 is to be read along with the Sea Fisheries Act of 1883. Accordingly, the words, "within the exclusive fishery limits of the British Islands' (occurring in section 4 of the Act of 1885), which prescribe the area of jurisdiction of the Fishery Board, are to be construed in accordance with the interpretation clause (section 28) of the Act of 1883.

Now the definition of "exclusive fishery limits of the British Islands" in that interpretation clause consists of two parts. The first is general, that portion of the sea surrounding the British Islands within which Her Majesty's subjects have by international law the exclusive right of fishing.

The second part of the definition applies only to such portions of the seas as are defined by any Convention, Treaty, or Arrangement with a foreign State; and it is sufficient for the present case to say that, as there is no Convention, Treaty, or Arrangement applicable to the seas now in question, this latter part of the statutory definition has no bearing on the matter before us.

The question, therefore, is whether, in the part of the sea specified in the Bye-law, Her Majesty's subjects have by international law the exclusive right of fishing.

We are unable to affirm this proposition. The information before us does not disclose the theory of international law upon which the authors of this Bye-law proceeded. It is clear, however, that where by Municipal law a new jurisdiction is conferred to limit a particular industry within an area defined by reference to international law, the bounds of that jurisdiction are to be closely scrutinized. Now, it is, we think, impossible to assert that it is matter of international law that the Queen's subjects have exclusive right of fishing over the waters comprised in this Bye-law. The general international law on the subject cannot be said, in the absence of Convention, to be determined by any arithmetical formula specifically applicable to this case. But having regard to the geographical facts of the present question, the exclusive right of fishing, which is the hypothesis of the Bye-law, does not seem to us to be established by international law.

Memorandum.

A CASE having been submitted to the Law Officers as to the powers possessed by Her Majesty to make an Order in Council prohibiting herring-fishing before the 1st June within 30 miles of the south coast of Ireland, the following opinion was given:—

Law Opinion.

We are of opinion that Her Majesty in Council has no power to make such an Order or Bye-law as is suggested; nor do we know of any authority possessing such a power. Parliament might make such a law so as to bind the subjects of the Crown, although there would probably be no precedent for such a Statute; but such an enactment would not affect the subjects of foreign States.

Royal Courts of Justice, December 13, 1892.

My Lord,

Seizure of the British steamer "Coquitlan" at Port Etches by the U. S. revenue-cruizer "Corwin."

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the seizure of the British steamer "Coquitlan" at Port Etches by the United States' revenue-cruizer "Corwin."

That it would be in our recollection that that question had already been referred to us on two previous occasions (25th August and 13th September) for our opinion, in the first place, as to whether any ground of protest existed on the part of Her Majesty's Government, and, subsequently, that question having been settled in the affirmative, as to the terms in which the protest should be made.

That our two Reports upon the references above alluded to were dated respectively the 9th September and 17th September, and were inclosed, for our convenience, with the other papers.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was now to transmit a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington, inclosing the reply of the United States' Government to the note of protest which was, in accordance with our opinion, addressed to them.

That they stated that, as the case of the "Coquitlan" was before the judicial authorities, it would have to take its course without intervention on the part of the Executive beyond such proper steps as might be taken to expedite the proceedings.

That that despatch was referred to the Colonial Office for observations, and that the reply received from that Department was inclosed.

That the Marquis of Ripon pointed out that the note of the United States' Minister made no allusion to the last two paragraphs of Mr. Herbert's note, in which it was maintained that the offence originally charged against the vessel was an act which was admitted to have been committed outside the 3-mile limit, and that the officers of the United States had therefore no right to seize the vessel and bring her before the Court.

That, in view of the decision recently given by the United States' Courts in the case of the "W. P. Sayward" (see Sir J. Pauncefote's No. 66, March 11, 1892), Lord Ripon considered it desirable to renew the protest entered on behalf of Her Majesty's Government against the assumption that the United States' Courts could have jurisdiction over a foreign vessel in respect of an act committed on the high seas, which contention, in Lord Ripon's opinion, underlaid the plea of the United States' Government that, the case being in the hands of the Court, the Executive could not interfere.

That his Lordship also pointed out that Her Majesty's Government had not asked for any interference with the proceedings of the Court, but had only demanded that the prosecution of the vessel, which was the act of the Executive, should be withdrawn, on the ground that the municipal law of the United States did not extend to British vessels on the high sea.

That a despatch from the Governor-General of Canada, inclosing a Minute of Council on the subject, was inclosed in the letter from the Colonial Office dated the 21st November last.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would be good enough to take the papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether it was desirable to address a reply to the United States' Government in the sense of Lord Ripon's observations, and also with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

Protest ought to be maintained, and a reply in the sense of Lord Ripon's observations should be addressed to the U. S. Govt.

That, in our opinion, the protest made in this case ought to be maintained, and a reply in the sense of Lord Ripon's observations should be addressed to the United States' Government.

We would observe that the real ground for proceeding against the vessel appears to be the transfer of cargo outside the "3-mile limit," and it might be plausibly argued that as Great Britain, when legislating for the protection of her own Revenue Laws (10 Geo. II, cap. 36, secs. 22 and 23), has assumed jurisdiction over vessels within 4 leagues of the shore, the United States are justified in following her example.

The answer to this is, as previously indicated, that the United States' legislation, contained in the Articles 2867 and 2868, founded on by them relates only to vessels bound to the United States, and is intended to prevent any fraud on the Revenue Laws. If, and so far as, the Government of Great Britain might be disposed to waive any objection to jurisdiction being exercised under these Articles outside the "3-mile limit," it could only be on the ground that it would not interfere in favour of its nationals, not acting in good faith, to prevent the United States from protecting itself against infraction of its Revenue Laws. No such waiver could be treated as assent to jurisdiction outside the "3-mile limit," or allow of its being exercised, as here, against a ship not bound for the United States, and therefore not within either the letter or spirit of the Articles referred to.

Objection is taken to the action of the U. S. Executive in seizing a British ship for an act done outside territorial waters.

The objection is taken, not to the exercise by the United States' Tribunals of a jurisdiction within their competence, but to the action of the Executive in seizing a British ship for an act done outside territorial waters, and not even within the terms of the United States' law.

The Zanzibar draft Order in Council, 1892.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a draft Order in Council, to be known as "The Zanzibar Order in Council, 1892," authorizing persons not holding Her Majesty's commission as Consul or Vice-Consul for Zanzibar to exercise under certain conditions, and subject to certain limitations set forth in the draft Order, judicial functions in the dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was also to inclose a copy of "The Zanzibar Order in Council, 1884," referred to in the draft Order as the principal Order.

That he was to request that we would take the draft Order in Council into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether its terms were right and proper, and whether it might be submitted in its then shape to the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to Draft Order in Council.

Whereas by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, Her Majesty the Queen has jurisdiction within the dominions of His Highness the Sultan of Zanzibar:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise, in Her Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. This Order may be cited as "The Zanzibar Order in Council, 1892."

2. In case Her Majesty is pleased to direct the appointment of a person, not holding Her Majesty's commission as a Consul or Vice-Consul for Zanzibar or any part thereof, nor acting or appointed temporarily as such under the provisions of "The Zanzibar Order in Council, 1884" (hereinafter referred to as the principal Order), to perform, as a Judge or judicial officer or Commissioner in or for Zanzibar or any part thereof, all or any of the judicial powers or jurisdiction by the principal Order vested in or exercisable by a Consular Court, a person so appointed by the authority of a Secretary of State, in such form as a Secretary of State may direct, shall in like manner hold and form a Court, and for the purposes of, and subject to any limitations contained in, his appointment, shall have and exercise all the same powers and jurisdiction which under the principal Order can be exercised by a Consular Court, and shall be removable by authority of a Secretary of State; and it shall be lawful for a Secretary of State, by any such appointment or otherwise, to make provision for assigning to such Judge or judicial officer or Commissioner such of the powers or so much of the jurisdiction exercisable under the principal Order and this Order, to be exercised by them, either separately or concurrently, as the Secretary of State from time to time directs, and under such description or designation as he directs.

In this Order expressions have the same meaning as in the principal Order.

And the Right Honourable the Marquis of Salisbury, K.G., one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, is to give the necessary directions herein.

Proclamation of Administrator of Imperial East Africa Company at Mombasa as to registration of individuals and property, and institution of trade licences.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 18th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list* relative to a Proclamation issued on the 1st January last by Mr. Ernest Berkeley, the Administrator of the Imperial East Africa Company at Mombasa.

That the Proclamation in question insisted on the registration of individuals and property within the Company's territories, and imposed a fee for such registration. That it also ordered all merchants, traders, and shopkeepers to obtain a licence authorizing them to carry on their business, and imposed fees for such licences.

That it further notified that non-compliance with the Regulations would be punished by a fine which might amount to 100 rupees, and that further neglect after the first offence would be "more severely dealt with."

That the subjects of certain foreign Powers and the agents of some British firms paid the licence fees under protest, but that certain Indian traders refused to comply with the requirements of the Proclamation, and were fined by the Company's Administrator. That they declined to pay the fines.

That upon that the question arose whether the registration fees and licence duties imposed by the Proclamation were legally leviable by Mr. Berkeley, or whether they were inconsistent with the terms of the Treaties of Zanzibar with this country and Germany, of which copies were inclosed, viz., those of the 31st May, 1839, and the 30th April, 1886.

That it would be observed (Article VII) that the Treaties in question prescribed that no taxes, customs, or duties beyond an import duty of 5 per cent. ad valorem on all foreign goods should be levied or claimed by or on behalf of the Sultan of Zanzibar within His Highness' dominions.

That the position and powers of the Company within the territories conceded to them by the Sultan of Zanzibar would be gathered from the terms of their Concession from His Highness, dated the 25th May, 1887, from which it would be seen that it was stipulated that nothing therein contained "shall in any way infringe on or lessen the rights accorded by His Highness to the subjects or citizens of Great Britain, the United States of America, France, Germany, or other foreign Power having Treaty relations with His Highness."

That the position, therefore, was that the Company administered in the place of the Sultan, having neither more nor less powers or rights than His Highness, and that the question at issue was whether the Sultan would or would not have the right to exact fees and impose licences, such as those exacted and imposed by Mr. Berkeley on (1) British and (2) German subjects, in view of the above-mentioned Treaty stipulations.

That the papers also raised the question, how far the Sultan or those exercising his powers were entitled to charge German or British subjects for work specially done for their benefit; or to refuse such special benefits, such as registration, or the like, if the consideration were not paid. That equally the question might be raised whether a licence to do anything which it was at the discretion of the Sultan to forbid could be treated as a benefit or service done, which might be withheld except upon consideration given.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions raised in his letter, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the matter.

The Attorney-General's Opinion.

I have taken the papers into my consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Clause 5 of Proclamation is ultra vires.

That, in my opinion, clause 5 of the Proclamation of the 1st January, 1892, is ultra vires, as imposing indirectly taxation contrary to Article IX of the Treaty of the 30th April, 1886.

Registration cannot be looked upon as a service rendered or benefit conferred; it is required equally from foreigners and natives as part of the administrative system of the country.

The Solicitor-General's Opinion.

I have also taken the matter into consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That I agree with the Attorney-General, that registration cannot be looked upon as a service rendered or benefit conferred; and that it is required equally from foreigners and natives as part of the administrative system of the country.

No valid objection to the Proclamation.

I am of opinion that no valid objection can be raised to the Proclamation of the 1st January, 1892.

Extent of jurisdiction and administrative powers of a European State holding Protectorates in Africa.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the question of the extent of the jurisdiction and administrative powers of a European State holding Protectorates in Africa, a subject on which we reported to the Secretary of State for the Colonies on the 17th and 30th April, 1891.

German claim to exterritoriality and to exemption from Penal Regulations respecting liquor traffic issued by any but German authorities.

That the particular question now at issue arose in consequence of the action of Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Zanzibar in attempting to give effect to those Articles of the Brussels Act of 1890 which referred to the importation of spirituous liquors into Africa.

That the Act of Brussels was signed on the 2nd July, 1890, and that the Sultan of Zanzibar was a party to it. That on the 4th November, 1890, the Protectorate of Great Britain over the dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar was publicly notified. That the Act of Brussels, owing to delays in ratification by some of the Signatory Powers, first came into operation on the 2nd April, 1892, and that, on the 7th of that month, Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Zanzibar, who had previously issued a warning on the subject, notified the fact to his colleagues, and asked their co-operation in carrying out the Regulations under which he proposed to administer the spirit clauses of the Act.

That the German Consul raised an objection to those Regulations so far as they applied to persons under his jurisdiction, pending instructions from his Government. That, meantime, due notice was given by Her Majesty's Government on the 6th April, under section 2 of Article XCI of the Brussels Act, that the dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar had been placed within the zone of prohibition of alcoholic liquors. That it was to be observed that the notification to the Powers was not made by Zanzibar, as a Sovereign Power signatory of the Act, but by Great Britain as the Signatory Power exercising Protectorate over Zanzibar. That the matter was reported by telegraph, and formed the subject of a representation to the German Government, which met with the reply recorded in Mr. Trench's No. 30, Africa, of the 28th April. That it would be seen therefrom that the German Government raised no question of the right of the British Representative to issue a notice dealing with the matter, but claimed that, in consequence of the exterritorial rights possessed by Germany in Zanzibar under Article XVI of the Treaty of the 20th December, 1885, any penal Regulations against infringement of the notice, as affecting German subjects, must be issued by the German Government. That your Lordship had some doubts as to the validity of that contention, and the consequent propriety of making any such admission on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

That the general views of Her Majesty's Government as to the jurisdiction and administrative powers of a European State holding Protectorates in Africa were in harmony with those put forward in the Memorandum by Mr. Bramston of February 1891, on which we reported to Lord Knutsford on the 17th April, 1891, that "the views expressed in the Memorandum are in substance correct."

That the cardinal position therein taken was that, by the signature of the Berlin Act of 1885, the Powers represented admitted that a Protectorate in Africa included the right of administering justice over the subjects of other civilized Powers within its limits.

That no objection had been made by any foreign Power to the exercise of British jurisdiction over its subjects in British Protectorates generally; that the objection raised by Germany in Zanzibar was based, as had been above stated, on the existence of the Treaty with Zanzibar, conferring exterritoriality on German subjects. That exterritorial rights were similarly claimed by many other Powers. That the question at issue was whether, and, if so, to what extent, those exterritorial rights had been extinguished in favour of Great Britain by the Act of Brussels for the purpose of the execution of the obligations contracted by her under the Act.

That Article XC stated that the Signatory Powers had agreed to apply the provisions of Articles XCI, XCII, and XCIII within a certain zone; that Article XCI laid down that, in certain regions of that zone, the Powers should prohibit the importation and manufacture of distilled liquors; that each Power should determine the limits of the zone of prohibition in its possessions or Protectorates, and should notify those limits within the space of six months, and that such prohibition could only be suspended in the case of limited quantities destined for the consumption of the non-native population, and imported under the system and conditions determined by each Government. That it was evident that the Powers which voluntarily assumed and imposed upon one another such obligations must have contemplated the possession by each Power of the means of enforcing the Regulations which it might be necessary to issue in fulfilment of those obligations. That the position would otherwise be intolerable, and the Articles of the Act would become a dead letter, and its administration a farce.

That if every other Power were to reserve the right to itself of imposing penalties for the infringement by its own subjects of the Rules made by the protecting Power for general observance by all persons within the limits of its Protectorate, any of them might, by the imposition of a merely nominal penalty, confer practical immunity upon its own subjects, and throw into their hands the monopoly of the spirit trade, while the protecting Power would be unable to interfere. That if this country could not exercise jurisdiction over foreigners, the differential treatment to which British subjects would be thus exposed would practically prevent any control at all being exercised.

That there was another contention also by which your Lordship was disposed to think that the German argument might possibly be met.

That the Treaties under which exterritoriality was claimed were between foreign Powers and Zanzibar; but that the Brussels Act imposed obligations upon Powers having possessions and Protectorates within which the limits of the prohibition were to be notified.

That it was Great Britain who notified the prohibition in the Zanzibar dominions as being within her Protectorate, and not the Sultan of Zanzibar, who notified it as being within his possessions.

That it was on Great Britain therefore that the obligation of enforcing its observance fell, and not on Zanzibar; and that it was in the British Courts within that Protectorate, and not in the native Courts, that the necessary jurisdiction for that purpose would be exercised and the Regulations enforced. That it was therefore questionable whether a Power, having by Treaty with Zanzibar the privilege of exemption of its subjects from Zanzibar jurisdiction, could appeal to such Treaty as exempting its subjects from the jurisdiction of the Courts of Great Britain in her Protectorate with respect to matters arising from obligations imposed on her by the Act of Brussels.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted therein, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

German contention inadmissible. Protecting Power has right to enforce prohibition of liquor traffic under Brussels General Act.

That, in our opinion, the contention of the German Government should not be admitted.

The effect of Articles XC, XCI, and XCII of the Brussels General Act is, in our judgment, that the protecting Power has the right and duty of determining the limits of the zone of prohibition, and the system and conditions under which that prohibition shall be suspended, and has, by necessary consequence, the right of enforcing such prohibition, and the observance of such system and conditions.

Had these Articles stood alone, we should have been of opinion that they amounted to a waiver by the Signatory Powers of any privileges enjoyed by their subjects under Treaty or otherwise, which would exempt them from the enforcement, by the protecting Power and its Tribunals, of such penalties as it might impose upon breach of the prohibition, or of the conditions. But we think the matter is rendered quite clear by Article XCVI, as a claim of extra-territoriality in respect of the enforcement of such prohibition and conditions would be contrary to the clear purport, and fatal to the effective execution, of the Brussels General Act.

Question of right of Zanzibar Government to levy duties under the Free Zone system of the Berlin Act as modified by the Brussels Act and Declaration of Zanzibar as a free port.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin,* relative to the question of the right of the Zanzibar Government to levy duties under the Free Zone system of the Berlin Act as modified by the Brussels Act and annexed Declaration, which formed the subject of the reference to us of the 19th ultimo.

That the case in the despatch No. 202 turned on an apparent evasion of the provisions of Chapter VI of the Brussels Act, which related to the use of distilled liquors, by the sale of such liquors under the title of "Eau de Cologne;" and that

That in despatch No. 203 affected the application of Articles VIII to XIII of the Act which dealt with the importation of arms, and depended on the interpretation of Article XCVI of the Act, which "repeals all contrary stipulations of Conventions previously concluded."

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions raised therein.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to

Report—

Duties on so-called "Eau de Cologne," safe custody of arms, &c.

That in our opinion—

1. The duties levied in respect of the so-called "Eau de Cologne" are properly chargeable.

Whether the goods can be properly described as "articles de parfumerie" or not, they are certainly alcoholic liquors, and taxable as such both under the Brussels General Act and the Declaration of Zanzibar as a free port.

Licences to carry fire-arms.

2. Inasmuch as the Brussels General Act provides for the deposit and safe custody of arms and ammunition, and for the granting of licences to carry fire-arms, reasonable charges for these purposes may properly be made.

Position of British Protectorate of Zanzibar under the Free Zone provisions of Article I of the Act of Berlin of 1885.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the position of the British Protectorate of Zanzibar under the Free Zone provisions of Article I of the Act of Berlin of 1885.

That the question was closely related to that of the position of the Protectorate in regard to liquor licences, on which our predecessors reported to the Marquis of Salisbury on the 30th June last, a copy of which Report was inclosed to us for convenience of reference.

That the point now in question was whether the Sultan of Zanzibar, as a Power which had adhered to the Berlin Act, and had possessions in the conventional basin of the Congo at the date of the signature of the Declaration of the 2nd July, 1890, attached to the Act of Brussels of the same date, or Great Britain, as exercising a Protectorate over Zanzibar on his behalf, was free to exercise the privilege, reserved to Powers having possessions within the conventional basin when the Berlin Act was signed, of placing those possessions within the Free Zone, and whether by so doing the Protectorate became entitled to employ the system framed for the Free Zone by the assembled Powers in 1885 as modified by the Declaration annexed to the Brussels Act.

That the arguments of the French Government against the position of Her Majesty's Government in the question were given in M. Ribot's note of the 29th August last, inclosed in Lord Dufferin's No. 232, Africa, of the same date. That those advanced in reply by Her Majesty's Government were more fully developed in the draft to his Excellency, marked 1; and that Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the proposed draft correctly and properly explained the position, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Approve generally draft of despatch to Lord Dufferin.

That in our opinion Great Britain, as exercising a Protectorate over Zanzibar, is, on behalf of the Sultan of Zanzibar, who had possessions in the conventional basin of the Congo at the date of the Declaration of the 2nd July, 1890, free to exercise the privilege, reserved to Powers having possessions within the conventional basin when the Berlin Act was signed, of placing those possessions within the Free Zone, and that by so doing the Protecting Power becomes entitled to employ the system framed for the Free Zone by the assembled Powers in 1885, as modified by the Declaration annexed to the Brussels Act.

The draft of the despatch proposed to be addressed to his Excellency Lord Dufferin does, in our opinion, correctly and properly explain the position; but we feel the difficulty of relying upon the so-called adhesion in November 1886 of the Sultan of Zanzibar, seeing that that adhesion is not absolute but qualified; and we would suggest a modification of the paragraph of the despatch referring to it.

(No. 265 Africa.)

Foreign Office, October 31, 1892.

My Lord

Her Majesty's Government have learnt with regret from your Excellency's despatch No. 232 of the 29th August that the French Government have thought it to be incumbent on them to make formal reserves in regard to the notification made to them on the 28th June, that the British Protectorate of Zanzibar would, from the 1st July, adopt the fiscal system of the Free Zone of the Act of Berlin, as modified by the Declaration appended to the Act of Brussels.

M. Ribot states that he is of opinion that this step is opposed to all the Acts and Treaties at present, as regards Tariffs, governing the international position of the Sultan's States. In support of this view he makes a series of observations based on the suggestions of the Legal Advisers of his Department.

These observations have been attentively considered. They take the form of objections, some relating to principle, others to detail, to some extent disconnected, the object being, apparently, to accumulate all considerations, direct or indirect, which may tend to invalidate the notification. I have endeavoured in the following remarks to meet each of these objections, while, at the same time, justifying the notification by showing that it is in every respect consistent with the powers and obligations of the British Protectorate.

M. Ribot holds that the step is not in accordance with the provisions of the Acts of Berlin and Brussels, nor with the Treaties of Zanzibar with various Powers. In replying, I will deal separately with the two branches of opposition.

The Ist Article of the Act of Berlin which M. Ribot quotes recorded that, as regards the Eastern Zone, the Signatory Powers engaged only for themselves, and did not apply the principle of commercial freedom to territories belonging to an independent State without the consent of such State; that, in fact, they respected existing interests, and did not assume the right of imposing the system upon States who might be reluctant to accept it. M. Ribot does not quote the words of the Article which engage the Powers to use their good offices to obtain the assent of a reluctant State, and which thus prove the anxiety of the Powers to obtain the universal acceptance of the new system. But these words are of the highest importance as proving that it was the object of the Conference to include Zanzibar, if her assent could be procured, within the area of commercial liberty as defined in the Act.

The Ist Article, taken by itself, comprises an engagement on the part of the Signatory Powers only. Zanzibar was not a Signatory Power.

But the XXXVIIth Article provided for the subsequent adhesion to the Act of other Powers who would be placed by adhesion on a precisely similar footing with those who had signed. Zanzibar did not long delay taking advantage of this privilege. The Act was signed on the 26th February, 1885; she adhered on the 8th November, 1886, and showed an intention of becoming, practically, a Signatory of the Act. M. Ribot's note appears to argue that the adhesion was incomplete, as, in giving it, the Sultan reserved the question of commercial liberty, and that it was not completed until this reservation was withdrawn through the acceptance by Great Britain, on his behalf, of the Free Zone system, notified to the Powers by Great Britain on the 22nd June last: it urges that, consequently, on the 2nd July, 1890, when the Act of Brussels, with the annexed Declaration, was signed, Zanzibar was not one of the Powers qualified to sign as "having ratified the General Act of Berlin, or having adhered thereto." I cannot but consider that the Legal Advisers of the Department, in making this suggestion, were not fully acquainted with the facts.

Zanzibar cannot, in the consideration of this point, be separated from the other Powers interested in the Eastern Zone. At the date of the signature of the Act of Berlin there was only one Power besides herself whose right of assent was reserved by the Ist Article, that Power being Portugal. But, subsequently, Germany having notified first a Protectorate in Usagara, and having afterwards obtained the cession of a large portion of the Zanzibar mainland, was added. Great Britain also, as Protector of Witu, and Italy, as claiming a sphere to the north of the Juba, took their places among the States connected with the Eastern Zone. The argument contained in the note must therefore be examined as regards its application to all these Powers.

Before dealing with the alleged incompleteness of adhesion of Powers who had not accepted the system of commercial liberty, I will meet an argument which seems to imply that the Act and Declaration (the latter, which was signed simultaneously with the former, cannot be separated from it) apply only to territories in the possession, or under the Protectorate or influence, of certain Powers specified at the date of signature, to the exclusion of those coming subsequently into the possession, or under the Protectorate or influence, of such Powers, and of those in the possession, or under the Protectorate or influence, of Powers not specially mentioned. This contention, if sound, would apply equally to the Act of Berlin, and it would in practice render nugatory, in a great measure, the provisions of both Acts, the manifest intention of which was to lay down a code of Rules governing States engaged in the gradual development of Africa, and to prevent them from dealing with the territories affected thereby except under the terms of the Acts.

M. Ribot applies the argument by saying that the Brussels Conference was really concerned about the revenues of the Congo State alone, and that the reference to certain other Powers, such as Great Britain and Germany, was incidental and limited, though unavoidable. It is undoubtedly true that the position of the Congo State may have primarily led to the discussion of the Declaration, but it is nevertheless the case that the Declaration itself, which is a most carefully-worded document, is by its terms extended explicitly to the whole of the conventional basin of the Congo, and is in no way limited or restricted. It applies to all possessions, Protectorates, or spheres situated within that basin, and makes no reference to the contingency of their conditions being from time to time altered.

It would create inextricable confusion if the Powers were to go behind the wording and appeal from it to the alleged intention of its framers. At the time of its signature Germany had not taken possession of the coast from the Rovuma to the Umbe, Great Britain had not assumed the Protectorate of Witu, Italy had not placed the northern coast under her influence. If, then, the argument of the note were admitted and pressed to its logical conclusion, it would follow that as none of these changes were effected when the Declaration was signed, neither of the three Powers could, any more than Zanzibar, take advantage of its provisions. If this objection had been valid it should have been put forward when, in December 1890, the three Powers concluded an Agreement in response to what they held to be the invitation of the Declaration, which was duly communicated to, and accepted by, the Conference. No such objection was made or even indicated, and it appears certain that the result of the signature of the Declaration is that the whole of the Powers in the Eastern Zone, Great Britain, Germany, Italy, Portugal, and Zanzibar, are entitled to its benefits, though the majority of them are in a position different from that which they held at the date of its signature.

M. Ribot takes further objections, which I think are correctly interpreted in the following manner: first, that supposing Zanzibar were qualified to sign the Brussels Act and Declaration, she could not afterwards adhere to the system of commercial liberty of the Berlin Act, as that system, owing to its modification by the Declaration, had ceased to exist; secondly, that if it were admitted that she were still able to adhere to the system, she could not obtain the benefits of the Declaration by adhering after the 2nd July, 1890.

To the first objection, I reply by observing that the system of commercial liberty established by the Act of Berlin is unquestionably still in existence; it has only been modified in respect of the power to levy import duties. As regards the second argument, I would ask whether it has been considered that it would apply with equal force to Germany and Portugal. The former has not placed her coast-line, the latter has not placed any portion of her possessions, within the system of commercial liberty. If Zanzibar, therefore, were excluded from the benefit of the Declaration by her tardiness in accepting the invitation tendered by the Ist Article of the Act of Berlin, à fortiori the Powers which have not yet accepted would be excluded. Zanzibar, as I have before said, cannot in this respect be treated exceptionally.

The correct view appears to be that delay in accepting the Berlin invitation, to which no limit was attached, neither creates a qualified adherence to the Act nor deprives reluctant States of any benefits which may be conferred by the Brussels Declaration whenever they may decide to signify their acceptance. The reserve for the benefit of the States in the Eastern Zone was not made by those States, but by the parties to the Act. Full adherence, consequently, is compatible with such reserve, and Zanzibar, in common with the other Powers which took advantage of it, is fully entitled to the privileges and bound by the obligations of Signatories of, or adherents to, the Act of Berlin, all of whom have participated in the Act of Brussels, with which the Declaration is inseparably connected.

I have thus far considered principally the position of Zanzibar as an independent State, but her position is doubly fortified by the fact that the country is under the Protectorate of Great Britain. If there were a doubt as to the completeness of the adhesion of Zanzibar to the Act of Berlin, and, inferentially, of her right to benefit by the Brussels Declaration, there can be no doubt whatever as to the position of Great Britain. The preamble of the Declaration confers its benefits upon Powers having possessions or Protectorates in the conventional basin of the Congo; she has, therefore, the right to claim its application to her Protectorate of Zanzibar, unless, indeed, Germany, Portugal, and herself should be prepared to acquiesce in the view that all their possessions and Protectorates not placed within the Free Zone system on the 2nd July, 1890, were excluded from its operation.

Having, in the above observations, dealt with the application of the two Acts, I proceed to the consideration of the effect of the Treaties on the situation.

M. Ribot remarks that when, on the 5th August, 1890, France recognized the British Protectorate, a reservation was made as regards the maintenance of the rights and immunities of French citizens, and he appears to draw the conclusion that this reservation would make it unjust now to apply to French citizens the provisions of the Declaration, which were not applied to them on the 5th August. I cannot accept this deduction. France had, in the previous month, become a party to the Declaration, with its attendant results. Her Majesty's Government fully admit that they are bound to respect all rights and immunities to which French citizens are entitled in Zanzibar; but it is clear that the definition of those rights and immunities depends upon the interpretation of International Acts affecting the territory in which they reside. If, therefore, as Her Majesty's Government contend, the Act of Brussels, with its Declaration, and the Act of Berlin, including its Ist Article, govern the situation in Zanzibar, French citizens cannot enjoy any rights or immunities inconsistent with those Acts. The interpretation, therefore, of the reservation of the 5th August depends on the decision as to the general question of principle.

M. Ribot appeals to the Zanzibar Treaties, and urges that the Sultan cannot, of his own initiative, annul Treaties.

This proposition is self-evident, but I would observe that it does not seem to touch the point at issue. The Powers assembled at Berlin established a fiscal system, and expressed their anxiety that Zanzibar should adopt it. This system was altogether inconsistent with that hitherto prevailing under separate Commercial Treaties with certain Powers, and its adoption of necessity implied the abrogation of clauses in such Treaties conflicting with it. It is manifestly erroneous to state that the Sultan, in accepting the invitation, abandoned the Treaty system in favour of that of the Act of his own initiative. The initiative was taken by the Powers who gave the invitation, and who, in recommending him to make the alteration, of necessity surrendered any obligations binding him to them which would have prevented his acceding to their wishes. They, in fact, assented to the substitution by the Sultan of a new system for the old one; and they could not have intended to stipulate that His Highness should be debarred from accepting their invitation, unless he should obtain the separate assent of each Power with whom he might have concluded a Treaty. The collective assent implied in the invitation rendered individual assent superfluous. This inference would seem conclusive without evidence in support of it; but, in point of fact, positive evidence as to the intention of the Powers exists. The XCVIth Article of the Act of Brussels explicitly stipulates that the General Act repeals all contrary stipulations of Conventions previously concluded between the Signatory Powers. The question, therefore, of the Treaties also depends on the general principle of the application of the Acts to Zanzibar. If those Acts are applicable, Zanzibar and Great Britain, as exercising a Protectorate over her, are expressly released from any Treaty stipulations conflicting with them. All such stipulations not conflicting with them are, it is well understood, still operative.

An interesting point is raised in the note as to whether a perpetual Treaty would be extinguished by an Act whose duration would possibly be limited; but the question as to the possible revival of a Treaty would not affect that of its suspension while the Act is in force. This point, therefore, does not seem to have at present practical importance.

It remains for me to notice the reference in the preamble of the Arrangement of December 1890 to the Zanzibar Tariff, which I would explain by pointing out that it implied only that the then existing Tariff was, for the sake of convenience, taken as the basis for the Conventional Tariff, and to the quoted remarks of M. Goering, as to which I would observe that he correctly defined the position of the Sultan under the Treaty system which was in force at the time when he was speaking.

In conclusion, I have to express the hope that the Government of the Republic, to whom your Excellency will submit these observations and explanations, will not maintain their reservation. Her Majesty's Government have no object in view but to carry out the intentions of the two International Acts by bringing the country of which Great Britain has assumed the Protectorate under the system elaborated by the Powers as that best suited for the civilization and development of Africa. They are aware that there are difficulties, but they hope for the assistance in removing them of all Powers interested in the progress of the country, and especially of the Government of the Republic. I hope that the considerations which I have advanced will be examined impartially, and that it will be recognized that Her Majesty's Government have been careful to act within the limit of their international engagements, while respecting all existing rights not conflicting with those engagements.

Import duties leviable by Imperial British East Africa Company in territory of Sultan of Zanzibar.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the question of the import duties leviable by the Imperial British East Africa Company in that portion of the territory of the Sultan of Zanzibar which was under their administration now that the whole of His Highness' dominions had been placed under the Free Zone provisions of the Berlin Act.

That it would be seen that on receipt of the notification in Paper (D) to the effect that, in the territory under their administration, the Import Tariff would be 5 per cent., the Company wrote stating that they understood that the change did not modify the conditions of the Sultan's Concession, or affect the import dues leviable under the new system on the mainland territory of His Highness administered by them; and that they stated that the point was raised by them in view of the provisions of the Declaration annexed to the Brussels Act as interpreted by Protocol No. XXXII.

That the answer given was contained in Paper (F), and was to the effect that the Company were free to levy the 5 per cent. so long as they scrupulously fulfilled the obligations imposed by the Brussels Act.

That they replied that their acceptance of that condition must in no way be interpreted to effect their right to appropriate the proceeds of the 5 per cent. import duty to the purposes contemplated by the provisions of the Concession of prior date based upon the Commercial Treaties then in force, as otherwise they feared that it might be held that the Brussels Act required all sums collected under the Declaration thereto annexed to be expended in carrying out the objects of the Act.

That the proposed reply to that letter was contained in Paper marked (I).

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the proposed reply was right and proper, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

Approve proposed reply to the Company.

That in our opinion the proposed reply is (in the terms of the reference to us) right and proper.

Foreign Office, November 1, 1892.

Sir

I AM directed by the Earl of Rosebery to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 9th ultimo, relative to the right of the Imperial British East Africa Company to appropriate the proceeds of the 5 per cent. import duty, leviable under the Declaration attached to the Brussels Act, in the dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar under their administration, to the purposes contemplated by the provisions of the Concession of prior date granted to them by the Sultan.

I am to state, in reply, that the terms of the Brussels Declaration are clear, and that they govern the situation.

The Company, being bound by the obligations of the Brussels Act, is permitted to increase its general revenue by the imposition of an import duty. There is no stipulation in the Declaration that the proceeds of the duty are to be kept separate, and accounted for separately as applied in a particular manner. Consequently the Company must pay the Sultan's rent out of its general revenue, supplied, among other sources, by the import duty authorized by the Declaration and the subsequent Agreement of the 22nd December, 1890.

I am, &c.

Royal Courts of Justice, November 15, 1892.

My Lord,

Proposal of Government of Sultan of Zanzibar to issue a Stamp Act to enforce the use of stamps on Petitions, &c.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 26th September last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin relative to a proposal of the Government of the Sultan of Zanzibar to issue a Stamp Act to enforce the use of stamps on Petitions, transfers, registrations, receipts, and so forth.

That we were already aware, from the terms of the reference made to us by your Lordship's directions on the 16th September, of the general position claimed by Her Majesty's Government as the Protecting Power in Zanzibar for the Government of the Sultan in regard to the taxation of foreigners.

That it appeared that, in the case in question, Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General had notified to the foreign Representatives the issue of a Decree by the Government of the Sultan providing for the imposition of a Zanzibar Government stamp to the value of 1 per cent. of the property affected on all documents relating to the transfer, sale, or mortgage of property, whether movable or immovable; and that the Court had notified that the Order would be observed by it in all cases to which it was applicable.

That the French and German Consuls had formally protested against the measure, and had informed Sir Gerald Portal that they declined to recognize it in their Consular Courts. That the other foreign Consuls had not objected.

French Treaty of 1844. State Papers, vol. xxxv, p. 1011. British and German Treaties of 1886 and 1885. Treaty No. 782, and (1885) State Papers, vol. lxxvi, p. 247.

That it would appear that a Stamp Act such as that proposed would not be inconsistent with the terms of the French Treaty of 1844 (still in force in Zanzibar), Article X of which merely provided that no duty beyond 5 per cent. should be levied on ships and their cargoes, and that the latter might be sold, without additional duty, wholesale or retail. Nor did it seem to be contrary to the letter or spirit of the British and German Treaties of 1886 and 1885.

That it would be seen that Article IX of those Treaties forbade other duties, customs, or taxes, whether for their persons, houses, or goods. That, indeed, if the contrary were maintained, it would appear possible for a British subject to appeal to the Treaty of 1886 to protect him even against the payment of Consular fees by stamps in Zanzibar dominions.

L.O. Report, 17th Feb., 1874.

That the view of Her Majesty's Government, that such a Stamp Act as was then contemplated was within the competency of the Zanzibar Government, was fortified by the opinion expressed by the Law Officers of the day on the 17th February, 1874, when a Stamp Law was passed by Turkey, to the effect that it did not infringe the Capitulations, provided that it applied equally to natives and to all foreigners.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the points raised, and with any other observations which might occur to us in regard to them.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Not competent to Sultan of Zanzibar to raise such a revenue.

That, in our opinion, it is not competent to the Sultan of Zanzibar to raise a revenue by ad valorem stamp duties on the transfer, sale, or mortgage of property, movable or immovable, of subjects of the Treaty Powers entitled to the benefit of the provisions contained in the German Treaty of 1885 or the British Treaty of 1886.

By the last sub-section (b) of Article IX of the German Treaty, it is provided that German subjects are liable to be taxed by, or on behalf of, His Highness the Sultan, or his authorities, with only such duties, customs, or taxes, be it for their person or their property, as is provided in the foregoing Articles VII and VIII.

By the last clause of Article IX of the British Treaty, it is agreed that British subjects are not liable to be taxed with any other duties, customs, or taxes than those before specified in Articles VII and VIII, whether for their persons, houses, lands, or goods.

These provisions are not inconsistent with the Berlin Act of 1885, and appear to be still binding, and they could not have their full effect if, under the name of stamp duties, the owners could be made to pay ad valorem duties (without limit) in respect of transfers, sales, or mortgages of property. Subjects of nations entitled to the benefit of the most-favoured-nation clause are entitled to rely upon these provisions.

We do not think that the Report of the Law Officers of the 17th February, 1874, affords any ground for a contrary opinion. Neither the Treaty of 1861 nor the Capitulations with Turkey contained clauses so extensive in operation as those above referred to.

It does not follow that reasonable charges might not be made for services rendered, whether in the form of Consular fees or stamps on Petitions or registrations, but the Order of the 31st August, 1892, does not deal with these.

We think, also, that the imposition of a moderate stamp duty on receipts, such as that imposed by the Order of the 31st August, 1892, would not be contrary to the meaning of the Treaties, though perhaps it would hardly be worth while to press the duty in face of opposition.

My Lord,

Zanzibar stamp duties.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 15th November last, in which we expressed the opinion that it was not competent to the Sultan of Zanzibar to raise a revenue by ad valorem stamp duties on the transfer, sale, or mortgage of property—movable or immovable—of subjects of the Treaty Powers entitled to the benefit of the provisions contained in the German Treaty of 1885 or the British Treaty of 1886, he had the honour, by direction of your Lordship, to request to be favoured with our views on the following point, viz., whether the duties in question would be legal if they were imposed under the Free Zone fiscal system of the Berlin Act, and not under the Treaty fiscal system which it had superseded?

Law Officers' Reports, 22nd October, 1892, and 15th November, 1892, pp. 99–104.

Declaration 2nd July, 1890. Treaty No. 889.

That with reference to the position of Zanzibar under the Free Zone system of the Berlin Act, Sir Philip Currie was specially to refer us to our Report of the 22nd October last, wherein it was stated that, in our opinion, "Great Britain, as exercising a Protectorate over Zanzibar, is, on behalf of the Sultan of Zanzibar, who had possessions in the conventional basin of the Congo at the date of the Declaration of the 2nd July, 1890, free to exercise the privilege reserved to Powers having possessions within the Free Zone, and that by so doing the Protecting Power becomes entitled to employ the system framed for the Free Zone by the assembled Powers in 1885, as modified by the Declaration annexed to the Brussels Act."

Berlin Genera Act of 1885. Treaty No. 757.

That it was clearly understood that the stamp duties contemplated were, in our opinion, inconsistent with the Treaty fiscal system, but that it was not understood that we had pronounced that they would be inconsistent with the Free Zone fiscal system.

That as the question was of considerable practical importance, Sir Philip Currie was therefore to request that we would be good enough further to advise your Lordship as to their legality, or otherwise, considered from the latter point of view.

We have taken this further question into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Objections to proposed stamp duties

That, in our opinion, the so-called "Free Zone system" cannot be treated as existing independently of the "Treaty system."

are applicable under the "Free Zone system" to the case of Zanzibar.

The Berlin General Act of 1885, as modified by the Declaration of the 2nd July, 1890, does not abrogate the Treaties entered into by Zanzibar with France, Germany, and Great Britain, except so far as it is inconsistent with them. There is no inconsistency between the scheme of the "Free Zone system" and the provisions of the Treaties for the protection of the subjects of the several Treaty Powers, and we think that the objections pointed out by us to the proposed stamp duties are applicable to the case of Zanzibar under the "Free Zone system."

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, December 2, 1892.

Right of British East Africa Company to appropriate proceeds of 5 per cent. import duty levied under Sultan of Zanzibar's Concession.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to submit to us a letter from the Imperial British East Africa Company, and the draft of a reply which it was proposed to return to it.

That the letter, which was dated on the 4th November, referred to a letter addressed to the Company by the Secretary of State on the 1st of that month. That the letter was the communication submitted to us in draft on the 1st October, and approved by us on the 24th of that month.

That in the letter of the 4th instant the Company, while apparently accepting the explanation given to it on the 1st instant to the effect that it was permitted to apply, for the purposes of its general revenue, the proceeds of the import duty of 5 per cent. ad valorem which it was empowered to levy under the terms of the Agreement consequent on the Declaration annexed to the Brussels Act, stated that, "should the course notified in the inclosure contained in the letter from the Foreign Office of the 25th June last in any way derogate from, or prejudicially affect, the rights conferred on the Company by the Agreement of Concession from the Sultan of Zanzibar, and by Her Majesty's Charter, the Directors will seek to recover compensation from those responsible for any damage the Company may thereby sustain."

That the letter of the 25th June, which was among the papers submitted to us on the 1st October, inclosed the notification sent to the Signatories of the Act of Berlin informing them that the Sultan of Zanzibar would, from the 1st July, adopt the fiscal system of the Free Zone defined by that Act, and modified by the Declaration annexed to the Act of Brussels. That the reservation, therefore, by the Company of the right to claim compensation rested on the possible injury which it might suffer from the Sultan's adhesion to the Free Zone system, as notified to it on the 25th June.

That the reference to the Charter was based on a misapprehension, as the provisions of the Charter were not applicable to any portion of the territories of the Sultan of Zanzibar.

That Sir Philip Currie was to observe that the Company's position relative to the levy of import duties was not altered by the Sultan's act.

That under Article VII of the Treaty between Great Britain and Zanzibar of the 30th April, 1886, the Sultan had the power of levying an import duty not exceeding 5 per cent. ad valorem. That the Sultan in his Concessions to the Company authorized it to levy and collect dues, subject in all cases to his Treaties. That he, therefore, empowered it to levy and collect the duty authorized by Treaty, viz., an import duty not exceeding 5 per cent. ad valorem.

That the Declaration annexed to the Brussels Act empowered the States which had adopted the Free Zone fiscal system of the Berlin Act to levy import dues which should not exceed 10 per cent. ad valorem.

That by an Agreement subsequently made certain of the States affected by that Declaration as regarded territories on the East Coast of Africa resolved that they would not levy more than 5 per cent.

That the amount which the Sultan (and consequently the Company, as concessionnaire) was authorized to levy under the Free Zone system was, therefore, identical with that which he was previously authorized to levy in accordance with his Treaties.

That it was our opinion, as given in our Report of the 24th October, that the Company might apply the dues levied under the existing system in the same manner as those levied under the former system, namely, that it might utilize them for the general purpose of its revenue.

That it was conceived, therefore, that the Company, not being damnified, was not justified in reserving a claim for compensation against "those responsible" for the entry of the Sultan into the Free Zone.

That it was worthy of note, moreover, that under the above description Her Majesty's Government, upon whose advice the Sultan gave his adhesion to the Free Zone system, would be, and were most probably specially intended by the Company to be, included.

That Sir Philip Currie was further to observe that the Company, in its letter of the 4th November, implied that it had a ground for complaint in the fact that, before the Sultan placed himself, by his adhesion to the Free Zone system, within the fiscal system of the Berlin Act, as modified by the Declaration annexed to the Brussels Act, "the consent of all the parties to such existing contract had not been obtained to the intimated changes;" the suggestion being that the Company had not previously assented to the change.

That with regard to that contention Sir Philip Currie was to observe that the Company had actually anticipated the Sultan's action by announcing its wish to effect the change of system. That in proof of that he was to forward the inclosed correspondence.

That the Declaration annexed to the Brussels Act came into operation on the 2nd April last. That on the 29th of the same month the Company sent to the Marquis of Salisbury a draft of a Decree which it proposed to publish, announcing that, in the territories under its administration, import duties would thenceforth be levied in accordance with the provisions of the Declaration. That on the 11th May it was cautioned by his Lordship that, as Zanzibar had not yet entered into the Free Zone, the conditions could not, until she did so, be applied to her territory. That on the 12th May the Company, in reply to an inquiry from the German Government as to the manner in which the fiscal system of the territory under its administration would be affected by the adoption of the Free Zone system, explained in detail how the new system would operate. That that letter was annexed. That it was conceived that that correspondence abundantly proved the previous consent of the Company to the Sultan's adhesion, which took effect from the 1st July following.

That the papers which accompanied the reference of the 1st October were again transmitted.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would be good enough to inform your Lordship whether, in consideration of the facts above stated, we were of opinion that the letter, the draft of which was inclosed, was a proper one to be addressed to the Company, or whether its terms might advantageously be altered or modified, and, if so, in what respects.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Annex.

Draft of Letter to Imperial British East Africa Company.

Sir, Foreign Office, December 8, 1892.

I AM directed by the Earl of Rosebery to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 4th instant, in which you state that your letter of the 9th September did not relate to the Company's right to appropriate the proceeds of any duty leviable under the Declaration attached to the Brussels Act, but solely to the preservation of the Company's rights to appropriate the proceeds of the existing 5 per cent. import duty levied under the powers conceded to the Company by the Sultan's Concession, and confirmed by their Charter.

I am to observe that this contention is entirely inconsistent with the terms of the letter. The Company asked for an explanation as to whether the 5 per cent. import duty, now leviable under the Free Zone system, was more limited than the duty of similar amount which they were previously empowered to levy, that is, to quote the words of the inquiry, whether the Declaration could be "interpreted to affect the Company's right to appropriate the proceeds of the 5 per cent. import duty to the purposes contemplated by the provisions of the Concession of prior date." Nothing could be clearer than this. It was asked whether the 5 per cent. duty leviable under the new arrangement could be used for the same purposes as the 5 per cent. duty leviable under the old arrangement.

In my reply of the 1st instant your Directors were assured that there was no difference as to the appropriation of the duty.

As regards the substitution of the Free Zone system for the previous fiscal system existing by Treaty agreements, I am to point out that there is, in his Lordship's opinion, no ground for the claim for compensation to which you refer in the last paragraph of your letter.

You speak of derogation from, or prejudicial effects to, the rights conferred on the Company by the Agreements of Concession from the Sultan of Zanzibar, and by Her Majesty's Charter, arising from the course notified in the inclosure contained in my letter of the 25th June. That inclosure was the notification of the intention of the Sultan of Zanzibar to adopt the Free Zone fiscal system from the 1st July.

I am to observe that the reference to this Charter is difficult to comprehend, as all the territories affected by the Charter, except Witu so long as it was a German Protectorate, were included in the Free Zone from the date of the signature of the Act of Berlin, and none of them were touched by the Sultan's act.

As regards the Sultan's territories, the explanation of the supposed claim appears to be given by a preceding paragraph, in which it is stated that the consent of all the parties to the existing contract had not been obtained to the intimated change. I am to point out that, if it is intended to convey that the Company's concurrence had not been shown in the entry of Zanzibar into the Free Zone, the statement is entirely erroneous. The Act, and the annexed Declaration, came into force on the 2nd April last. On the 29th of the same month the Directors, of their own initiative, forwarded, for the approval of the Marquis of Salisbury, the draft of a Decree which they proposed to issue, authorizing the levy of import dues in accordance with the Declaration. On the 11th May they were cautioned by his Lordship that the Decree was premature, as the Sultan had not yet placed his territories under the Free Zone system. On the following day a letter was written by the Directors giving, in reply to an inquiry from the German Government, a clear explanation of the operation of the new fiscal system in the Sultan's territories under their administration. In this correspondence there is abundant proof that the Directors not only were aware of the Sultan's intention, but that they approved it, wished to anticipate its operation, and thoroughly understood its effect.

Under these circumstances they cannot expect that Her Majesty's Government will admit that the change effected by the Sultan can form the basis in any way for a claim to compensation on behalf of the Company.

I am, &c.

No. 1.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received July 13.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, July 12, 1893.

O's. in C. amending Zanzibar O's. in C. of 1884 and 1889, and Africa O. in C. of 1889.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 27th ultimo stating that he was directed to transmit to us the papers, noted in the accompanying list, relating to the drafts of two Orders which it was proposed to submit to Her Majesty in Council for her approval, amending in certain respects (1) "The Zanzibar Orders in Council, 1884 and 1888;" and (2) "The Africa Order in Council, 1889."

That the drafts had been prepared in consultation with the Foreign Office by Mr. Albert Gray, who had also drawn up the inclosed Memorandum explaining the various matters requiring legislation, and the mode in which they were proposed to be dealt with in the draft Orders.

That as the draft Orders were, mutatis mutandis, practically identical in their provisions, it had been thought that it would be convenient to forward them both together for our observations.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request us to take the papers into our consideration, and to favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether these draft Orders might properly be submitted for Her Majesty's approval, and if not, in what respects they, or either of them, might advantageously be modified or amended.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, Orders in Council in the terms of the drafts initialled by us may properly be submitted to Her Majesty for approval.

We have, &c.

ZANZIBAR AND AFRICA ORDERS IN COUNCIL.

Memorandum.

THE following notes may serve to explain the matters requiring legislation, and the mode in which they are proposed to be dealt with in these draft Orders:—

I.—Zanzibar Order.

Article 1. Short title and construction.

Article 2. Since the establishment of Protectorates in Africa questions have arisen:—

(1.) Whether natives of a Protectorate while temporarily resident in another country, to which the Foreign Jurisdiction Orders in Council apply, are "British-protected persons" there; and

(2.) Whether natives of a Protectorate are, in virtue of the Protectorate or otherwise, "British-protected persons" in the Protectorate.

(1.) The term "British-protected person" as used in the Orders (apart from section 15 of the Act of 1890) is a personal distinction, applicable to individuals who are either in fact or nominally attached to the Embassy, Legation, or Consulate. They may be either natives or foreigners, and their protection lasts only so long as they continue to be so attached.

The term "Protectorate," it is conceived, implies that the Government of a country is protected, but that the country is not directly governed by the Protecting Power.

A protected Government has, however, no independent foreign relations, and therefore cannot safeguard its own subjects when they are outside the territory. It follows that subjects of the Protectorate must, when abroad, enjoy the protection of the Protecting Power.

On this principle section 15 of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," makes the subjects of the Native States of India (who at home are justiciable in Native Courts) protected persons in territories under Foreign Jurisdiction Orders in Council.

The Article thus adds to the category of British-protected persons certain nationalities whose protection rests upon quite different foundations from those of the Consulate servants, &c.

Section 15 was a mere consolidation of section 4 of 39 & 40 Vict., cap. 46, which was passed in consequence of the Bombay High Court having decided that the subject of an Indian Native State was not amenable to the British Slave Trade Acts. After providing for the trial and punishment of such persons in British India, the Act "declared and enacted" that they were and were to be deemed to be persons enjoying Her Majesty's protection in territories to which the Foreign Jurisdiction Orders apply.

That an enactment was deemed necessary argues a previous doubt as to the law which was declared.

The same doubt must exist as to subjects of African Protectorates; it is therefore proposed in Article 2 to remove this doubt, and to provide that natives of other Protectorates coming to Zanzibar shall be British-protected persons there.

I think the provision may be made by Order in Council, notwithstanding the precedent of 1876. From Lord Salisbury's speech (as reported in Hansard) on the introduction of the Bill, I assume that section 4 was inserted owing to the fitness of the opportunity, not that statutory enactment was necessary.

(2.) If the construction of "British-protected persons" and "Protectorate" given above is substantially correct, it follows that ordinary subjects of a Protectorate are not "British-protected persons" while within the Protectorate.

This view is supported by the Africa Order, 1889, and the Brunei Order, 1890, both of which deal with Protectorates. In these Orders a clear line is drawn between "British protected persons" who are classed with British subjects and "natives" who are classed with "foreigners."

Some provision is, however, required to authorize jurisdiction over natives at Zanzibar. The only provisions in the Order of 1884 (Part VII) relate to jurisdiction by consent of the party.

The Africa Order (Article 10) and Brunei Order (Article 4) both provide for jurisdiction over natives with the consent of their own Ruler. Under these and similar powers, nearly the entire internal sovereignty has, in the South African and Gold Coast Protectorates, been transferred to Her Majesty, and a similar condition is rapidly developing in the Niger Coast Protectorate.

At Zanzibar, so far as I am aware, there has been as yet but one exercise of legislation affecting to bind natives. The Consul-General has, in pursuance of the Brussels Act, made Regulations for the registration of native vessels flying the British flag, and for the conduct of persons on board such vessels.

This and any future legislation of the kind ought to be duly grounded upon authority of an Order in Council; and this it is proposed to supply by Article 2 (2).

It is desirable, I submit, that the Law Officers should be requested to advise whether the views here expressed with respect to the two questions above stated are correct.

Article 3. In the application of the Code of Criminal Procedure to Zanzibar, the Judicial Assistant is by Article 9 of the Order of 1884 to be deemed the Magistrate of the district, and the Consul-General the Sessions Judge. By Chapter XXXIII of the Code, the punitive powers of the former officer are limited to imprisonment for six months, or fine of 2,000 rupees, or both (section 446); those of the latter to imprisonment for a year or fine, or both (section 449).

Thus all cases of serious crime by European British subjects have to be remitted to the High Court of Bombay. Great delay is occasioned, and, there being no power to compel witnesses who are Zanzibar subjects to go to Bombay, serious miscarriage of justice has resulted.

This Article would have the effect of rendering European British subjects triable at Zanzibar under the same conditions as Indian and other British subjects.

It may be added that no such distinction between European and other British subjects appears in the Order in Council relating to Siam, nor, except in an unimportant particular, in that relating to Persia.

Article 4. The Order of 1884 (Article 4) provides for the appointment by the Secretary of State of a "Judicial Assistant." Before and until that Order came into force Mr. Cracknall was "Second Assistant to the Political Agent at Zanzibar," to which office he was appointed in 1881 by the Government of India. Since the Order of 1884 came into force he has acted as "Judicial Assistant," but it now transpires that he has never been so appointed by any Secretary of State. He could, of course, be now appointed, but as such an appointment would of itself suggest that he had been non judex for more than eight years, his past acts would require validation.

By this Article it is proposed to substitute the office of "Consular Judge" for that of "Judicial Assistant," and thus to provide for a new appointment of Mr. Cracknall. The change of title, with the abandonment of the word "Assistant," is also, perhaps, advisable on other grounds, viz., that the tendency of legislation is towards confining the Agent and Consul-General to political and administrative duty, and towards making the Judicial Department more independent of the Executive (see Article 6 of this draft Order).

Article 5. Recently a "Second Judicial Assistant" has been appointed to Zanzibar, but no provision has been made for the temporary appointment of a substitute in case of emergency.

The Article makes similar provision as is made in the case of the Judicial Assistant by Article 4 of the Order of 1884.

Article 6. This Article gives to the Consular Judge (Mr. Cracknall) the same criminal jurisdiction as the Consul-General has under the Order and the Code, and to the Assistant Judge (hitherto the Second Judicial Assistant) the criminal jurisdiction hitherto exclusively exercised by the Judicial Assistant.

Article 7. It has been questioned whether, on the construction of Article 2 of the Order of 1888, the expression "Treaty or Convention to which Her Majesty may be a party," may not, having regard to the context, mean a Treaty or Convention made with the Sultan of Zanzibar, or at least one to which he also is a party.

This Article is intended to set this doubt at rest, and to make it clear that the provision applies equally to International Conventions such as the Berlin and Brussels Acts.

The power to make Regulations in pursuance of a Treaty or Convention will necessarily be exercised subject to the limitations of Her Majesty's jurisdiction in Zanzibar.

II.—Africa Order.

Article 1. Short title and construction.

Article 2. See note to Article 2 of the draft Zanzibar Order. The small differences of language in the drafts are due to the different wording of the Principal Orders.

Having regard to Article 10 of the Principal Order, it does not seem necessary to apply the provision made in Article 2 (2) of the draft Order as to Zanzibar.

Article 3. See note to Article 7 of the draft Zanzibar Order.

7. The powers conferred upon the Consul-General by Article 2 of the Order of 1888 shall extend, and be deemed to have extended, to regulations for enforcing the observance of any Treaty, Convention, or International Agreement to which Her Majesty is, or may hereafter be, a party, whether the Sultan of Zanzibar is or is not a party thereto.

8. A copy of this Order shall forthwith be affixed and exhibited in the Public Office of the Consulate at Zanzibar, and the day on which it is so exhibited is herein referred to as the commencement of this Order, provided that any appointment authorized by this Order may be made at any time after its passing.

9. Save as by this Order provided, expressions used in this Order and in the Order of 1884 have the same meaning as in that Order.

No. 2.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Ripon.

[In Colonial Office letter of January 3, 1894.]

Royal Courts of Justice, November 21, 1893.

My Lord,

British South Africa Co.'s desire for extradition arrangements with adjacent States.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. E. Fairfield's letter of the 31st August last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to inform us that the British South Africa Company had expressed a wish, through the High Commissioner for South Africa, that extradition arrangements with the Orange Free State and the South African Republic, and with the adjacent Portuguese territories, might be made in respect of the territory within the Company's field of operations.

That that territory was within the limits of the Order in Council of the 9th May, 1891, and was under the protection of Her Majesty, though not part of Her Majesty's dominions.

That the British South Africa Company, at the same time, asked that the reciprocal surrender of criminals might be arranged for with the British Colonies in South Africa, but that no action appeared to be required in that respect, for, by the Order in Council of the 12th December, 1891, "The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881," had already been applied to the territory in question.

That Her Majesty's Government were willing that extradition arrangements should be made in respect to the territory in question with the foreign countries above mentioned if there was legal power to do so.

That the Foreign Office has pointed out that the Law Officers of the Crown had expressed the opinion that extradition arrangements applicable to British Protectorates, which were not British territory, could not properly be made without further legislation, and that they stated that that opinion of the Law Officers applied with at least equal force to British spheres of influence so far as regards the question of extradition.

L. O. R. 1888 (Conf. 5785), pp. 28 and 30.

That the Foreign Office called your Lordship's attention to the accompanying Reports of the late Law Officers, dated the 3rd and 14th March, 1888; and that Mr. Fairfield was to transmit copies of two letters, dated the 24th June and the 2nd August, 1893, which had since passed between the Departments.

That copies of the Law Officers' Reports mentioned in the Colonial Office letter of the 24th June were inclosed, together with a copy of the Order in Council of the 28th June, 1892, referred to in the Colonial Office letter, and a copy of the Commission, dated the 20th August, 1889, under which the High Commissioner for South Africa was empowered to transact in the Queen's name, and on her behalf, all business which might lawfully be transacted by him with the President or Representatives of the Republic of the Orange Free State, or of the South African Republic, or with the Representatives of any foreign Power, subject to such instructions as he might receive.

That Mr. Fairfield was, therefore, to request us to be good enough to consider those papers, and to advise your Lordship—

1. Whether we agreed with the opinions expressed by our predecessors in 1888 respecting extradition from Protectorates? If not, to what extent did we differ from those opinions, and for what reasons?

2. If we agreed with those opinions, whether it was possible, without a fresh Act of Parliament, to make extradition arrangements between the territory within the field of operation of the British South Africa Company and the foreign countries above named? Could the desired object be attained by Order in Council under "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890"?

3. If a fresh Act of Parliament was not required, whether the High Commissioner, if instructed so to do, had power under his Commission to enter into such arrangements, and to give legal effect to them by Proclamation under the Order in Council of the 9th May, 1891?

4. If not, what course should be pursued?

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

1. That we agree, in substance, with the Reports of our predecessors of the 3rd and 14th March, 1888; but, as regards the suggestion that facilities should be given for the arrest of foreigners within the Protectorate, we would observe that this course would, in effect, involve an assumption of territorial sovereignty.

2. We think any effective extradition arrangement would require the concurrence of all the Powers whose subjects are to be affected by it. In our opinion the desired object cannot be attained by Order in Council under "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890."

3. We think the High Commissioner has not the power suggested.

In our opinion the only effective course to pursue is that indicated in the second paragraph of this Report.

We have, &c.

No. 3.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquess of Ripon.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, March 18, 1893.

Labuan Ordinance. Sentences of imprisonment awarded in North Borneo.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Wingfield's letter of the 6th January last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to request us to favour you with our opinion upon the inclosed Ordinance which had been passed by the Governor of Labuan, who was also Governor of British North Borneo, "to enable sentences of imprisonment awarded in North Borneo to be carried into effect in the Colony."

That that Ordinance had been adapted from the Straits Settlements Ordinance No. 7 of 1885, which enabled sentences of imprisonment awarded to British subjects in the protected Malay States to be carried into effect in the Colony, but that it differed from the Straits Ordinance in not being confined in its application to British subjects.

That the draft of the Straits Ordinance was referred to the Law Officers of the Crown, and that Mr. Wingfield was to inclose a copy of their Report upon it. That in the draft so submitted the application of the Ordinance was not confined to British subjects, that limitation having been subsequently inserted by the direction of the Secretary of State.

That in the Charter of the British North Borneo Company reference was made to the contingency of Her Majesty, by Order in Council, making provision for the exercise of jurisdiction in North Borneo under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, but that no such Order had been made.

That copies of the Letters Patent constituting the office of Governor of Labuan and of the Charter of the British North Borneo Company were inclosed for reference.

That your Lordship would be glad to be advised whether, North Borneo being an independent State, though governed and administered by a British Company and under the protection of Great Britain, a law could be enacted by the Governor of Labuan, authorizing the imprisonment in that Colony of persons who had been sentenced by the Courts of North Borneo.

That Mr. Wingfield was to add that if such a law was within the competence of the Governor, your Lordship considered that there was no practical objection to it, North Borneo and Labuan being closely connected and being under the same Governor.

Having taken the matter into our consideration, we have the honour to

Report—

That the Law Officers in 1885, in the strictly analogous case of the Straits Settlements, advised that it was within the powers of the Legislature of the Straits Settlements to provide for the reception within their territory and the detention there of prisoners sentenced in native States.

The ground of the opinion seems to have been the presence within the jurisdiction of the persons to be affected by the legislation. We see no reason to differ, and are of opinion that a law may properly be enacted by the Governor of Labuan authorizing the imprisonment in that Colony of persons sentenced by the Courts of North Borneo who are delivered within the territory of Labuan to the authorities of the Colony; but we must add that no law enacted by the Governor of Labuan can justify the conveyance of prisoners from North Borneo to Labuan.

We have, &c.

JOHN RIGBY.

[LABUAN, 1ST OCTOBER, 1892.]

No. 1 of 1892.

An Ordinance to enable Sentences of Imprisonment awarded in North Borneo to be carried into effect in the Colony.

WHEREAS it is expedient to make provision for enabling sentences of imprisonment awarded in the State of North Borneo to be carried into effect in the Colony:

It is hereby enacted by the Governor of Labuan as follows:—

I. This Ordinance may be cited as "The North Borneo Prisoners Ordinance, 1892." Short Title.

II. In this Ordinance, unless the context otherwise requires, the following expressions have the following meanings, that is to say, "Governor," means the Governor of the Colony or any Acting or Deputy Governor. "Sentence of imprisonment," means any sentence involving confinement in a prison whether combined or not with labour, and includes a sentence awarded by way of commutation as well as an original sentence passed by the Court. "Criminal lunatic," means any person detained in custody by reason of his having been charged with an offence, and either found to have been insane at the time of such offence, or found, or certified, or otherwise lawfully proved to be unfit, on the ground of his insanity, to be tried for the same; and includes a person convicted of an offence and afterwards certified or otherwise lawfully proved to be insane. Interpretation.

III. Whenever, as regards a prisoner undergoing a sentence of imprisonment in North Borneo for any offence, the Government of North Borneo makes a representation in writing to the Governor that it is expedient that such prisoner should be removed to the Colony, there to undergo his sentence, or the residue thereof, and makes provision to the satisfaction of the Governor for the payment of all expenses which may be incurred by the Colony in the maintenance of or otherwise in relation to such prisoner, the Governor may by warrant under his hand direct such prisoner, when delivered up in the Colony by such Government as aforesaid, to be received into the custody of the persons named or described in such warrant, or some one or more of them, and to be held in custody and conveyed to the prison in such warrant mentioned, there to undergo his sentence, or the residue thereof, until discharged, and such warrant shall be forthwith executed according to the tenour thereof. Reception of prisoners.

IV. Every prisoner received in pursuance of this Ordinance shall, until he is discharged, be dealt with in the Colony in like manner as if his sentence had been duly awarded in the Colony, and shall be subject accordingly to all laws and regulations in force in the Colony; provided always that the Governor may at any time, with the consent of the Government of North Borneo, order such prisoner to be discharged, although the term of imprisonment to which he was sentenced has not expired. Dealing with received prisoner.

V. (i.) If a prisoner while in custody in pursuance of this Ordinance, or under a warrant issued in pursuance of this Ordinance, escapes by breach of prison or otherwise out of custody, he may be re-taken in the same manner as a person convicted of crime against the law of the Colony may be re-taken on an escape. Escape of prisoner from custody.

(ii.) A person guilty of the offence of so escaping, or of attempting so to escape, or of aiding, or attempting to aid, any such prisoner so to escape, shall be deemed to have committed an offence against the law of the Colony, and may be tried and punished accordingly.

VI. The Governor may order any prisoner, who under this Ordinance is undergoing his sentence in the Colony, to be returned for the purpose of undergoing the residue of his sentence to North Borneo, and may for that purpose by warrant under his hand direct such prisoner to be delivered into the custody of such person or persons as may in the opinion of the Governor be duly authorized by the Government of that State to receive him (which person or persons shall be named or described in the warrant) to be conveyed to such State, and such warrant shall be forthwith executed according to the tenour thereof. Return of prisoners.

VII. (i.) The provisions of this Ordinance shall apply to a criminal lunatic in like manner, so far as consistent with the tenour thereof, as they apply to a prisoner undergoing sentence of imprisonment. Application of Ordinance to criminal lunatics.

(ii.) Whenever a person, who being a criminal lunatic by reason of being unfit to be tried for an offence, is confined in the Colony under this Ordinance, has become sufficiently sane to be tried for such offence, the Governor may, for the purpose of his being returned to North Borneo by warrant under his hand, direct such person to be delivered into the custody of such person or persons as may, in the opinion of the Governor, be duly authorized by the Government of that State to receive him (which person or persons shall be named or described in the warrant), and such warrant shall be forthwith executed according to the tenour thereof.

VIII. Every warrant purporting to be issued in pursuance of this Ordinance and to be under the hand of the Governor shall be received in evidence in every Court of the Colony without further proof, and shall be evidence of the facts therein stated, and all acts done in pursuance of such warrant shall be deemed to have been authorized by law. Evidence of Act of Governor.

IX. The Governor may from time to time make, and when made revoke and vary, regulations for the purpose of carrying this Ordinance into effect. Power to make regulations.

Passed the Public Seal of the island, this 1st day of October, 1892.

No. 4.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received June 9.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, June 8, 1893.

Protection of Natives and Ships of British Protectorates and Spheres of Influence by H.M. Diplomatic and Consular R.R. abroad.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 21st March, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a letter of Mr. Richard B. Martin, M.P., in which he inquired whether a citizen of a British-protected state, e.g., British North Borneo, had a right to claim the services and protection of a British Consular officer, exactly as if he were a British subject, for himself and for a ship sailing under the British North Borneo flag.

That in connection with Mr. Martin's inquiry Sir Thomas Sanderson was also to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list.

That on the 7th November, 1881, a Royal Charter was granted to the British North Borneo Company.

That in 1888 separate Agreements were concluded by Her Majesty's Government with the British North Borneo Company, the Rajah of Sarawak, and the Sultan of Brunei, placing those States respectively under British protection.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to direct our especial attention to Articles 3 and 5 of the Agreement with the British North Borneo Company, the former of which provided for the conduct by Her Majesty's Government of the relations between the State of North Borneo and all foreign States, and the latter of which referred especially to commerce and shipping.

That on the 22nd November, 1890, an Order in Council was passed, but was not yet actually in operation, providing for the exercise of Her Majesty's extra-territorial jurisdiction within the dominions and territories of the Sultan of Brunei, but not in British North Borneo or Sarawak.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to call our especial attention to the definitions therein of the words "British subject," "foreigner," and "native."

That similar definitions of these words occurred in other recent Jurisdictional Orders in Council, such as "The Africa Order in Council, 1889."

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was also to inclose a Memorandum by the Legal Adviser to the Foreign Office, Mr. W. E. Davidson, Q.C., in which various points connected with the subject were discussed.

That the questions raised by Mr. Martin specifically in regard to British North Borneo were to be considered, also in relation to other foreign States under British protection, and were therefore to be decided upon general grounds of policy, as well as in regard to their particular application to British North Borneo; and our opinion was requested upon the following points:—

1. Whether a native of a foreign State under British protection is entitled—

(a.) To the general protection and assistance of Her Majesty's Diplomatic and Consular officers in foreign countries, excepting in his native country?

(b.) To be considered a British-protected person for the purposes of civil and criminal jurisdiction in countries other than his native country, where Her Majesty has extra-territorial jurisdiction?

That it was presumed that for all purposes such native was not to be deemed, or to be treated as, a British-protected person in his native country, but as a native thereof.

That a further aspect of the matter had moreover to be considered in relation to the position of "British spheres of influence" such as those recently constituted in Africa, which, although being neither British territory nor British Protectorates, properly so called, were still under the exclusive control of Great Britain, their foreign relations being moreover entirely conducted by Her Majesty's Government.

Upon this head our opinion was requested upon the following points:—

2. Is a native of a British sphere of influence, over which a British Protectorate has not been established, entitled—

(a.) To the general protection and assistance of Her Majesty's Diplomatic and Consular officers in foreign countries, excepting in his native country?

(b.) To be considered a British-protected person for the purposes of civil and criminal jurisdiction in countries, other than his native country, where Her Majesty has extra-territorial jurisdiction?

That in this case also it was presumed that for all purposes such native was not to be deemed to be, or treated as, a British-protected person in his native country, but as a native thereof.

In regard to the question of the protection to be afforded to ships owned by a native of, or flying the recognized merchant flag, if any, of such British-protected States, or British sphere of influence, our opinion was requested on the following point:—

3. Are such ships entitled to the assistance and protection, and if so, to what extent, of Her Majesty's Diplomatic and Consular officers abroad.

A Memorandum was inclosed dealing with the history of the flags which the various vessels belonging to the British North Borneo Company are entitled to fly under the Admiralty Warrant.

Sir Thomas Sanderson further stated that it would be observed that the privileges conferred by this Warrant were entirely confined to vessels owned by the Company, and did not purport to be extended to vessels owned by natives of the State of North Borneo in their private capacities.

That the case of such vessels had not until now presented itself for practical consideration, and was, as appeared to your Lordship, entirely untouched in the correspondence.

That the Foreign Office had, moreover, no other information or precedents at its disposal which appeared to bear even indirectly upon the general point submitted in Question 3, which it therefore seemed necessary to treat by reference to first principles alone.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion,—

1. A native of a foreign State under British protection, where the conduct of the foreign relations of the protected State is (as in the case of North Borneo) under the control of Her Majesty's Government, may reasonably claim to be entitled, and Her Majesty's Government may extend to him, the right,—

(a.) To the general assistance and protection of Her Majesty's Diplomatic and Consular officers in foreign countries, excepting in his own native country, so far, and so far only, as the action of such officers is not founded either on British Statutes or Treaties between Her Majesty and the State in which the officers act, which refer only to British subjects. A native of a State under British protection cannot, so far as the application of such Statutes or Treaties is concerned, be considered to be a British subject. The Statutes and Treaties referred to cover so great a portion of the functions of the Consular officers in particular that their possible action in favour of a native of a British-protected State will almost be confined to a friendly and unauthoritative interference, and will hardly amount to jurisdiction.

(b.) To be considered a British-protected person for the purposes of civil and criminal jurisdiction in countries other than his native country where Her Majesty has, and exercises, extra-territorial jurisdiction, except so far as such jurisdiction depends upon Treaty or Capitulation referring only to British subjects.

2. The distinction for the present purpose between a British sphere of influence and a Protectorate consists mainly in the fact that the sphere of influence rests entirely upon Treaty arrangements between Great Britain and some foreign Power or Powers outside the sphere of influence.

(a.) and (b.). The answers already given with reference to a native of a State under British protection apply equally to the case of natives of a British sphere of influence, with the modification that Her Majesty's Government cannot, as of right, claim to represent such a native at all in the case of a question arising with any Power which has not by Treaty recognized the sphere of influence.

3. Ships flying the flag of a British-protected State whose foreign relations are intrusted to Her Majesty's Government may reasonably claim, and Her Majesty's Diplomatic and Consular Agents may extend to them, general assistance and protection, but where the right of interference of the agent is founded upon Statute or Treaty referring only to British ships, it cannot be extended to the ships of a protected State.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received July 27.)

[After reciting the following reference, the Law Officers report as on p 11:—]

Foreign Office to the Attorney-General.

(Confidential.)
My dear Sir Charles, Foreign Office, July 26, 1893.

Blockade of Rio. Non-recognition of by H.M. Govt. Prevention by H.M. Naval Forces of efficiency of against Brit. vessels.

LORD ROSEBERY desires me to send you the inclosed papers,* on which he is anxious to have the opinion of the Law Officers as quickly as possible.

The state of affairs at Rio de Janeiro is very unstable, and recently when the Admirals there were called upon by the Government to proceed to Rio Grande for the purpose of quelling an insurrection they are stated to have flatly declined.

On the 21st instant we suddenly received a very secret telegram from our Minister, Mr. Wyndham, stating that he had received intimation of an intention on the part of the superior officers of the navy to blockade the port of Rio de Janeiro, cut off all railway communication at the same time, and so force the population by starvation to rise against the present Government.

Lord Rosebery replied that we could not recognize a blockade instituted by persons not recognized as belligerents, that Mr. Wyndham should confer with his German colleague, who had received the same information, and communicate with the Senior British Naval Officer.

He at the same time consulted the German Government as to the course to be taken, but has, as yet, received no reply.

The Senior British Naval Officer now telegraphs from Rio that if an attempt is made to blockade the port he proposes to prevent the blockade becoming effective against British merchant-vessels, by force if necessary.

You will see by a note of Davidson's, annexed to these papers, that he considers that this action would be justified. But he suggests, and Lord Rosebery quite agrees, that we ought to be fortified by your opinion and that of the Solicitor-General.

I ought to add that, as far as we know, the insurrection does not at present exist at Rio de Janeiro. There is only one at Rio Grande, a great distance off. I presume it is intended that the insurrection and blockade should be simultaneous.

I am, &c.

* Mr. Wyndham, No. 8, Telegraphic, Very Secret, July 21; to ditto, No. 8, July 21; telegram from Senior Officer, South-east Coast of America, July 26; Mr. Davidson, July 26, 1893.

Report.

Until there are two recognized belligerent forces, and a state of war between them, no blockade intended to interfere with neutral vessels can legally be enforced.

We therefore think Lord Rosebery's telegram of the 21st July 1893, is correct, namely, that in the existing circumstances Her Majesty's Government cannot recognize the so-called blockade; and, further, we think the Senior British Naval Officer would be justified in resorting to force if necessary to prevent such blockade becoming effective against British merchant-vessels.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, September 22, 1893.

Revolution at Rio. Protection of goods in Brit. vessels by H.M. naval forces. Right of search of insurgent vessels.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Rosebery, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to questions arising out of the hostilities now being carried on at Rio de Janeiro between the Brazilian Government and the insurgent naval forces.

Mr. Wyndham, Her Majesty's Minister at Rio, inquires, in his telegram No. 21 of the 21st instant (Paper A), whether, as the legal Government of Brazil are powerless off the shore, Her Majesty's naval forces are entitled to protect merchandize and cattle brought into port in British vessels from ship to shore when discharged into Brazilian lighters.

In a later telegram, No. 23 (Paper B), he reports that the insurgent Admiral, having announced to the French Admiral that he would search all foreign merchandize placed in cargo-boats, was informed by a collective note from the Naval Commanders in Rio Harbour that they considered that he, not being a belligerent, had no right of search.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Rosebery with your opinion—

1. As to whether Her Majesty's vessels would be entitled to protect merchandize brought into port under the circumstances set forth in Paper (A); and

2. Whether the answer which the Naval Commanders returned to the insurgent Admiral (Paper B) was correct and justified by the circumstances of the case.

His Lordship would also be glad to receive any general observations which you may have to offer on this question.

I am, &c.

The Attorney-General to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received September 29.)

AS the matter presses, I answer the questions put, in the absence of the Solicitor-General. A formal Report will follow.

I answer both questions in the affirmative. I assume that the insurgents have not, de facto, established a Government. If so, they have no legal authority to enforce, and it becomes a question of the prudent exercise of might against might.

I suggest that all action should be the result of concert between the foreign Naval Commanders as far as possible.

The further telegram No. 24, just to hand, calls for no further observation. The insurgents have, no doubt, an interest in preventing the landing of munitions of war; but they have no status entitling them to prevent it.

The Naval Commanders must do what they judge prudent in the circumstances as they arise.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received October 14.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, October 13, 1893.

Revolution at Rio. Protection of goods in Brit. vessels by H. M. naval forces. Right of search of insurgent vessels.

WE were favoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Villiers Lister's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the accompanying papers relating to questions arising out of the hostilities now being carried on at Rio de Janeiro between the Brazilian Government and the insurgent naval forces.

That Mr. Wyndham, Her Majesty's Minister at Rio, had inquired in his telegram No. 21 of the 21st September whether, as the legal Government of Brazil were powerless off the shore, Her Majesty's naval forces were entitled to protect merchandize and cattle brought into port in British vessels from ship to shore when discharged into Brazilian lighters.

That we were to take the papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion—

1. As to whether Her Majesty's vessels would be entitled to protect merchandize brought into port under the circumstances above set forth.

2. Whether the answer which the Naval Commanders returned to the insurgent Admiral was correct and justified by the circumstances of the case. That your Lordship would also be glad to receive any general observations which we might have to offer on this question.

We have also been favoured with a copy of a further telegram (No. 24) from Her Majesty's Minister at Rio de Janeiro respecting the right of searching lighters containing foreign merchandize which is claimed by the insurgent Admiral.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That we answer both questions in the affirmative. We assume that the insurgents have not de facto established a Government. If so, they have no legal authority to enforce, and it becomes a question of the prudent exercise of might against might.

We suggest that all action should be the result of concert between the foreign Naval Commanders as far as possible.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received November 24.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, November 23, 1893.

Steps to prevent bombardment of Rio and to protect lives and property of British subjects.

That such despatch recorded the steps taken by the British, French, Italian, and Portuguese Representatives and Naval Officers respectively to prevent the bombardment of the above-mentioned city, set forth their communications with the Brazilian Government on the subject, and inclosed correspondence which had passed with Admiral de Mello, the Commander of the insurgent fleet.

That your Lordship, as at present advised, was disposed to consider the action taken by Mr. Wyndham in order to protect the lives and property of British subjects as judicious, but, before formally expressing approval of it, your Lordship desired to be informed whether we agreed with this view, and also to be favoured with such general observations as we might have to offer from a legal standpoint upon the various matters dealt with in the despatch.

There was also transmitted to us a copy of the telegraphic correspondence which had recently passed with Her Majesty's Minister; copies of the original decyphers of these telegrams were also inclosed in a separate bundle.

We were also favoured with Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 6th instant, inclosing copies of two letters from the Admiralty, dated respectively the 25th and 26th October, covering Reports from Captain Lang, dated respectively the 2nd October and the 22nd September, 1893.

We were further favoured with Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 15th instant, inclosing a further letter from the Admiralty of the 8th instant, covering Captain Lang's Report of the 8th October.

We have also been further favoured with Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 21st instant, inclosing copies of further despatches from Mr. Wyndham regarding the action taken by himself and Captain Lang to prevent the city of Rio de Janeiro being fired upon by the insurgents.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the action taken by Mr. Wyndham in order to protect the lives and property of British subjects has been judicious, and in accordance with international law.

We understand that the principles which have been acted upon are as follows:—

That foreign ships of war would not be justified, under the circumstances stated, in preventing the insurgents from firing on batteries or other posts such as the Arsenal established in Rio for the purposes of attack on the insurgent fleet.

That British Naval Commanders should protect British goods, whether in Brazilian lighters or not, from interference by insurgent forces.

That the insurgents have no right to interfere with British vessels which have on board arms and ammunition consigned to an English firm for the use of the Government of Brazil.

That British ships in Brazilian territorial waters are not exempt from Brazilian jurisdiction, and that persons on board may be arrested for offences committed on shore, in respect of which they might have been arrested on shore.

We concur in the principles so laid down, but would observe that offences committed on British ships within territorial waters would, strictly speaking, subject the offender to arrest as if the offence had been committed on shore.

With reference to the despatches from Captain Lang and Mr. Wyndham, and their inclosures, we have only to observe that the communication of the 1st October made by the Commanding Officers to Admiral de Mello, though a departure from the strict policy of non-interference, seems to have been accompanied by an equal amount of pressure on the Brazilian Government to abstain from treating Rio as a basis of attack on the insurgents, and has been justified by its success.

We note that (in accordance with your Lordship's instructions) Mr. Wyndham in the steps taken acted in concert with the Representatives of the other Powers principally concerned.

We have, &c.

BURMAH.

[India Office.]

No. 9.

Case for the Opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown.

Jurisdiction of Burmah Govt. over waters between mainland and Mergui Archipelago.

THE facts on which the opinion of the Law Officers is requested appear from the accompanying papers, but they may perhaps be usefully summarized as follows:—

The Mergui Archipelago consists of a large number of islands lying for many miles along the coast of Burmah. Their distances from the shore and from one another are in many cases considerable, far over 3 or 6 miles. In the belt lying between the outermost islands and the mainland of Burmah lie pearl oyster banks.

The Government of Burmah in 1891 granted a concession of the exclusive right of fishing on these banks. The validity of this grant was disputed by Messrs. Moylan and Eddis, acting as the legal advisers of a gentleman from Australia who desired to fish on the banks, and claimed the right to do so, alleging them to be in the high seas outside the territorial waters.

It is claimed, and it may for the present purpose be assumed, that the islands themselves are British territory, and subject to the Government of Burmah. That Government contends that its jurisdiction extends to a distance of 3 miles beyond the outer edge of the archipelago, and includes all waters lying between that line and the mainland, and on this ground they seek to support their concession of an exclusive right of fishing.

The Government of India has been advised that territorial waters extend only to a distance of 3 miles from the mainland, and to a distance of 3 miles round each of the islands, together with any waters lying inter fauces terræ, and that such a concession as that granted could only be valid within those waters.

The Secretary of State is desirous of obtaining the opinion of the Law Officers upon the question—

Whether the jurisdiction of the Government of Burmah and its power to grant exclusive fishing right extends over all waters lying between the mainland of Burmah and a distance of 3 miles beyond the outer edge of the Mergui Archipelago, or whether it is limited in the manner stated by the legal advisers of the Government of India, or otherwise.

Opinion of the Law Officers.

The extent of territorial jurisdiction is correctly stated in paragraph (a) in the opinion of the Advocate-General and Standing Counsel of the 26th January, 1893. It follows that the Government have no power to grant exclusive fishery rights except in waters within the extent of jurisdiction so described.

It would be possible to legislate so as to bind British subjects beyond those limits, but it would not be possible to bind foreigners, or to exclude them.

The Australian Pearl Fishery Acts are limited in their operation to British subjects, and we assume that, in the case of the pearl fisheries in the Mergui Archipelago, there has not been, as in the case of the Ceylon fisheries, an immemorial claim to the pearl oyster fishery beyond the usual territorial waters asserted by successive Rulers, and acquiesced in.

Annex.

The Solicitor to the Government of India to the Government of India, Revenue and Agricultural Department.

Fort William, January 31, 1893.

I HAVE the honour to forward herewith a copy of the case submitted to the Honourable the Advocate-General and the Standing Counsel to Government, and their joint opinion thereon.

Case submitted to the Honourable the Advocate-General and the Standing Counsel, for Opinion.

The Solicitor to the Government of India forwards herewith a letter from the Government of India, Revenue and Agricultural Department, of the 4th instant, and its annexures, and requests that the Honourable the Advocate-General and the Standing Counsel will favour that Government with an expression of their joint opinion on the question raised regarding the power of Government to regulate or control the pearl fisheries of Mergui.

The specific issues upon which the Government desire to be advised are as follows:—

(a.) Whether, assuming the islands of the Mergui Archipelago to be British territory, the British Government possesses territorial jurisdiction over the sea within the limits described in the last sentence of paragraph 2 of the Chief Commissioner's letter, dated the 28th October last, to Messrs. Moylan and Eddis, or any and what part thereof.

(b.) Whether, assuming an affirmative answer is given to the first question, the islands in question can, on the facts stated in the papers, be held to form part of British India, and, if so, whether they are or are not part of the territories under the administration of the Chief Commissioner of Burmah.

(c.) Whether, assuming an affirmative answer to be given to both the above questions, Government is entitled, consistently with the general principles of international law, to any exclusive right of fishing within the limits above described, and, if so, whether they are empowered to grant to any other person any such exclusive right either under "The Burmah Fisheries Act, 1875," or under any other enactment now in force, or otherwise.

(d.) Whether, assuming a negative answer to either of the first two questions, the Government is entitled to regulate or control in any and what manner the right of fishing within the limits above described, or any part thereof, and more particularly whether it is empowered to act in the way suggested in Messrs. Moylan and Eddis' letter, dated the 1st September last, to the Chief Commissioner, either under any enactment now in force, or otherwise.

(e.) If the Local Government is not at present empowered to regulate or control such right of fishing as aforesaid, whether the Governor-General in Council is competent, consistently with the principles of international law, to confer on it by legislation the requisite powers; if so, what would be the character of the legislation required for the purpose.

(f.) Counsel will also please advise the Government as to the propriety of the action taken by the Chief Commissioner in warning Mr. Loveridge that, if he proceeds to fish in the areas which have been leased by the Local Administration, he will be liable to be dealt with under section 7 of "The Burmah Fisheries Act, 1875."

Lastly, Government will also be glad to receive an expression of opinion on any other points which upon examination of the case may appear to the Law Officer to be of importance, and more especially as to the difference between territorial jurisdiction as against foreigners and rights of monopoly within that jurisdiction as against British subjects.

Printed correspondence bearing to some extent upon the case regarding the claim of the Government of Ceylon to regulate the pearl fisheries in the Gulf of Manaar is herewith sent.

Opinion of the Honourable the Advocate-General and the Standing Counsel to Government.

(a.) We are of opinion that the British Government possesses territorial jurisdiction over the sea within a belt or zone of 3 miles from the shores of the mainland of the Provinces of Yeh, Tavoy, Mergui, and Tenasserim, and of the islands appertaining thereto, including the Mergui Archipelago; as also over all bays, gulfs, and estuaries, inter fauces terræ, whether of such mainland or islands, but no further. Whatever may be the precise nature of the territorial jurisdiction exercised by a nation over such belt or zone, it is clear that it comprises the right to control or grant exclusive right of fishing therein, and that such right is one which is not only sanctioned by the positive law of nations, as laid down by the jurists and writers on international law (see Vattel's "Law of Nations," book i, chapter xxiii, sections 287 and 289; Wharton's "International Law," second English edition, sections 180 and 189; Kent's "Commentaries," vol. i, 29, and Manning's "Law of Nations," p. 119), but by Conventions and Treaties (per Cockburn, C.J., at p. 204 of the Queen v. Keyn, L. R., 2 Ex. Div., 63), and also by usage (per Cockburn, C.J., at p. 206 of the same case).

The origin and nature of this territorial jurisdiction have been fully discussed, not only by the publicists, but in the "Franconia" case (the Queen v. Keyn, L. R., 2 Ex. Div., 63) by all the greatest authorities amongst the English Judges. Cockburn, C.J., thus expresses himself:—

"It is true that from an early period the Kings of England, possessing more ships than their opposite neighbours, and being thence able to sweep the Channel, asserted the right of sovereignty over the narrow seas. . . . . Venice in like manner laid claim to the Adriatic, Genoa to the Ligurian Sea, Denmark to a portion of the North Sea. The Portuguese claimed to bar the ocean route to India and the Indian seas to the rest of the world, while Spain made the like assertion with respect to the West. All these vain and extravagant pretensions have long since given way to the influence of reason and common sense. If, indeed, the sovereignty thus asserted had a real existence, and could now be maintained, it would be, of course, independently of any question as to the 3-mile zone, conclusive of the present case. But the claim to such sovereignty, at all times unfounded, has long since been abandoned."

(b.) Answering the preceding question with such limitations as are above expressed, we are of opinion that the islands in question do form a part of British India. In paragraph 3 of the letter referred to in the previous question, it is stated that the Provinces of Yeh, Tavoy, Mergui, and Tenasserim, with the islands and dependencies thereunto appertaining, were by Treaty of the 11th April, 1826, ceded by His Majesty the King of Ava to the East India Company. Such being the case, these provinces, islands, and dependencies became, by section 1 of 21 & 22 Vict., cap. 106, vested in Her Majesty the Queen, and formed part of India within the meaning of that Act. In the absence of any materials, other than the statements contained in paragraph 3 of the letter already referred to, we are unable to go further than to express our opinion that the Province of Tenasserim, and it may be the islands adjacent and appertaining thereto, are part of the territories under the administration of the Chief Commissioner of Burmah. The fact that the Local Government has exercised some degree of authority over the islands does not, in our opinion, suffice, per se, to show that such islands form part of Burmah.

(c.) We are of opinion that according to the principles of international law, the subjects of a State are entitled to the exclusive right of fishing within the limited belt or zone above mentioned. This being so, and it having been held by the Courts in India that the sea and its subjacent soil within the ordinary territorial limits around British India are vested in the Sovereign, but that the use of it for the purposes of navigation and fishing belongs to her subjects communis juris, subject to the right of the Crown to appropriate the same (see Reg. v. Kestya Raum, 8 Bom., H. C. Rep., 63, and Baban Mayacha v. Naga Shravacha and others, I. L. R., 2, Bombay, 19), we are of opinion that the Government is entitled to grant exclusive right of fishing under "The Burmah Fishery Act, 1875," within the territories for the time being under the administration of the Chief Commissioner of British Burmah, and under the general law in any part of British India beyond such territories, but in both cases without prejudice to or in derogation of any express grant of right to fish heretofore made by the British Government.

(d.) We are of opinion that the Government is entitled to regulate or control the right of fishing within such limited belt or zone in respect of territories to which the provisions of Act VII of 1875 apply; but that the Government is not empowered under any existing enactment to act in the way suggested in Messrs. Moylan and Eddis' letter, dated the 1st September, 1892, to the Chief Commissioner with respect to territorial waters not affected by that Act.

(e.) We are of opinion that the Governor-General in Council is competent, under 24 and 25 Vict., cap. 67, section 22, consistently with the principles of international law, to legislate with respect to rights of fishing within such territorial waters as are above indicated—not only as regards British subjects, but also as regards foreigners. In this respect the Governor-General in Council appears to us to have with respect to British India, under the Statute lastly above referred to, the powers which the Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland possesses with respect to the dominions of Her Majesty. Dealing with the extent and limit of those powers last mentioned, Dr. Lushington observes in the case of the Zollveren, Swabey's Admiralty Reports, p. 90: "The power of this country is to legislate for its subjects all the world over, and as to foreigners within its jurisdiction, but no further," cited by Cockburn, C.J., at p. 160 of L. R., 2 Ex. Div.), and in the case of the "Annapolis," 1 Lushington, p. 306: "The Parliament of Great Britain, it is true, has not, according to the principles of public law, any authority to legislate for foreign vessels on the high seas or for foreigners out of the limits of British jurisdiction, though, if Parliament though fit so to do, this Court, in its instance jurisdiction at least, would be bound to obey. In cases admitting of doubt, the presumption would be that Parliament intended to legislate without violating any rule of international law, and the construction has been accordingly. Within, however, British jurisdiction, namely, within British territory, and at sea within 3 miles from the coast, and within all British rivers inter fauces, and over foreigners in British ships, I apprehend that the British Parliament has an undoubted right to legislate. I am further of opinion that Parliament has a perfect right to say to foreign ships that they shall not, without complying with British law, enter into British ports, and that if they enter they shall be subject to penalties, unless they have previously complied with the requisitions ordained by the British Parliament; whether those requirements be, as in former times, certificates of origin or clearances of any description from a foreign port, or clean bills of health, or the taking on board a pilot at any place in or out of British jurisdiction before entering British waters." As regards the character of the legislation required, the above-quoted observations of Dr. Lushington in the case of the "Annapolis" indicate in several most important particulars the nature and extent of the power which the Legislature may assume in this matter. These powers it will be observed extend not only to the regulating and controlling of fishing by British subjects or foreigners within territorial waters, but also to the securing compliance by British or foreign ships entering such waters or British Indian ports, even when engaged in fishing beyond such waters, with all such rules and regulations as may be laid down to be observed by persons on board such ships.

(f.) We are of opinion that no proceedings should be taken under section 7 of "The Burmah Fisheries Act, 1875," against Mr. Loveridge, seeing that, even if he were liable to a conviction, it would be undesirable to raise questions of such importance and difficulty in a Criminal Court. Moreover, it appears from the letter written by Messrs. Moylan and Eddis to the Chief Commissioner of British Burmah, dated the 30th August, 1892, that Mr. Loveridge is not disposed to question the right of the Government within the 3-mile limit, but challenges their right outside the 3-mile limit, and for the reasons above expressed we are of opinion that this contention on his part is sound.

Lastly, we have already dealt with the questions as to territorial jurisdiction over foreigners and exclusive rights of fishing within that jurisdiction in our answers to questions (e) and (c).

No. 10. [Colonial Office.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Ripon.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, January 13, 1893.

Civil war in Chile. Prohibition of exportation of arms, &c., from the Colonies.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bramston's letter of the 11th November last, stating that in the year 1891 the Governor of Queensland, by the advice of his Ministers, and at the request of the Consul-General for Chile, issued a Proclamation prohibiting, during the civil war in Chile, the export of arms and ammunition to Chilean ports from Queensland except for the Government of Chile.

That it was unnecessary to trouble us with a copy of the Proclamation or with the Queensland Act: that the section under which the Proclamation was issued was, however, practically identical with section 138 of "The Imperial Customs Consolidation Act, 1876." But that a doubt having been raised by the Foreign Office as to the legality of the Proclamation, our predecessors were consulted on the point, and that Mr. Bramston was to inclose a copy of their Report, dated the 19th August, 1891, advising that the Proclamation was not valid in law.

L.O.R., 1891 (Conf. 6207), pp. 37 and 40 A.

That the purport of that Report was telegraphed to the Colony, and that the accompanying letter, dated the 14th September, 1891, from the Chief Secretary to the Governor was subsequently received and referred to the Law Officers who reported thereon on the 18th December, 1891.

That correspondence then followed between the Colonial and Foreign Offices, of which copies were inclosed. That your Lordship thought that the matter would be sufficiently explained without encumbering the case with the inclosures to the Colonial Office letter of the 23rd June, 1892. That the other letters of the correspondence were:—

Foreign Office, 3rd September, 1892 (inclosure); Colonial Office, 16th September, 1892; Foreign Office, 28th September, 1892.

That the Law Officers' Reports, mentioned in the inclosure to the Foreign Office letter of the 3rd September, were also inclosed, viz.:—

L. O. R., 1870 (Conf. 3660), p. 130. L. O. R., 1874 (Conf. 4331), p. 111. L. O. R., 1885 (Conf. 5246), pp. 86 and 89.

14th October, 1870; 7th January, 1874; 18th February, 1885; 2nd April, 1885; 16th April, 1885; as well as a Law Officers' Report of 20th May, 1873, which was not mentioned in that letter, as it was made to the Colonial Office.

That your Lordship would be obliged if we would be good enough to consider the papers, and favour Her Majesty's Government with our advice as to what general rules might, having regard to the legal considerations involved, safely and properly be laid down for the Colonies respecting the prohibition of the exportation of arms.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That in our opinion the following general rules may, having regard to the legal considerations involved, be safely and properly laid down for the Colonies respecting the prohibition of the exportation of arms and similar goods:—

1. It is not one of the duties of neutrality to prohibit the export of arms or other contraband of war, and nothing is to be done on the ground, or as a recognition, of any supposed duty to that effect.

2. In the absence of any Treaty obligations, prohibition should be considered as a question of domestic policy, and founded on reasons concerning the safety and well-being of the Colony.

3. Under special circumstances, such as the geographical position and relations of a Colony, or Treaty obligations binding upon the Colony, it may be right to take into consideration the probable effect of exportation outside the Colony, such as the risk of creating, or aggravating, disturbances in neighbouring countries, or of involving the Colony in disputes with other countries. Such considerations must, however, be founded on the interests of the Colony and any Treaty obligation binding upon it, and not on any supposed rule of international law.

4. Prohibition must be general, and without discrimination as to persons or places, except in so far as partial prohibition may be authorized by the express language of the enactment relied upon.

DRAFT ORDER IN COUNCIL.

WHEREAS on the 30th day of August, 1890, a Convention was made at London between Her Majesty and the President of the French Republic respecting the postal service between France and the French possessions and the United Kingdom and British possessions;

And whereas the ratifications of the said Convention were exchanged on the 23rd March, 1891;

And whereas by "The Mail Ships (France) Order in Council, 1892," "The Mail Ships Act, 1891," is applied during the continuance of that Order as regards the said Convention, and as regards the French Republic and the postal service and mail-ships described in that Convention;

And whereas by section 8 of the said Act it is provided that an Order in Council may, for the purpose of a Convention with a foreign State, apply the said Act, subject to any exceptions or modifications not inconsistent with the provisions of the said Act, to any British possession, and that the said Act, when so applied, should, subject to those exceptions and modifications, and subject as thereinafter mentioned, have effect as if it were re-enacted, with the substitution of such British possession for the United Kingdom, provided that, before it should be applied to any British possession named in the Schedule to the said Act, the Government of such possession should have adhered to the Convention;

And whereas the Government of India, one of the possessions named in the Schedule to the said Act, has adhered to the said Convention, and it is expedient that the said Act should, for the purposes of the said Convention, apply to India, subject to the exceptions and modifications in this Order contained:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers in this behalf by "The Mail Ships Act, 1891," or otherwise in Her Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. "The Mail Ships Act, 1891," shall for the purpose of the said Convention apply to India, subject to the provisions of section 8 of the said Act, and also to the exceptions and modifications following, that is to say:

(1.) The expression "officer of Customs" means an officer of Customs authorized under "The Sea Customs Act, 1878," or other Law for the time being regulating sea customs in India.

(2.) The provisions of the said Act as to the amount of fines shall be read as if the amounts were stated in rupees at the rate of 10 rupees to the pound sterling.

(3.) In lieu of sub-sections 1 and 2 of section 7 of the said Act, the following provisions shall be substituted, that is to say:

Every fine under the said Act, if exceeding 500 rupees, may be recovered by suit in the principal Civil Court having original jurisdiction in the place in which the person liable to the fine may be found.

A fine under the said Act not exceeding 500 rupees may be recovered by criminal proceedings before a Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the First Class, having jurisdiction in the place in which the person liable to the fine may be found, provided that (a) every offence for which a fine exceeding 500 rupees can be imposed under the said Act may be prosecuted before such Magistrate, but the fine imposed on such conviction shall not exceed 500 rupees; and (b) in every case of conviction and fine by a Magistrate there shall be an appeal to the same Court as in other cases of fine of such amount as, under the Law for the time being in force in India, to give a right of appeal.

Every Court, whether of original or appellate jurisdiction, may reduce the amount of any fine.

(4.) The regulations required to be made under sub-section 4 of section 7 of the said Act by the Commissioners of Customs, with the consent of the Treasury, shall in India be made by the Governor-General in Council.

(5.) Section 5 of the said Act, so far as relates to the Commissioners of Customs, shall not apply to India.

2. The said Act shall apply as regards any public ship of the French Republic when employed as a mail-ship in the cases authorized by Article V of the said Convention.

3. This Order may be cited as "The Mail Ships (France) Order in Council (India), 1893."

And the Right Honourable the Earl of Rosebery, K.G., and the Right Honourable the Earl of Kimberley, K.G., two of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, are to give the necessary directions herein as to them may respectively appertain.

Newfoundland. Customs duties on goods imported for French fishermen in Brit. ships.

WE were favoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 29th June, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the action taken by the Customs authorities of Newfoundland in levying customs duties on certain goods consigned from Nova Scotia to French citizens engaged in the fishery on the Treaty Shore of that island. That the circumstances would be found fully stated in the despatch from the Governor of Newfoundland dated the 3rd ultimo.

That it would be seen that the French Admiral commanding in Newfoundland waters had protested against the exaction of these duties as involving a violation of Treaty rights, on the ground that a tax upon fishing materials and provisions constituted an "interruption" by competition with the fishery of the French.

That, according to the practice which had hitherto obtained on the Treaty Shore, French fishermen had been allowed to land free of duty articles imported in French vessels and necessary to the exercise of their fishery.

That it appeared, however, in the present instance, that the goods were imported in a British vessel from a British Colony, and that the persons to whom they were consigned had arrived in the Colony fully equipped for the fishing season. That there was therefore reason to suppose that the articles in question were not imported to supply the bonâ fide needs of the fishermen in connection with their fishery, but were rather intended for sale or barter to the inhabitants generally, to the detriment of the Colonial revenue; and that, under these circumstances, the Colonial authorities had asked for the support of Her Majesty's Government in order to put a stop to the contraband trade which was springing up in the Colony, and of which the French fishing-rooms had become the centre.

That a summary of the previous correspondence on the extension of the Colonial Customs system to the Treaty Shore was inclosed for our fuller information, and that Sir Philip Currie was to request us to take it into our consideration, together with the other papers, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the action of the Government of Newfoundland in this matter might properly be supported.

We were also honoured with a letter from Sir Thomas Sanderson, of the 1st instant, transmitting to us further papers in the matter.

We were further honoured with Sir Thomas Sanderson's note, dated the 8th instant, inclosing the documents noted in the margin, and calling our special attention to the protests of the French Admiral.

We were also honoured with Sir Thomas Sanderson's further letter, dated the 12th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a letter from the Admiralty, inclosing a telegram from the Commodore at St. John's, in which he reported that the French Admiral had formally demanded the return of the goods laid under embargo, or of their estimated value; that this application had been refused by the Governor of Newfoundland, and that the French Admiral had suddenly left St. John's for St. Pierre in order to communicate with his Government on the subject.

That it would be seen from the Reports of the British Commodore that he appeared to consider that the stores seized were, at all events for the most part, really intended for the use of the vessels.

We have also the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Sir Thomas Sanderson's further letter of the 13th instant, transmitting a translation of a note from the French Chargé d'Affaires formally protesting on behalf of his Government against the proceedings of the Colonial authorities in this matter.

Sir Thomas Sanderson requested that we would take his communication into our immediate consideration, and that, in replying to the questions already submitted to us, we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to this protest of the French Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

1. That, in our opinion, in the existing circumstances the action of the Government of Newfoundland ought not to be supported.

It appears on the whole pretty clear that the goods in question were necessaries for the French fishing industry, and, looking to the fact that no exaction of duty has apparently ever previously been enforced in respect of such necessaries, and to the (unratified) Arrangement of the 14th November, 1885, which, in Article 16, contains provisions exempting such necessaries, we do not think the Government would be wise, without previous warning and negotiation, in insisting on the payment of the duties in question.

2. As to the protest of the French Government, we respectfully suggest that Her Majesty's Government should, in the first place, determine whether they intend to support the Newfoundland Government in the future, if they should depart from the previously pursued course of exemption, and, if so, they should so notify the French Chargé d'Affaires, but as to the recent action of the Newfoundland authorities, taken without notice, we do not think (as already stated) that it should be persisted in.

3. As to the right to exact duty on necessaries brought within Newfoundland or its territorial waters, we can only say that, apart from the unratified Agreement, and the course hitherto adopted (both facts of great importance, especially as affecting the policy to be pursued), we find nothing in the papers before us to warrant the French Government in the exemption they apparently claim as a right; but the matter is one which requires fuller consideration than we have yet been able to give to it.

We think, therefore, the right of exemption claimed should be denied, but it would, we think, be desirable if some method could be devised for definitely settling by arbitration this, amongst other disputed questions, which have arisen between Her Majesty's Government and that of France in reference to the Newfoundland coast.

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received September 5.)

Royal Courts of Justice, September 4, 1893.

My Lord,

Newfoundland. Customs duties on goods for French fishermen on Treaty Shore.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the matter again into our consideration, and inform your Lordship whether the arguments advanced in the Colonial Office letter of the 22nd July last, and the fresh information forwarded in that of the 27th of that month, induced us to modify in any way the views which we expressed in our Report of the 14th July last, and, if so, to what extent, and in what respects.

That, as regards our suggestion that the claim to exemption might be submitted to arbitration, Sir Thomas Sanderson was to observe that your Lordship, as then advised, would deprecate that course, since such a reference would appear to involve the sovereign rights of the British Crown in Newfoundland—a matter which could not properly be made a subject of arbitration; but that your Lordship would be glad to have the advantage of considering any further observations which we might offer upon that point.

We were also honoured with Sir Thomas Sanderson's further letter of the 10th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to inform us that the recent correspondence respecting the claim for customs duties made by the Newfoundland Government upon French subjects on the Treaty Shore had been communicated to Mr. W. E. Hall, who, as we were aware, had been selected as the Representative of Her Majesty's Government upon the proposed Tribunal of Arbitration on the questions connected with the lobster fishery.

That that gentleman had now furnished your Lordship with a Memorandum, a copy of which was inclosed for our information.

That it would be observed that Mr. Hall, inter alia, called attention to the correspondence which took place in 1888-89, when an attempt to levy customs duties was met by the French Government with a distinct claim to exemption as of right.

That that correspondence had been marked for convenience of reference in the accompanying volumes of Confidential Print, and that Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we should take those papers into our consideration in connection with the papers submitted to us in his letter of the 1st ultimo.

We were further honoured with a note, dated the 11th ultimo, from Sir Thomas Sanderson, transmitting two further communications which had been received at the Foreign Office respecting the matter in question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have again taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That we find nothing in the further papers submitted to us to induce us to modify in any way the views expressed by us in our Report of the 14th July last. We concur in the opinions set forth in Mr. Hall's Memorandum of the 3rd August, 1893.

With reference to the suggestion that arbitration of the question of exemption would involve the sovereign rights of the British Crown in Newfoundland, and would not, therefore, be a fit subject for arbitration, we would observe that sovereign rights are equally brought into question in the arbitration already agreed upon, and, indeed, must be involved in every claim of French subjects to exercise, as of right, special privileges in Newfoundland.

Memorandum by Mr. W. E. Hall on the Claim for Customs Duties made by the Newfoundland Government upon French Subjects on the Treaty Shore.

1. LOOKING at the difficulty which has lately arisen in Newfoundland from the point of view of Treaty rights, there is, I venture to think, no question that French fishermen cannot claim to import goods for any purpose without paying such duties as may be imposed upon them in common with British subjects in the Colony.

There is no language in the Treaty of Utrecht or in any subsequent Agreement which imports exemption from Customs—or any other—Laws.

Whatever the extent of French fishing rights may be, exemption from customs duties is not necessary for their reasonable enjoyment, provided that no discrimination is exercised as against French citizens. A right of exemption cannot therefore be deduced from the Treaties by way of necessary implication.

There is not even anything in the general position accorded by the Treaties to French fishermen which suggests that it was intended to exempt them from the operation of any ordinary Laws of general application. They are simply entitled to carry on their fishing without being interrupted by competition. Assuming that they have an exclusive right to catch and preserve fish and other marine animals upon a certain portion of the coast of Newfoundland, they are exactly in the situation which British subjects would occupy if a monopoly of a particular trade had been granted to them. They are individuals with no more and no fewer rights than any other individuals in like circumstances. That their privileges are secured to them by Treaty between the local Sovereign and the State to which they belong, instead of by direct grants to them as individuals, does not appear to me to affect the scope of those privileges, or the position of the individual relatively to the local Sovereign.

It is unnecessary to comment upon the extravagant assertions made by Admiral Sallandrouze de Lamornaix (Inclosure 4 in No. 1, 27th July), that the imposition of customs duties is in itself a "concurrence" within the meaning of the Treaties, since it does not appear in his protest (Inclosure 4 in No. 1, 8th July), to which Baron d'Estournelles refers in his communication of the 12th July (No. 1, 13th July). At the same time it may be observed that the latter professes to rely upon the Treaties, and it would be hard to find any language in them which more directly bears upon the case.

2. Although, as it appears to me, there can be no room for doubt upon the question of Treaty right, I am very sensible of the difficulty which is caused by tacit permission having been accorded for so long a time to import, free of duty, the various articles consumed or used by French fishermen and French lobster factory owners. The difficulty is the greater that permission has been continued, notwithstanding that an ineffectual attempt to levy duties, made in 1888, was followed by a distinct claim to exemption as of right being put forward in the broadest manner by the French Government (Inclosure in No. 290, Colonial Office, North America, No. 130). I am not aware whether the proposed reply to M. Waddington's note (Inclosure in No. 304, Colonial Office, North America, No. 130) was ever sent. If it was communicated to the French Government, the latter might reasonably expect that exemption should be continued as an interim measure until an agreement were come to on the basis of Article 16 of the Arrangement of 1885. Even apart from this note, it does not seem to me possible to support the recent action of the Newfoundland Government, taken as it was without notice. The goods imported seem to have been such as must have been frequently imported before—some of them every year—and the quantity was hardly so great as to suggest that they were imported for sale.

3. With regard to the future, I feel that I tread on very delicate ground. So far as I can appreciate existing circumstances, few courses seem to be open, and none are free from difficulty. But I notice the Colonial Office propose to urge the Government of Newfoundland to send home a Delegate authorized to discuss and arrange with Her Majesty's Government terms and conditions upon which the privilege hitherto accorded to the French may be continued. I assume that the Colonial Office have some reason to believe that the Newfoundland Government will not be disinclined to accede to this proposal. If this be the case, I venture to submit the following suggestions:—

During the greater part of the period which has elapsed since the Treaty of Utrecht no duties have of course been levied from any one, British or foreign, upon the Treaty Coast. From this long-continued practice French Governments may have come to believe honestly that free entry of materials and provisions for their fishermen forms part of the fishery customs. The French Government is at least certain to argue that it does; and had the old habits of fishery been retained, under which each ship brought out with it whatever was needed for the season, their position would be a very strong one. Since the Customs Laws have been extended to the Treaty Coast tacit exemption has been accorded. Possibly even French officers may at some time or other have been led to suppose (in the tenour of Sir T. O'Brien's despatch of the 19th March, 1889, No. 78 of Colonial Office, North America, No. 132) that the Newfoundland Government have had "no intention of claiming any duties" on "goods imported by the French for use in the bonâ fide prosecution of their rights of fishery." In such circumstances to insist upon the strict right of the Colony to levy duties upon all imported articles would be, I fear, to add another subject of contention to the sufficient number which already exist between Great Britain and France with respect to Newfoundland. Might it not be possible to concede, as a matter of grace or courtesy, that goods brought by, or imported to, French cod fishermen for their subsistence or for their own use in the fishery, shall not be chargeable with duty?

Articles introduced for the use of the lobster factories should, I submit, be differently treated. Any admission that the two industries of cod fishing and drying, and lobster catching and canning stand on the same footing not merely is an indirect admission of French lobster claims, but (what is far more serious) weakens the British position with reference to all the French inferential claims, and departs from that strict construction of the Treaties by which alone French encroachment can be restrained. The French Government might be reminded that lobster catching and preserving is not, in the view of Her Majesty's Government, a fishery within the meaning of the Treaty of Utrecht, and that therefore lobster catchers and preservers have not the moral claim to exceptional consideration that may be urged in favour of the cod fishermen. In the absence of notice on the part of the Newfoundland Government of intention to levy duties, it is reasonable that duties should not be claimed during the present season, and that the claim already made should not be persisted in; but the French lobster catchers and preservers should understand that next year they must be prepared to pay whatever duties the law imposes indifferently upon British subjects and foreigners. It might at the same time be intimated that the Newfoundland Government would be prepared to extend the same indulgence to the lobster industry as that granted to the cod fishery, if it be decided in arbitration that lobster catching and preserving are included in the French fishing privileges, and that in this case any duties levied before the arbitral decision is given would be refunded.

I do not flatter myself that the French Government would accept this solution as adequate; but I presume that it would confine itself to reiterating its claim to exemption as of right, and that the dangers of an acute form of controversy, and the risks of collision, might be avoided.

The above mode of dealing with the question is undoubtedly open to the objection that it provides no means for checking the contraband trade of which the French fishing stations have become the centre. I do not, however, see in what way contraband trade can be struck at the root; unless, on the one hand, the French Government and the French authorities co-operate honestly in its destruction, or, on the other, the Customs Laws are rigorously enforced. It is, I should suppose, utterly useless to hope for the former; the latter involves a danger of international complications disproportioned to the magnitude of the evil to be repressed. But I am inclined to think, upon the local conditions that persons practically acquainted with those conditions would be able without much difficulty to devise measures, without interfering with the principle of free entry, which would very greatly lessen, though they might not wholly extinguish, the contraband traffic.

N.B.—I have written without reference to the suggestion in No. 1 of the 20th June, that the Newfoundland Government does not intend to withdraw the exemption hitherto accorded to goods bonâ fide introduced for the purposes of the fisheries. Obviously the presence or absence of bona fides is a matter with respect to which the French and Colonial Governments would never find themselves in agreement.

No. 13 A.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Mr. Asquith.—(Received from Home Office February 27, 1893.)

[In reply to the following Home Office Memorandum, the Law Officers gave, on the 8th February, their opinion as on p. 24 C:—]

Memorandum by Mr. Pemberton.

Mr. Asquith,

Nationality of C. F. Priest.

THIS is an application for a certificate that C. F. Priest is of English nationality, and raises a question which I do not think has yet been fully considered.

The applicant's father was an Englishman, who cohabited in Paris (where he was for years, and still is domiciled) with a Swiss woman, of whom the applicant was born in Paris before wedlock. The parents have since married, and the applicant is, and always has been, a domiciled Frenchman. The Home Office is informed that, by the law of France, the applicant has been made legitimate by such subsequent marriage.

The question is whether he is entitled to a certificate of English (or perhaps more correctly British) nationality.

I believe that by the common law, nobody is a British subject unless born in the British dominions. The Act of Geo. III, cap. 21, conferred on children born out of the domain of the Crown, whose fathers were natural-born subjects of the Crown, the rights and privileges of natural-born subjects, and the Act of 13 Geo. III, cap. 21, extended those rights to grandchildren. Must these children and grandchildren be legitimate for the purposes of the Acts according to the law of England? The Acts containing no provisions as to residence in British dominions, and the rights being granted irrespective of the domicile of the grantees.

It has been the practice of the Home Office to hold that they must.

On the application made in 1883[*] (tempore Sir W. Harcourt) for a certificate of British origin under precisely similar circumstances to the present, it was decided that the English law must govern the question, and the application was refused. In the Minute deciding the question this passage occurs: "How can the Secretary of State, who is guided solely by English law, give to a bastard born out of Great Britain a certificate that his nationality by origin is that of a natural-born British subject by reason of his paternal grandfather having been a natural-born British subject. A bastard is nullius filius."

Sir Wm. Harcourt's Minute in this case also contains the following:—

"I am clearly of opinion that no certificate can be given in this case. If this man came to England, he would not be in law a British subject. How, then, can we certify him to be such?"

It may be remarked that though the questions appear to depend on the same considerations, the application was not for a certificate that the man was a British subject, but for a certificate of British origin.

In the letter of refusal the applicant was informed that having been born out of wedlock and on foreign soil, he was not by British law a British subject.

In 1885 the following question was submitted to the Law Officers[†] (Sir H. James and the present Lord Herschell) at the request of the Italian Government through the Foreign Office:—

"Is the illegitimate son of a British subject, such son being born out of Her Majesty's dominions, a British subject? If not, can British nationality be imparted to such son by the subsequent marriage of his parents, or the formal recognition or adoption of such son by his father?"

[*] Paper A 34072.

[†] Opinion No. 758.

1893

The answer was as follows:—

"The illegitimate son born out of Her Majesty's dominions of a British subject is not a British subject, and cannot acquire British nationality either by subsequent marriage of his parents, or by being formally recognized or adopted by his father."

This question as put could, perhaps, hardly have been answered in any other way; but though the answer may in terms cover the present case, it seems doubtful if it could have been intended so to be applied. The absolute illegitimacy of the applicant is assumed in the question which does not even state (nor does the case which gave rise to it) whether, by the law of the place where the applicant was domiciled, the subsequent marriage of the parents would have rendered the offspring legitimate.

If the father of the applicant in the question put had been Scotch by origin, and if, by the law of the place of his domicile, the subsequent marriage of his parents would have rendered him legitimate (as Scotch law would have done), could he have been said to have been illegitimate? No doubt he could not have inherited real estate in England; but does the question of nationality (not English only, but British) depend upon the same principle as the devolution of real estate in England only, even although the question is to be decided by the English Secretary of State. It would be very inconvenient, even if it were possible, for the Secretary of State to go into the question whether the origin of the father of an applicant born abroad was English or Scotch, and it would be desirable, if consistent with legal decisions, that in deciding claims to certificates of nationality some general principle should be laid down, and it is submitted that the question really depends on the law of the place of domicile of the claimant, or, in other words, on the status of the claimant in that place.

The case of Brook v. Brook (9 House of Lords Cases 193, and Jurist 1861, 423) seems to have much bearing on this point. It was a case of marriage with a deceased wife's sister, celebrated in Denmark (where such a marriage is legal) between British subjects not domiciled in Denmark, who had gone there for the express and sole purpose of marriage. The case was originally heard by Vice-Chancellor Stuart, with Judge Cresswell as Assessor. They decided against the validity of the marriage, and seemed to ground their decision on the fact that Lord Lyndhurst's Act was binding on all British subjects, and prevented the relation of husband and wife from subsisting between such subjects. In the House of Lords, where the Judgment was affirmed, Lord Campbell expressly repudiated this view of the case, pointing out that Lord Lyndhurst's Act would not affect the law of marriage in a Colony where such a marriage was legal. The note of the case, as reported in the Jurist, contains the following passage: "Although the lex loci contractûs quoad solemnitates determines the validity of the contract of marriage, the question whether the parties may enter into such a contract must depend upon the lex domicilii. The 5 & 6 Wm. IV, cap. 54, would not affect the law of marriage in any conquered Colony in which a different law prevailed. The Act is limited in its operation to the inhabitants of Great Britain and Ireland." It is submitted that on this principle the applicant in the present case, being domiciled in France, would be legitimate, and that in Brook v. Brook the marriage would have been held good by the House of Lords if the parties had been bonâ fide domiciled in Denmark.

But the case appears to be settled by "In re Goodman's trusts" (Law Journal Reports, 1881, 425). That was decided in the Court of Appeal, where Lords Justices Cotton and James (dissentiente Lush, Lord Justice) overruled a decision of Sir George Jessel, and held "that a child born in Holland before wedlock, but legitimized by subsequent marriage of her parents, domiciled in Holland at the time of her birth, was entitled to share, as one of the next-of-kin, in the personal estate of an intestate domiciled in England," and said: "The question of a person's legitimacy is a question of status to be determined by the law of the country where his parents are at his birth domiciled, and English law, except as to succession to real estate in England, recognizes and acts on the status as declared by the law of domicile."

All the previous cases on the subject are quoted and commented on in this last case, which would seem to settle the question, unless the nationality, created by the Acts of Geo. II & III, is subject to the same law of devolution as real estate in England, for which there is, so far as I know, no authority.

But as the practice of the Home Office has not been in accordance with this, I would suggest that the opinion of the Law Officers should be requested on the following points:—

1. Assuming the present applicant to have been rendered legitimate by the law of his own and his parents' domicile, is he entitled to a certificate of British nationality?

2. May the Home Office, in granting such certificates, treat for that purpose as legitimate all persons who are legitimate according to the law of the place of their domicile at the date of the application?

E. L. P.

Home Office, January 3, 1893.

Opinion.

1. We are of opinion that the applicant (on the assumption mentioned in the Minute to the Home Secretary that he has been legitimated by the subsequent marriage of the parents) is a British subject, and, therefore, a person to whom a certificate of nationality may be given.

The Statutes 4 Geo. II, cap. 21, and 13 Geo. III, cap. 21, confer British nationality on persons described as "children" of certain British subjects residing abroad. "Children" must be legitimate children according to English law, but English law recognizes the legitimacy for all purposes except succession to real estate in England of persons legitimated by the law of the father's domicile at the birth of the children and the marriage of the parents.

2. According to English authorities, the domicile of the applicant at the date of the application is unimportant. The domicile of the father, both at the applicant's birth and at the date of his marriage, must be in a country whose law permits the legitimation. The place of the birth or marriage is unimportant.

[The foregoing Memorandum by Mr. Pemberton and opinion of the Law Officers having been communicated to the Foreign Office for their information, and the Legal Adviser to that Department having written a Memorandum thereon, in which he dissented from the conclusions arrived at, the Home Office resubmitted the matter to the Law Officers upon Mr. Davidson's Memorandum, when the Law Officers reported as on p. 24 E.]

Memorandum by Mr. Davidson.

I am bound to say that I conceive this opinion not only to be opposed to the views of previous Law Officers, and to the doctrine which has hitherto been held here (and as, I believe, at the Home Office too), but also in conflict with an absolute decision of the House of Lords, to which, however, the attention of the present Law Officers was not directed in the case which was submitted to them by the Home Office.

I do not think we can accept the opinion as it stands, at any rate until we are clear that the Law Officers have considered various points, to which I will shortly proceed to advert, and have also had their attention specially called to the case of "Shedden v. Patrick and others," which is reported in 1 Macqueen's (House of Lords) Reports, p 535.

That case, as I understand it, lays down clearly that the subsequent marriage of Priest's parents, whatever its other consequences may have been, could not convert him into a British subject, a conclusion which, quite apart from the absolute authority of this decision of the highest legal Tribunal, can, as I venture to think, be satisfactorily established by à priori reasoning.

I venture to think that the case which was submitted to the Law Officers does not sufficiently clearly distinguish between legitimation and nationality of origin in this important respect, viz., that legitimation is determinable by relation back, while the latter is determinable absolutely at the moment of birth.

Subsequent marriage may confer legitimacy upon the issue, but it does not follow that it confers paternity upon the parent.

In the case of Shedden v. Patrick, in dealing with this question, Lord Brougham delivered himself as follows upon the matter:—

1893

"I can hardly call them by so slight a name as anomalies, the gross inconsistencies, the self-contradictions, the glaring absurdities, which must follow from holding that the retrospective doctrine imports paternity as well as legitimacy.

"It is sufficient to remind your Lordships of one of these, to which my noble and learned friend (Lord Cranworth) has adverted; that it would be giving the parent of the child—the putative father of the child—the power, by marrying his mother, of converting him from an alien or foreigner into a natural-born subject.

"If the child had done that which he had a perfect right to do at the time, namely, taken up arms against the English Crown before the marriage of his parents, it would follow from the doctrine in question that the marriage converted him from an alien enemy into a traitor to the Crown of this country, thereby making him guilty of high treason!"

This case of Shedden v. Patrick was decided by a very strong Court, who were unanimous. (The Law Lords who took part in the decision were Lord Cranworth (Lord Chancellor), Lord Brougham, and Lord St. Leonards.)

It originally came before the Scottish Courts and the House of Lords in 1803-08, but came before the latter Tribunal again in 1854 (the date of the Judgments which establish the principle mentioned), when it was sought to treat the original decision as a nullity on the ground that it had been obtained by fraud and collusion.

Therefore, although the actual decision was given in 1854, the facts upon which it proceeded, and by which the status and rights of Shedden were determinable, arose during the latter half of the last century (1764–1800 circa).

In those days an alien could not inherit real property either in England or Scotland (where the estate of "Roughwood" claimed by Shedden was situate), and it therefore then became material, although it would not be so now, to inquire whether he was a natural-born subject or not. If he had been a natural-born British subject he could, although illegitimate at birth, have inherited real property in Scotland ab intestato, provided that he had, by the subsequent marriage of his parents, become legitimated according to the then (and present) law of Scotland.

This of course both was and is otherwise in England, where the lex loci rei sitæ, which governs the devolution of real property, does not recognize the doctrine of legitimatio per subsequens matrimonium, and where consequently a natural-born British subject equally with an alien would, under the circumstances above mentioned, be excluded from the succession to realty ab intestato.

I have subjoined these explanations, some of which I have already made on a previous occasion, with regard to some correspondence in a case which occurred in 1891–92 (that of Mr. King Kiku Kingdon), as we have no report of the case of Shedden v. Patrick in the Office, and its bearing is not at once apparent without a statement of the material facts on which the decision depended.

It is stated in the "Home Office case" that "the applicant is, and always has been, a domiciled Frenchman."

If this be so, his mother must of course have been a domiciled Frenchwoman at the time of his birth, for at this moment of his life he was undisputedly illegitimate, and must therefore have followed the domicil of his mother. It is not primâ facie probable that a Swiss woman who had an illegitimate child in Paris would have elected to change her Swiss domicil of origin for a French domicil of choice; but I take it this must have been so in the present case.

There is one exception to the principle, that nobody is a British subject by the common law except he be born in the British dominions.

The exception is made in the case of the King's (or Queen's) sons, who are British subjects at common law even if born outside the Realm.

I have no doubt that the opinion of Sir H. James and Lord Herschell, which was given in 1885, not only covers in terms the present case, but was intended so to be applied.

I do not think it was material to state in the case which was submitted to them (and which was drafted by Sir Julian Pauncefote), "whether by the law of the place where the applicant was domiciled, the subsequent marriage of the parents would have rendered the offspring legitimate."

I have already indicated my reasons for this view, and think that they were probably shared by Sir Julian Pauncefote.

A reference, however, to the present Lord Chancellor would readily clear this point up. All I personally remember about the opinion is that I was present when it was written, and I believe wrote it at Sir H. James' dictation in his room at the House of Commons. The Solicitor-General was of course also there.

On the whole, I think it is pretty clear that this case ought to be recommitted to the Law Officers. I have written the above observations somewhat hurriedly from scraps I had prepared for the purpose of a more elaborate Memorandum.

But finding that Memorandum unwritten on this my last day of attendance at the Foreign Office before going on leave for some time, I have thought it better to submit my observations in a somewhat crude and ill-considered form rather than to postpone doing so until a couple of months hence.

The case of Shedden v. Patrick is quoted by the late Law Officers in their opinion on the case of Mr. King Kiku Kingdon, as being decisive of a somewhat analogous point which arose (with others) in that correspondence.

Their Report, which is dated the 18th February, 1892, is annexed.

I drew this reference, but had overlooked the case of Shedden v. Patrick in its bearing on this matter, but it will be seen from Minutes which I wrote (and, indeed, from the body of the reference indirectly), that I had arrived at the same conclusion by à priori reasoning.

Opinion.

We were clearly in error in our opinion of the 8th February, 1893. Having regard to the decision of the House of Lords in the case of Shedden v. Patrick (1 Macq. 535), which we regret to say we overlooked, we have no doubt that the law is as stated in the opinion of our predecessors.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received February 22.)

My Lord,

Royal Courts of Justice, February 21, 1893.

Brit. Treaty engagements as to duties on colonial and foreign wines.

WE were honoured with your Lorship's commands signified in Sir Edward Grey's letter of the 27th December last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to say that you will be glad to be favoured with our opinion as to the precise obligations of this country under Treaty engagements now in force with respect to the duty to be levied on colonial wines in relation to that which is levied on foreign wines."

That the Law Officers of the Crown reported on the 14th January, 1882:—

"We concur in the view that the most-favoured-nation clause does not affect the right of this country to extend to the produce of its Colonies more favourable treatment than it accords to the produce of foreign or third countries; and that the question of admitting colonial produce on more favourable terms than similar produce of foreign countries with which Great Britain has entered into most-favoured-nation stipulations is entirely a question of policy."

That accordingly, in that view of the case, the ordinary most-favoured-nation treatment clause in Commercial Treaties would not preclude Her Majesty's Government (if they thought fit) from granting preferential treatment as to import duties in favour of wines the product of British Colonies. That two Commercial Treaties now in force, however, contained engagements bearing upon British Colonies which went beyond the usual most-favoured-nation stipulations, namely, the Treaty with Belgium of the 23rd July, 1862, and the Treaty with the Zollverein of the 30th May, 1865. That the former—the Treaty with Belgium—seemed in its specific engagements (as far as the Colonies were concerned) simply to place Belgian products imported into the British Colonies on the same footing as British products. That if such was the case, that Treaty had no bearing on the point now submitted to us for our opinion.

That the obligations arising out of the Treaty of 1865 with the Zollverein might, however, be different, inasmuch as by Article VII the stipulations of the preceding Articles I to VI (which contained the whole provisions of the Treaty) were made applicable to the "Colonies and foreign possessions of Her Britannic Majesty," and that under that engagement the German Government might contend that German wines imported into the United Kingdom ought not to be charged higher or other duties than wines of similar strength or value imported into this country from British Colonies and foreign possessions.

That should that be the case, all countries, such for example as the wine-producing countries Austria-Hungary, Greece, Italy, and the United States, whose Commercial Treaties with Great Britain contained a most-favoured-nation Article in regard to customs duties, would be entitled to claim that their wines must be admitted into the United Kingdom on the same terms as German wines, and, therefore (while the existing Treaty with Germany remained in force), on the same terms as British colonial wines.

That Sir Edward Grey had accordingly the honour to request that we would take into our consideration the points placed before us in his letter, namely, whether the Treaties with Belgium of the 23rd July, 1862, and with the Zollverein of the 30th May, 1865, precluded this country from granting, while either, or both those Treaties remained in force, preferential treatment in regard to customs duties in favour of British colonial wines; and, if so, whether other nations would be entitled to claim, under the most-favoured-nation Article in Commercial Treaties, for their wines the same customs duties as might be levied on Belgian or German wines.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the Colonies cannot be treated as "other nations" or "third Powers" within the meaning either of the Belgian Treaty of 1862, or of the Zollverein Treaty of 1865.

1893

Article VII of the Zollverein Treaty of 1865, when carefully examined, has no operation as regards imports into the United Kingdom from the Colonies, though it does extend to imports into Colonies from the United Kingdom as well as to exports from the Colonies.

It follows that neither of the Treaties precludes this country, whilst it remains in force, from granting preferential treatment in regard to customs duties on importation into this country of British colonial wines.

The most-favoured-nation clause in other Treaties only places the Contracting Power in the same position (so far as the Belgian and Zollverein Treaties are concerned) as Belgium and the States of the Zollverein respectively, and cannot, therefore, give any right to the preferential treatment accorded with reference to imports of colonial wines into the United Kingdom, if, as a matter of policy, it is thought proper to concede such preferential treatment to the Colonies.

GERMANY.

No. 15.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received March 3.)

Royal Courts of Justice, March 1, 1893.

My Lord,

Emigration Bill before German Legislature. Complaints of British Shipping Companies.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 5th January, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to inform us that representations had been addressed to the Foreign Office by British Shipping Companies complaining of the provisions of a Bill which was before the German Legislature relative to German emigration.

That the correspondence on the subject had been referred to the Board of Trade; and that that Department considered that the stipulations of Article 2 of the Bill in question were contrary to the spirit, if not to the letter, of the Navigation Treaty of 1865 between this country and Prussia; and that they suggested that a communication on the subject should be made to the German Government.

That the clauses of the Bill which seemed more particularly to require consideration were the 3rd, 4th, 5th, and 6th, which related to the persons and associations to whom permission to undertake the conveyance of German emigrants might be granted. That the text of those clauses, in translation, was as follows:—

"Clause 3. The permission may only be granted—

"(a.) To German subjects who are domiciled and have their trading establishment within the Empire, and in the case of proposed emigration to extra-European countries (trans-oceanic conveyance) are established at a German seaport.

"(b.) To Corporations, registered Associations, and Joint-Stock Companies which have their seat (sitz) within the territory of the Empire, as also to such Share Companies as have their seat (sitz) within the Empire, and whose responsible Directors are all German subjects. In the case of proposed trans-oceanic conveyance of emigrants the permission will only be granted to such Corporations or Companies if they have their seat at a German seaport.

"Before the permission can be granted the applicant must deposit as caution-money a sum of not less than 30,000 marks (1,500*l*.), and in the case of trans-oceanic emigration must prove that he owns suitable vessels for the purpose.

"Clause 4. The permission shall only be granted for particular foreign countries, or parts of such, which must be declared in the licence, and in the case of trans-oceanic emigration for particular ports of embarcation, which must also be stated in the licence.

"Clause 5. The licences shall not be granted for trans-oceanic emigration which starts from a foreign port. The entrepreneur may, however, obtain permission to embark emigrants at foreign ports of call, if the vessels employed have started on their voyage from a German port.

"Clause 6. The licence shall not be granted for trans-oceanic conveyance which involves transshipment at a foreign port."

That a subsequent clause (13) provided that only German subjects could act as agents in emigration business in Germany.

That the Treaties between this country and Germany which should be considered in connection with those clauses of the German Bill were the Treaty of Navigation of the 16th August, 1865, and the Commercial Treaty of the 30th May, 1865.

L. O. R. 1891 (Conf. 6113) p. 44.

That the explanatory Memorandum presented to the German Parliament with the Bill set forth that the business of undertaking the conveyance of emigrants did not come within the Ordinances on trade and industry. That that position would appear to be in harmony with the opinion expressed in a Report by our predecessors in office of the 9th October, 1890, to the effect that the business of an "emigration agent" as defined by Italian law was not "commerce" within the meaning of the Commercial Treaty between this country and Italy of the 15th June, 1883. That it was thought, therefore, that the restriction to persons of German nationality of the right to undertake the conveyance of emigrants might not be at variance with the Commercial Treaty between this country and Germany in so far as the business in question was that of an emigration agent.

That the provision, however, of clause 3 of the Bill that permission to undertake to convey emigrants shall only be granted to persons, German subjects, who owned ships suited to that purpose (although under certain circumstances they appeared to be allowed to engage foreign vessels for that service) would seem to preclude British ship-owners from participating in the emigration traffic from German ports.

That the Ist Article of the Treaty of Navigation of the 16th August, 1865, placed, in Prussia, British vessels and their cargoes on the same footing as national vessels and their cargoes.

That a question therefore arose whether the conveyance of passengers was so far a matter of navigation as to enable a claim to be preferred that British vessels should be placed in that respect on the footing of German vessels.

L. O. R. 1891 (Conf. 6207), p. 51.

That it was to be borne in mind that our prececessors in office, in their Report of the 20th July, 1891, appeared to have held that the French Government could not properly restrict to French vessels the carrying of Mahommedan pilgrims from French ports; that the French Government had, however, declined to accept that view of the case.

That Sir T. V. Lister was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion (1) whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in addressing a representation to the German Government on any (and, if so, which) of the provisions of the Bill in question; and (2) should our answer to the first question be in the affirmative, on what grounds such a representation might, from a legal point of view, most advantageously be based?

That your Lordship would be glad, at the same time, to be favoured with any general observations on the subject which we thought might be of use to Her Majesty's Government in its discussion with the Government of Germany.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the effect of the legislation referred to will be to exclude British vessels from the business of carrying emigrants from German ports. We do not think that this is contrary to the provisions of the Treaty of Commerce of 1865 with the Zollverein, but that it is contrary to the provisions of the Treaty of Navigation with Prussia of the same year.

We are of opinion, therefore:—

1. That Her Majesty's Government would be justified in addressing a representation to the German Government on that clause of the Bill in question which provides that "in the case of trans-oceanic emigration" the applicant for a licence "must prove that he owns suitable vessels for the purpose."

2. That such representation may, from a legal point of view, most advantageously be placed on the ground that the clause referred to would have the effect of excluding

1893

British vessels, since they cannot be owned by German subjects, from all participation in the important business of trans-oceanic emigration, though German vessels touching at English ports are not so excluded.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received April 26.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, April 25, 1893.

Proposed Convention to extend Extradition Treaty with Germany of May 14, 1872, to German Protectorates and spheres of influence.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 18th March last, inclosing papers relating to the conclusion of a Convention between Great Britain and Germany for the purpose of extending the provisions of the Extradition Treaty of the 14th May, 1872, between the two High Contracting Parties so as to include the surrender from Her Majesty's dominions of persons accused of crimes committed in the German Protectorates and spheres of influence, and stating:—

That the draft Convention marked (A) had been communicated unofficially in 1891 to the German Ambassador for submission to his Government.

L. O. R. 1891. (Conf. 6207), p. 80.

That it had previously been amended by the Foreign Office in regard to certain particulars with the view to meet objections which had been taken to the draft by the then Law Officers (Sir R. Webster and Sir E. Clarke) in their Report of the 31st August, 1891.

That the German Ambassador in his note of the 13th February, 1893, had now submitted a counter-draft, to the terms whereof your Lordship did not perceive any objection, except in so far as the amendment indicated in red ink in the last Article appeared to be requisite.

That the Colonial, Home, and India Offices, in their respective letters of the 2nd, 8th, and 10th March, concurred in the terms of the counter-draft, with the above-mentioned amendment.

That with regard to the observations contained at the end of the Home Office letter of the 8th March Sir Thomas Sanderson was to state that it had been well understood already between the British and German Governments that the Convention was not intended to apply to British Protectorates or spheres of influence, but that that point would again be brought to the notice of the German Government if the counter-draft should be accepted by Her Majesty's Government.

That your Lordship requested our opinion as to whether the German counter-draft as amended in red ink might properly be accepted by Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That in our opinion there is no reason in law why the German counter-draft, of which paper (D) contains a translation, as amended in red ink,* may not properly be accepted by Her Majesty's Government.

It is for Her Majesty to determine for reasons of State what constitutes a dependency of any foreign State, and as the counter-draft is now drawn there will be in it a recognition that the places to which it is intended to apply are dependencies of Germany. This recognition appears to us to obviate the legal difficulty referred to in the Report of the Law Officers dated the 31st August, 1891.

GERMAN COUNTER-DRAFT.

(Translation.)

HIS Majesty the Emperor of Germany, King of Prussia, and Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India, considering it advisable to regulate by a Treaty the extradition of criminals between certain Dependencies of Germany and the territories of Her Britannic Majesty, have appointed as their Plenipotentiaries for this purpose:

His Majesty the Emperor of Germany, King of Prussia,

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India,

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective Full Powers, which were found to be in good and due form, have agreed to and concluded the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

The provisions of the Extradition Treaty, signed between Germany and Great Britain on the 14th May, 1872, shall be applicable to the Dependencies of Germany specified in the following Article, in such manner that persons in any of these Dependencies, and within the sphere of the authorities established there, who are accused, or who have been found guilty, of having committed a criminal act in the territories of Her Britannic Majesty, and persons in any of the aforesaid territories of Her Britannic Majesty who are accused, or who have been found guilty, of having committed a criminal act in any of the Dependencies of Germany, shall be mutually extradited in accordance with the provisions of the aforesaid Treaty, in so far as they are not modified by the present Treaty.

---

* Printed in italics.

1893

ARTICLE II.

For the purposes of the present Treaty, the following are the Dependencies of Germany referred to in Article I:—

The territories in Africa, in New Guinea, and in the Pacific Ocean which, by agreement between Germany and Great Britain, have been, or shall in future be, reserved to Germany as spheres of influence, Protectorates, or possessions.

ARTICLE III.

In place of Article III of the Extradition Treaty of the 14th May, 1872, it is hereby provided, with regard to the Dependencies of Germany, that there shall be no obligation to grant the extradition from those Dependencies of natives or of subjects of the Empire, and that the British authorities shall be under no obligation to grant the extradition of British subjects who have been accused or found guilty of a criminal act in those Dependencies.

ARTICLE IV.

There shall be no obligation to grant extradition from the Dependencies of Germany in cases where, before the extradition has taken place, such an application has been received for the extradition of the person in question to the territory of the German Empire as must, according to law, be complied with. The granting of extradition from a Dependency of Germany must always be considered as being on the condition that no such application shall have been received before the extradition is carried out. In case the extradition to Germany takes place, it shall, however, be open to the British Government to apply for the extradition of the person concerned from Germany, in accordance with the terms of the Treaty of the 14th May, 1872.

ARTICLE V.

Applications for extradition from Dependencies of Germany shall be made through the British Ambassador at Berlin, in accordance with paragraph 1 of Article VIII of the Treaty of the 14th May, 1872, but in the case of persons who are accused, or who have been found guilty, of criminal acts in the Colonies or foreign possessions of Her Britannic Majesty, the application for extradition may be made to the supreme authority of the Dependency of Germany from which the extradition of the persons in question is desired, by the senior Consular officer of Her Britannic Majesty in the Dependency in question, if there be a Consular officer therein, or, if there be none, then by the Governor or other supreme authority of the Colony or foreign possession of Her Britannic Majesty concerned. It shall, however, be open to the supreme authority of the Dependency of Germany to refer to the German Government in case of doubt whether the application for extradition should be complied with.

Applications for the extradition of criminals to one of the Dependencies of Germany shall be made in the manner provided in Article VIII, paragraph 1, and Article XV of the Treaty of the 14th May, 1872: in case, however, there should be no German Consular officer in the Colony or foreign possession of Her Britannic Majesty from which the extradition is desired, the application may be made by the Governor or other supreme authority of the Dependency of Germany which is concerned to the Governor or other supreme authority of the Colony or possession concerned.

ARTICLE VI.

The present Treaty shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged, as soon as possible.

The Treaty shall come into operation ten days after its publication in conformity with the forms prescribed by the laws of the High Contracting Parties, and shall remain in force as long as the Treaty of the 14th May, 1872, remains in force; that is, it shall terminate with the termination of that Treaty.

Extradition German Protectorates. Authentication of documents by

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, September 19, 1893.

WE were favoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our letter of the 25th April last, he was directed to transmit to us a translation of a note from the German Ambassador, submitting certain modifications desired by the German Government in the counter-draft of the proposed Convention for the extension of the Extradition Treaty of the 14th May, 1872, to German Protectorates.

That Count Hatzfeldt's note had been referred to the Colonial Office, Home Office, and India Office, and that Sir Thomas Sanderson was to inclose the replies received from those Departments.

That the amendments suggested by the German Government under the headings marked 1, 2, and 3 in Count Hatzfeldt's note appeared to be improvements in the wording of the Convention, and that your Lordship proposed to inform his Excellency that they were accepted by Her Majesty's Government.

That a difficulty had, however, arisen with regard to the suggestion as to the authentication of documents in cases where the extradition was arranged directly between the authorities of a German Dependency and a British Colony—section 15 of "The Extradition Act, 1870" requiring the papers to be "authenticated by the oath of some witness, or by being sealed with the official seal of the Minister of Justice or some other Minister of State."

That in the case now under consideration the most convenient arrangement would be to make the seal of the Governor of the Colony or Dependency a sufficient authentication, but that your Lordship had some doubt whether the words "Minister of State" in section 15 of the Extradition Act were wide enough to include the Governor of a Colony.

That your Lordship requested to be favoured with our opinion on this point, and at the same time to be furnished with any general observations which we might wish to offer on the subject.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, it cannot with safety be assumed that the words "Minister of State" in section 15 of the Extradition Act, or the corresponding words in Article XI of the Treaty of 1872, would include the Governor of a British Colony. Germany can, however, treat as valid any documents authenticated by the Governor of any British Colony or Dependency if there is no law in Germany making that illegal, and although, having regard to the terms of the Extradition Act, it would not be safe for Her Majesty by Treaty to undertake to accept any authentication not prescribed by section 12, yet the words "Minister of State" are to be interpreted with regard to the position of things not in Her Majesty's dominions, but in the foreign State referred to, and we think it would be proper to receive any authentication by a high officer having an official seal. We observe, however, that the documents may be authenticated by the oath of a witness, and we think this would include an affidavit, and if such an affidavit were made according to German law, and authenticated by the Governor or other chief officer of the German Dependency, we think that it might safely be accepted.

We think that no attempt should be made to alter the Treaty in this respect.

We have, &c.

Proposed Naturalization Convention with Italy.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us papers relating to the conclusion of a Convention relative to naturalization between Great Britain and Italy.

That in October of last year the Italian Ambassador at this Court had mentioned verbally the wish of his Government to conclude a Convention with Great Britain upon this subject on the lines of the existing Convention of 1870 between Great Britain and the United States.

That your Lordship, after having obtained the concurrence of Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department, expressed in a letter of the 27th October last, had informed the Italian Ambassador that Her Majesty's Government would be prepared to negotiate a Convention on the lines of the existing Convention between Great Britain and the United States of America, and that your Lordship, with this view, had caused a draft Convention to be prepared, which was on the 9th November referred to the Home, India, and Colonial Departments for consideration, previous to its submission to the Italian Government, as a basis of negotiation.

That Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department had made certain suggestions for the amendment of the draft Convention, the nature of which suggestions would be gathered from the inclosed correspondence.

That the draft Convention contained the amendments agreed upon in the correspondence between the Home and Foreign Offices.

That Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India concurred in the draft Convention without observations.

That Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, however, in the letter of the 23rd November last, raised the question, with reference to Article I of the draft Convention, whether, in the present state of the law, Her Majesty could properly enter into an undertaking that an Italian subject naturalized in one part of the British dominions, should be held to be a British subject for all purposes in all other parts of the Empire.

That it was pointed out in the Colonial Office letter that the Law Officers, in 1874, had reported that a certificate of naturalization granted in the United Kingdom had no effect in the Colonies, and that it was further observed that naturalization granted in a British Colony was (in view of section 16 of "The Naturalization Act, 1870") only applicable to that Colony.

That your Lordship had replied by pointing out that there were other Law Officers' Reports bearing on the same point, of which a list was given in the letter from the Foreign Office of the 19th January last, and had inquired whether, in view of these Reports, the Marquis of Ripon had any further observations to make.

That the letter from the Colonial Office of the 3rd March last contained the further observations requested.

That it would be noted that the question which was raised in this correspondence was one of great importance, and appeared to involve the consideration of the following points, upon which Sir T. V. Lister was especially to request our opinion:—

1. Was an alien naturalized in the United Kingdom under "The Naturalization Act, 1870," entitled to the status of a British subject

(a.) In Her Majesty's Colonies and foreign possessions?

(b.) In foreign countries, excepting in his own country of origin, under the circumstances contemplated in the last part of the 3rd paragraph of section 7 of the said Act of 1870?

2. What was the proper construction to be placed in that respect upon the existing Convention between Great Britain and the United States of 1870?

3. Might the draft Convention, as concurred in by the Home Department, be properly submitted to the Italian Government, as a basis of negotiation in its present shape; or should any, and if so what, amendments or limitations be made in it?

That Sir T. V. Lister was also to request that we would favour your Lordship with any general observations we might wish to offer in connection with the papers.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to—

Report—

We are unable to suggest any construction of section 7 of "The Naturalization Act, 1870," which will reconcile the earlier operative part of the Section with the qualification at the end.

It is to be observed that the first part of the Section deals affirmatively with the right of a naturalized alien within the United Kingdom, not denying him rights out of the United Kingdom, which appear to be conferred by necessary implication in the qualifying Clause. On the whole, then, while recognizing the great difficulty of the question, we are of opinion that the better construction is that:—

1. An alien naturalized in the United Kingdom under the Act of 1870, is entitled to the status of a British subject

(a.) In Her Majesty's Colonies and foreign possessions.

(b.) In foreign countries, except that in the country of which he was a subject before naturalization, he must satisfy the terms of the qualification.

2. We are further of opinion that this construction is involved in the terms of the Convention with the United States.

3. That the Convention concurred in by the Home Office cannot, without full explanation, properly be submitted to the Italian Government in its present shape as the basis of negotiation, but that it is not desirable that any substantial limitation should be made. The draft should be submitted with a full explanation of the difficulty, pointing out that, in practice, no difficulty has hitherto arisen with regard to the United States' Convention.

That having regard to the extreme difficulty of construing the existing Act, and our obligations to the United States, it is highly desirable that an attempt should be made by further legislation to set the matter on a clear basis, though there may be great difficulty in bringing about a complete remedy for the existing state of things which would require that naturalization in any Colony should be naturalization throughout Her Majesty's dominions.

Draft Convention.

HER Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India, and His Majesty the King of Italy, being desirous to regulate certain questions connected with the naturalization of subjects of either High Contracting Party within the dominions of the other, have resolved to conclude a Convention for that purpose, and have named as their Plenipotentiaries, that is to say:

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India,

And His Majesty the King of Italy,

Who, having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon and concluded the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

British subjects who have become, or shall become, and are naturalized voluntarily according to law within the dominions of His Majesty the King of Italy as Italian subjects, shall be held by Great Britain to be in all respects and for all purposes Italian subjects, and shall be treated as such by Great Britain, and shall cease to be British subjects.

Reciprocally, Italian subjects who have become, or shall become, and are naturalized voluntarily according to law within the dominions of Her Britannic Majesty, shall be held by Italy to be in all respects and for all purposes British subjects, and shall be treated as such by Italy, and shall cease to be Italian subjects.

ARTICLE II.

If any such British subject as aforesaid, naturalized within the dominions of His Majesty the King of Italy, should renew his residence within the dominions of Her Britannic Majesty, Her Majesty's Government may, on his own application, and on such conditions as that Government may think fit to impose, readmit him to the character and privileges of a British subject, and Italy shall not in that case claim him as an Italian subject on account of his former naturalization.

In the same manner, if any such Italian subject as aforesaid, naturalized within the dominions of Her Britannic Majesty, should renew his residence within the dominions of His Majesty the King of Italy, the Italian Government may, on his own application, and on such conditions as that Government may think fit to impose, readmit him to the character and privileges of an Italian subject, and Great Britain shall not in that case claim him as a British subject on account of his former naturalization.

ARTICLE III.

The present Convention shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at as soon as possible. It shall come into operation upon the exchange of ratifications, and shall remain in force for a period of ten years, and thereafter until terminated by either party on twelve months' notice.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same, and have affixed thereto the seal of their arms.

Proposed Nationality Convention with Italy. Difficulties connected with English law.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, August 18, 1893.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 26th ultimo, with reference to our Report of the 18th March last, relative to the proposed Nationality Convention between Great Britain and Italy, and transmitting to us the accompanying papers as to the course which should now be pursued in regard to the said Convention.

Sir Thomas Sanderson in his letter stated that, in view of the opinions expressed in our Report of the 18th March last, and in the letters from the Colonial, Home, and India Offices of the 24th and 26th April and the 13th July respectively, your Lordship considered that the proposed Convention should now be submitted to the Italian Government, with a clear explanation of the difficulties connected with the English law, and our opinion was requested whether the draft note to Count Tornielli, the Italian Ambassador at this Court, contained a suitable exposition of the circumstances, or whether its terms might be advantageously modified or amended, and, if so, in what respects.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, as initialled by us, we approve the draft note to Count Tornielli.

Draft of Letter to Count Tornielli.

M. l'Ambassadeur, Foreign Office, August , 1893.

WITH reference to my note of the 9th November last, I have the honour to submit, for the consideration of the Italian Government, a draft Convention for regulating certain questions connected with naturalization in Great Britain and Italy.

The delay which has arisen in submitting the draft has been occasioned by difficulties respecting the proper interpretation of the English law in regard to some particular points, which, whilst they have not actually given rise to questions in connection with the analogous Convention of the 13th May, 1870, now in force between Great Britain and the United States of America, did still require to be thoroughly considered before negotiations were commenced for a new Convention.

I take this opportunity to explain to your Excellency the nature of the difficulties in question, so far as they affect the draft Convention now proposed.

In Section 7, paragraph 3, of "The Naturalization Act, 1870," of which I beg leave to inclose a copy, it is provided as follows (with regard to naturalization effected in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland): "An alien to whom a certificate of naturalization is granted shall in the United Kingdom be entitled to all political and other rights, powers, and privileges, and be subject to all obligations, to which a natural-born British subject is entitled or subject in the United Kingdom, with this qualification, that he shall not, when within the limits of the foreign State of which he was a subject previously to obtaining his certificate of naturalization, be deemed to be a British subject, unless he has ceased to be a subject of that State in pursuance of the laws thereof, or in pursuance of a Treaty to that effect."

It will be observed that the provisions of this section, coupled with Article I of the proposed Convention, would undoubtedly have the effect of imparting British nationality in the United Kingdom and in Italy to an Italian who had become naturalized in the United Kingdom; but the further question arises: Would the terms of the English Act also impart to an Italian so naturalized in the United Kingdom the status of a British subject elsewhere than in the United Kingdom and in Italy, viz., in foreign countries other than Italy, and in the Colonies and foreign possessions of Her Majesty?

It must be noted that Section 7, paragraph 3, of the Act only expressly confers the status of a British subject in the United Kingdom. It neither affirms nor denies that status elsewhere, except under certain circumstances in the country of origin.

No decisions have been given by the English Courts on this point, so that the law in respect to it may be regarded as uncertain; but I am advised that, whilst the difficulty of true interpretation is recognized, the probable construction of the Act is that an alien naturalized in the United Kingdom under the Act of 1870* is entitled to the status of a British subject in Her Majesty's Colonies and foreign possessions, and in foreign countries other than his country of origin, under the circumstances contemplated in the Act; and, of course, under the proposed Convention, there would be no doubt that an Italian naturalized in the United Kingdom would be a British subject in Italy.

A further difficulty arises in regard to persons naturalized, not in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, but in Her Majesty's Colonies and foreign possessions.

* See Law Officers' Report, March 18, 1893, p. 32.

1893

In Section 16 of the Act of 1870 it is provided as follows:—

"All Laws, Statutes, and Ordinances which may be duly made by the Legislature of any British possession for imparting to any person the privileges or any of the privileges of naturalization, to be enjoyed by such person within the limits of such possession, shall within such limits have the authority of law. . . . ."

Under the powers conferred by this section, the laws respecting naturalization in Her Majesty's Colonies and foreign possessions can and do confer upon aliens the status of British subjects only within the limits of the particular Colony or foreign possession in which they become naturalized; but such persons remain aliens in other parts of Her Majesty's dominions and in all foreign countries.

It follows from the preceding observations that, under the existing English law and the proposed Convention, an Italian naturalized in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland would be a British subject in the United Kingdom and in Italy, whilst his status in other parts of Her Majesty's dominions, and in foreign countries other than Italy, would be a matter of some uncertainty in the eye of the English law. But an Italian naturalized in a British Colony or foreign possession of Her Majesty would not be a British subject anywhere save within the limits of the particular Colony in which he was naturalized. Her Majesty's Representatives abroad are, however, empowered to afford to persons so naturalized in British Colonies and foreign possessions official countenance and assistance (short of recognizing them as naturalized British subjects) elsewhere than in the particular Colony in question.

I have thought it well, M. l'Ambassadeur, to draw your attention in some detail to the difficulties connected with the English law, in order to avoid any future misconception or ambiguity as to the position which would be created by the proposed Convention; but I may observe that, although these difficulties do undoubtedly exist, questions connected with them would probably be of rare occurrence, since none have arisen during the twenty-three years that the similar Convention between Great Britain and the United States has been in operation.

On the other hand, any attempted alteration of the English law in these respects would be attended by considerable difficulty, and it is not probable that it can be undertaken at present.

I trust that these explanations will enable the Italian Government to consider the draft Convention with a full comprehension of its effects so far as regards Her Majesty's dominions, and I beg leave to say that if it should meet with their concurrence, I shall be prepared to make arrangements for the signature to take place at an early date.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received November 23.)

Royal Courts of Justice, November 22, 1893.

My Lord,

Quarantine restrictions wrongfully imposed on three Italian vessels in Cyprus. Claim for compensation.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Edward Grey's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to a claim preferred by the Italian Government for compensation in respect of certain quarantine restrictions alleged to have been wrongfully imposed on three Italian vessels in Cyprus in October 1892.

That we should observe from the papers that, upon receipt of the Colonial Office letter of the 28th September last, a draft of a note to the Italian Ambassador was prepared in the Foreign Office, and submitted to the Colonial Office in a letter, dated the 12th ultimo, to the terms of which it was desirable that Sir Edward Grey should also direct our particular attention. That the aim of that draft was, while endeavouring to embody the opinion expressed by us in our Report to the Colonial Office of the 18th September last, to make it clear to the Italian Government—in the event of their being dissatisfied with the decision of Her Majesty's Government—that the Courts of Cyprus were alone competent to declare the actual law upon the matter.

That the Colonial Office, in their letter of the 1st November, submitted an alternative draft note to Count Tornielli, in which it would be seen that the latter part of the draft prepared in the Foreign Office was omitted on the grounds stated in the covering letter from the Colonial Office.

That Sir Edward Grey was to ask us, in the first instance, provisionally to adopt whichever of the two drafts most correctly embodied the views of the case expressed in our Report to the Colonial Office above mentioned, and then to be good enough to make such alterations in, or additions (if any) to, its terms as we might still consider requisite, in order to bring it into more complete harmony with our views of the situation from a legal point of view

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, with the alterations which we have made therein, the draft despatch of the Colonial Office embodies our views, and we suggest that, as altered, it may properly be addressed to the Representative of the Italian Government.

Draft of Despatch from the Earl of Rosebery to Count Tornielli.

M. l'Ambassadeur,

Foreign Office, , 1893.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint your Excellency that the claims preferred in your note of the 22nd March last for compensation for the three vessels, "Girolamo," "Falco," and "Italiano," on the alleged ground of their having been improperly subjected to quarantine in Cyprus, have been carefully considered by the Secretary of State for the Colonies, in communication with the High Commissioner in Cyprus and the Law Officers of the Crown.

The case may be briefly stated as follows.

The Government of Cyprus is obliged, for its own protection, to regulate its action in quarantine matters on the lines adopted by the Board of Health at Constantinople, and, following their lead, it was found necessary to impose quarantine on arrivals from the Italian Littoral in September last year.

The Notice putting this requirement into effect was dated the 9th September, 1892. Clause 3 of that Notice enacted that—

"Vessels arriving from Italian Mediterranean ports shall, unless they have undergone quarantine at an intermediate port, and are provided with a clean bill of health, be subjected to a quarantine of five clear days, to be undergone at Larnaca."

A subsequent Notice, to practically the same effect, was issued on the 1st October, 1892, though on that occasion the words, "they have undergone quarantine at an intermediate port," were omitted, but a fresh clause, No. 6, was inserted, to the following effect:—

"Nothing in the foregoing Regulations shall be held to prevent the Chief Superintendent of Quarantine, should he think it advisable, from refusing to admit any vessel to pratique."

The three vessels in respect of which compensation is sought, according to your Excellency's note of the 22nd March last, arrived in Cyprus subsequently to the promulgation of this Notice, viz., on the 5th, 7th, and 14th of October.

It is considered that the ~~practical~~ effect of the Notice dated the 9th September was to schedule Italy and other countries specified as "infected;" and the Ottoman Code, which is the Law in Cyprus, defines a foul bill of health as one which is carried by a vessel coming from an infected country.

That being the effect of the Notice, the bills of health borne by the vessels alluded to in your Excellency's note could not properly be regarded as "clean," whatever might be stated on the face of them. It is a common practice in Spain and elsewhere to declare a particular port "infected," and, when this is done, all other considerations are ipso facto over-ridden, and the bills of health cease to have any value in themselves.

But apart from this view, Her Majesty's Government would draw attention to the fact that by the General Quarantine Regulations, published in the "Cyprus Gazette" of the 30th October, 1891, the Health Officer, upon the arrival of any vessel, is required to ascertain whether she has called at or communicated with a country scheduled as infected, and, if she has done so, to direct her to proceed to the quarantine ground, there to undergo such quarantine as may have been directed to be imposed upon such vessel ~~the notice of the 1st October, 1892, already cited, after giving certain particular directions, concludes by stating that nothing in those directions "shall be held to prevent the Chief Superintendent of Quarantine, should he think it advisable, from refusing to admit any vessel to pratique."~~ This provision gave a general power to the Sanitary Authority, the exercise of which cannot be complained of.

The Health Officer is also required by the Cyprus Quarantine Ordinance of 1879 to refuse to admit a vessel to pratique if he believes that danger to the public health may reasonably be apprehended by admitting it.

Your Excellency will therefore see that, apart from any questions of the construction of the particular Notices issued last year, the Cyprus Government officials possessed, and were bound to exercise, their discretion as to acting upon general powers of refusing pratique. This might have been made clearer in the explanations given to the representations of the Italian Consul at Larnaca, whose observations referred only to the two Notices.

Her Majesty's Government are unable, therefore, to admit that the Government of Cyprus is liable for damages in the matter.

I have, &c.

Claim of Messrs. Mourilyan, Heimann, and Co. on Japanese Govt. through wrongful delivery of oil stored in Govt. warehouse.

That the facts of the case appeared to be fully explained in Mr. de Bunsen's despatch, and the papers inclosed therewith, which consisted of a letter addressed to him by Mr. Duncan McNeill, counsel for the claimants; report of the proceedings in the Yokohama Court of Appeal at Tôkiô, when the appeal was dismissed with costs against the appellant, viz., Mr. Arthur H. Gooch, the manager of Messrs. Mourilyan and Co.; Regulations of the warehouses for inflammable substances of the 16th March, 1877; Bonded Warehouse Regulations of the 1st March, 1869; the confession of the comprador in Yokohama of Messrs. Mourilyan, Heimann, and Co.; and a legal opinion on the merits of the case by Mr. Leach, the Acting Attorney-General of Hong Kong.

That your Lordship was disposed to think that a primâ facie case of miscarriage of justice appeared on the papers, although it was no doubt a question for consideration whether there had been such contributory negligence on the part of Messrs. Mourilyan, Heimann, and Co. as disentitled them, on the ground that they had been parties to their own wrong, from claiming damages against the Japanese Government in respect of the losses which they had incurred.

That we were take the papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion (1) whether there had been such a failure of justice as made it incumbent on Her Majesty's Government to make representation on behalf of Messrs. Mourilyan, Heimann, and Co. to the Japanese Government; and (2), if so, on what special grounds, having regard to all the circumstances, such representations could most advantageously be based.

That your Lordship would also be glad to be furnished with any general observations that we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, there has not been such a failure of justice in this case as to make it incumbent on Her Majesty's Government to make representations on behalf of Messrs. Mourilyan, Heimann, and Co. to the Japanese Government.

Whether or not the decision arrived at is one which could be supported on principles of English law, there appears to be no ground for suggesting that the Courts have not acted in good faith and with every intention to administer justice, and the result arrived at is not so plainly contrary to principles of natural justice as to call for diplomatic interference.

Jurisdiction of Brit. Courts in Japan under O.'s in C. and existing Treaty rights.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Villiers Lister's letter of the 22nd September, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Tôkiô, reporting that the Japanese Government maintained that Article 47 of "The China and Japan Order in Council, 1881," as amended by "The China, Japan, and Corea Order in Council, 1886," if applied to Japanese as well as to other foreigners in the British Courts, implied the exercise of a jurisdiction wider than that allowed to Great Britain under the existing Treaty stipulations between this country and Japan.

That the exercise of Her Majesty's jurisdiction in Japan was provided for by Articles IV, V, and VI of the Treaty between Great Britain and Japan of the 26th August, 1858, and that it was further stipulated in Article XXIII of that Treaty that the British Government and its subjects would be allowed full and equal participation in all privileges, immunities, and advantages that might have been or might be thereafter granted by His Majesty the Tycoon of Japan to the Government or subjects of any other nation.

That extracts from the Treaties between Japan and foreign Powers, so far as they related to the question of jurisdiction, were inclosed, together with a Memorandum by Mr. Streatfeild, supplemental to that by Mr. Spring-Rice inclosed in Mr. de Bunsen's despatch of the 13th July last.

Sir Villiers Lister was pleased to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether there was any force in the argument advanced by the Japanese Government, and that we would furnish your Lordship with any general observations which we might wish to offer on the subject.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the Orders in Council of 1881 and 1886 do extend the jurisdiction of Her Majesty's Courts in Japan beyond what is justified by existing Treaty rights.

The combined effect of the most-favoured-nation clause in the Treaty of 1858 and the Anglo-Austrian Treaty of 1869 is to make it necessary for Japanese subjects to sue British subjects in the British Courts, whilst no jurisdiction is given to those Courts to adjudicate upon any claims by a British subject against a Japanese. Such last-mentioned claims must be prosecuted in the Japanese Courts.

The provisions made in the Order in Council of 1881 to the effect that a Japanese subject must not only submit to the jurisdiction, but obtain an authority to do so from the proper authority of his own country, appear to us to be restrictions on the right to sue in all British Courts not warranted by any existing Treaty.

The change in the Order of 1881, introduced by the Order in Council of 1886, still leaves it to the discretion of the Court to impose upon foreigners the conditions required in 1881 as to the consent of his own nation.

The submission to the jurisdiction would not, in our opinion, be necessary to enable the Court to require security for costs from the plaintiff. Its only importance as regards Japanese subjects seems to rest upon its supposed effect in authorizing a counter-claim against the plaintiff, and enabling the Court to exact security for satisfying any judgment made against the plaintiff.

For the reasons above indicated we do not think that a counter-claim (which is in substance an action against the plaintiff) can properly be heard in the British Courts, and the right to exact security for damages falls with the right to decree damages.

As regards foreigners other than Japanese subjects, who have no Treaty right to sue in the British Courts, we do not think that any valid objection exists to the Orders in Council as they now stand.

Extradition Treaty with Netherlands.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 8th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the conclusion of a new Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and the Netherlands.

That on the 22nd November, 1892, a note was received from the Netherlands Minister at this Court, proposing the conclusion of a new Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and the Netherlands, with the view, amongst other things, to include the Dutch Colonies within the scope of the extradition arrangements between the two countries. That upon examination, it appeared that the existing Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and the Netherlands was incomplete, especially in regard to the list of extradition crimes; and that it might with advantage be replaced by one of a more comprehensive character. That in view, however, of the difficulty which appeared to arise in bringing the Dutch draft into harmony with the provisions of English law, it was considered preferable to frame a counter-draft based upon the provisions of the latest English Extradition Treaties.

That the counter-draft so framed was transmitted for the opinion of the Home, Colonial, and India Offices in the Foreign Office letter of the 21st December, 1892.

That the Colonial and India Departments concurred therein without comment.

That Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department, however, made the five suggestions for the amendment of the British counter-draft which would be found numbered (6) in the Home Office letter of the 18th January, 1893.

That your Lordship, in the letter from the Foreign Office of the 25th January, 1893, concurred in Nos. 1, 3, and 4 of those suggestions, by the insertion in the British draft of stipulations for provisional arrest, by adopting in Article X the words "depositions or statements on oath," and by suggesting that the attention of the Netherlands Government should be called to Article XVI, with the view to the insertion therein of any amendments required by Dutch law.

That in regard to suggestion No. 2 respecting the proposed insertion in the Treaty of stipulations for optional surrender for offences not named in the Treaty, but for which extradition could be granted by the laws of both States, your Lordship felt some hesitation, and pointed out that, in the Law Officers' Report of the 21st January, 1892, the then Solicitor-General, Sir Edward Clarke, differed in opinion from Sir Richard Webster, and took strong objection to provisions of the kind now suggested.

That it was further pointed out that the stipulations of that kind, which had been inserted in some Treaties now in operation, had never in practice been resorted to.

That in regard to suggestion No. 5 relative to the surrender of nationals, your Lordship considered that some objection might be held to exist to an unilateral stipulation for the surrender of British subjects.

That the observations in reply of Mr. Secretary Asquith upon those two points were contained in the Home Office letter of the 30th January, 1893.

That in regard to the question of the surrender of nationals, Sir Thomas Sanderson was to observe that four modes of treating that matter had hitherto been adopted in Treaties between Great Britain and foreign Powers:—

(a.) Both parties agree to surrender unconditionally.

That for European countries, that was the form usually preferred by Her Majesty's Government, but that it was generally declined by foreign States on account of the provisions of their own laws respectively.

(b.) Facultative surrender, i.e., either party has the option, but is not bound, to surrender nationals.

That even in cases where that form was accepted by foreign Governments it was not wholly satisfactory, since, in cases of refusal to surrender, it might possibly involve diplomatic incidents; and that it might further, in some degree, be held to transfer from the judicial to the executive authority the duty of deciding in certain cases whether a person should or should not be surrendered.

That that form had been usually adopted in recent English Treaties when foreign States had been willing to agree to it.

(c.) Both parties agree not to surrender nationals.

That that principle was defective, since, as pointed out by the Home Office, British subjects could not, except in a very few cases, be tried and punished by British Courts for offences committed abroad.

(d.) Unilateral surrender, i.e., Great Britain engages unconditionally to surrender, whilst the foreign State engages not to surrender, nationals.

That that principle seemed open to some objection on the score of want of reciprocity, but that on that point also Sir Thomas Sanderson was to call our especial attention to the views expressed in the Home Office letter of the 30th January, 1893.

That the annexed British draft contained the Home Office suggestions which had been agreed to by the Foreign Office; and that stipulations to meet the suggestions of the Home Office in regard to "optional surrender" (Article II) and to "surrender of nationals" (Article III) had been inserted in red ink.

That it would be observed that the words inserted in red ink in Article III, as to the surrender of nationals, were not precisely the same as those hitherto adopted in any English Treaty; since instead of an unconditional unilateral stipulation on the part of this country to surrender nationals, such as had been adopted in the Treaties with Switzerland, Spain, and Luxembourg, the unilateral stipulation on that head had now been inserted in a facultative form, which might perhaps be considered preferable.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the amended British counter-draft might properly be submitted to the Netherlands Government for negotiation; and particularly whether we were of opinion that the words inserted in Articles II and III, to meet the suggestions of Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department, should be adopted.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the amended British counter-draft (paper 9) may properly be submitted to the Netherlands Government for negotiation.

1893

In particular, we think the words added to Article II to meet the suggestions of the Home Secretary may properly be added. We think the objections urged by Sir Edward Clarke in his Report of the 21st January, 1892, are answered in the letter of Sir Godfrey Lushington of the 30th January, 1893.

As to Article III, we prefer it in the form in which it is printed; but if the Netherlands Government object to it in that form, there is no objection to the proposed substitution written in red ink.

We notice that the proposed Article XVI as to the expenses of extradition differs from Article XIV of the Treaty of 1874 with the Netherlands relating to the same subject.

1. A warrant must purport to be signed by a Judge, Magistrate, or officer of the Netherlands.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received April 20.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, April 19, 1893.

Arrest and detention of J. B. Carpenter, master of "Costa Rica Packet," by Netherlands authorities at Ternate. Claim for compensation.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Edward Grey's letter of the 6th February, transmitting to us the papers relating to the claim of Mr. J. B. Carpenter, the master of the barque "Costa Rica Packet," on his own behalf, and on behalf of the owners and the crew of that ship, for compensation from the Netherlands Government in respect of his arrest on a charge of theft by the authorities of the Netherlands East Indies at Ternate in November 1891, and his subsequent conveyance to and detention at Macassar from the 16th until the 28th of the same month, when he was released by order of the Court.

That the facts of the case were so clearly and fully set out in Mr. Carpenter's statements and declarations, inclosed in the letter of the 17th January from the Colonial Office, and in the Report from the "Procureur-Général" of Netherlands India inclosed in Sir G. Bonham's despatch No. 72, Commercial, of the 20th August last, that it was thought unnecessary to trouble us with any further statements of the case in his letter.

That it would be seen from the Report of the "Procureur-Général" of Netherlands India that the proceedings of the Netherlands authorities were sought to be vindicated on the ground that they were entirely in accordance with Netherlands law and procedure, and that the "Procureur-Général" particularly insisted in justification of their action upon the facts—

1. That the offence alleged against Mr. Carpenter was a criminal offence, both according to English and to Dutch law; and
2. That a valid and sufficient primâ facie case was made out against him.

That with reference to this latter point the "Procureur-Général" argued with some force that the sufficiency or insufficiency of the evidence for the purpose mentioned must be regarded and determined by a consideration of the doctrines of Dutch jurisprudence and of the requirements and usages of Dutch Tribunals, which it was suggested were of a less strict and exacting nature than those by which English Courts govern themselves in the like circumstances.

That as to the exact position of the prauw when she was found floating apparently derelict "at a short distance from the coast of Boeroe" and taken possession of by Mr. Carpenter some conflict of opinion appeared to exist; but that your Lordship was, on the whole, disposed to agree with the view expressed by the Government of New South Wales and by the Secretary of State for the Colonies upon this point (see Colonial Office to Foreign Office of 3rd February, 1893, with inclosures); that the balance of evidence was in favour of Mr. Carpenter's contention that the prauw was boarded, and portions of her cargo removed when she was adrift upon the high seas outside of Netherlands territorial waters.

That it would be seen, however, that the "mise en accusation" (Appendix (B) to Mr. Carpenter's statement) asserted that he was suspected on plausible grounds of having in the beginning of the year 1888, at a distance of not more than 3 miles from the Islands of Boeroe, seized a prauw adrift, and maliciously appropriated the goods therein, and that it appeared, under the circumstances, open to the "Procureur-Général" to argue, as he was understood to do, that there was a primâ facie case against Mr. Carpenter on this head, justifying his arrest and detention, although on further investigation the judicial authorities did not consider the charge satisfactorily and indubitably established.

That those portions of the "Procureur-Général's" Report which dealt with considerations of English law, and with supposed offences (such as dishonestly selling a part of the cargo of the prauw on Netherlands territory) not apparently alleged against Mr. Carpenter in the actual "mise en accusation," were, as was submitted, scarcely relevant or material to the present inquiry.

That Sir Edward Grey was to observe, although it was thought that that circumstance would probably not, in our opinion, affect the right of Her Majesty's Government to press Mr. Carpenter's claim should we consider it to be a good one on the merits, that the claimant was by origin an American citizen, and that he was subsequently (i.e., in 1872) naturalized not in the United Kingdom, but merely in a British Colony, viz., the Straits Settlements.

But that although colonial naturalization did not for other purposes operate beyond the limits of the particular Colony in which it had been conferred, it had, nevertheless, been the practice of Her Majesty's Government, inasmuch as persons thus naturalized were subjects of the Queen in one of Her Majesty's Colonies, to grant to them British protection in all foreign countries other than their country of origin, and to place them in that respect on the same footing as aliens naturalized in the United Kingdom under "The Naturalization Act, 1870."

A Circular on this subject, which was addressed to Her Majesty's Consuls in 1882, was inclosed by Sir Edward Grey, and he was to add that the principles therein laid down had also been embodied in section 8 of Chapter XVIII of the General Consular Instructions, 1893, which had just been issued.

That Sir Edward Grey was further to request us to take the papers into our consideration, and to favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government could properly press on the Netherlands Government the claim put forward by Mr. Carpenter on behalf of himself and others, and, if so, on what grounds and to what extent it could reasonably be supported.

And in the event of our being of opinion that the claim itself should be pressed, but that the amount (25,000*l.*) actually claimed was excessive, he was to request us, if possible, either to indicate a round sum, which, having regard to all the circumstances, might properly be demanded, or to indicate the data upon a consideration of which the sum to be claimed might properly be calculated.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to

Report—

That in this case there is considerable difference in the statement on one side and the other of material facts, but that on the whole we think that there is ground on the case, as represented by the Netherlands India Government, for a claim for reasonable compensation on the part of J. B. Carpenter.

The charge upon which Mr. Carpenter was arrested was that of having appropriated a derelict prauw and its cargo at a distance not exceeding 3 miles from the Island of Boeroe, and to justify the arrest there ought to have been some reasonable ground for it. The Report of the "Procureur-Général" refers only to the evidence of two witnesses, one of whom speaks to the finding of the prauw floating at a short distance from the coast of Boeroe, but does not appear to have been asked for any explanation of what he meant by a short distance. The importance of this appears from the statement of the other witness Palmer mentioned in the same Report, who, though not sworn, is represented as saying that the prauw was found floating near Boeroe close to a place called Kajoli. He then explains this by saying that he calculated the distance from shore at 16 to 20 English geographical miles, and there would seem to be little or no doubt that the other witness, if asked, would have fixed the distance at considerably more than 3 miles.

With all respect to the procedure of the Netherlands India Courts, we think that such evidence was not sufficient to make out even such a case of reasonable suspicion as could be treated as a sufficient cause for the arrest of the complainant, and that on the ground of the entire want of reasonable evidence the claim for compensation for personal damage by J. B. Carpenter may be founded. We do not, however, think that the alleged loss to the crew and owners of the "Costa Rica Packet" can properly be included in the claim. That loss is not so necessarily the result of the arrest of the master as to make it a fit subject for a claim.

We think also that the claim for personal damage put forward by J. B. Carpenter himself is greatly exaggerated. It is difficult to estimate, even approximately, the amount which might be fairly demanded, but the claim should be based upon the actual personal loss inflicted upon the claimant, and we do not see how this could reasonably be placed at a higher sum than, say, 2,500*l.*

Arrest and detention of J. B. Carpenter, master of "Costa Rica Packet," by Netherland authorities at Ternate. Claim for compensation.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, September 29, 1893.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Edward Grey's letter of the 31st July last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us certain further papers respecting the case of the barque "Costa Rica Packet," in respect whereof we gave an opinion to your Lordship on the 19th April last.

That that Report was inclosed for convenience of reference, together with the papers submitted to us in the first instance. That these papers would place us in possession of the action of Her Majesty's Government and of that of the Netherlands since we advised on the case.

That, in pursuance of our advice, we should observe that the Netherlands Government had been informed that Her Majesty's Government would not put forward any claim on account of the alleged loss suffered by the crew and the owners of the barque.

That we should, however, note that in the Memorandum communicated by Sir Saul Samuel to the Foreign Office on the 19th instant a distinction was sought to be established between an ordinary merchant-vessel and a "whaler," a point on which Sir Saul had laid particular stress in a recent interview at the Foreign Office.

That Sir E. Grey was to request us to take these further papers into our consideration, and to inform your Lordship whether we saw any grounds for modifying the opinion expressed in our Report of the 19th April last.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That in the papers which were originally before us prominence was not given to the contention now raised by the further papers, that the arrest of Mr. Carpenter put an end to the whole adventure in which the "Costa Rica Packet" was engaged; but even if that contention had been more explicitly placed before us, though we might have suggested that the claim of the owners and crew should be put forward, we should still have had great hesitation in saying that, as a matter of law, in accordance with the principles which would be applied by a Court of Justice, the loss of the voyage was a necessary or natural consequence of the arrest of Mr. Carpenter. We do not, however, mean to convey that international claims are in all cases to be restricted by the rules of municipal law.

It appears, however, that the Netherlands Government have been distinctly informed that no claim will be put forward on account of the alleged loss suffered by the crew and the owners, and upon the whole, therefore, we do not find in the further papers now laid before us sufficient grounds for modifying the opinion expressed in our Report of the 19th April last.

We cannot avoid adding that there is a considerable tone of exaggeration in the manner in which this claim has been advanced.

We have, &c.

We have read the further papers forwarded on the 28th instant.

J. R.

We have considered the Memorandum of Lord Rosebery of the 6th instant, and we have to say that, putting aside the communication to the Netherlands Government, we see no sufficient ground for modifying our Report of the 19th April last. In our opinion, the further claim suggested cannot in law be supported.

Proposed military extradition between Straits Settlements and Netherlands Indies.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, November 23, 1893.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bramston's letter of the 2nd instant,* stating that the late Governor of the Straits Settlements, in a despatch, a copy of which was inclosed, had suggested that a reciprocal arrangement should be come to between the Colonial Government and the Government of Netherlands India for the arrest and surrender of military and naval deserters within the respective territories of the two Colonies, pointing out that such an arrangement would be beneficial to both parties, and that the Dutch authorities would assent to it.

That your Lordship was advised, on reference to the Foreign Office, that "The Foreign Deserters Act of 1852," which is in force throughout Her Majesty's dominions, was confined in its operation to the surrender of deserters from merchant-vessels; and that, although the question of extending its provisions to deserters from ships of war had been more than once under consideration, there had been difficulties in the way of taking any definite action in that direction.

That, in these circumstances, your Lordship would be glad of our opinion as to whether or not any such arrangement as that now proposed could be made without fresh legislation.

We have considered the matter, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, no reciprocal arrangement for the arrest and surrender of military and naval deserters can be entered into on behalf of Her Majesty without further legislation. Neither "The Foreign Deserters Act, 1852," nor "The Extradition Act of 1870," applies to the case suggested, and statutory authority to enter into the proposed arrangement would be necessary.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Right of Government of Mosquito Reservation to levy port dues at Bluefields.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, April 24, 1893.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Rosebery, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the question of the right of the Government of the Mosquito Reservation to levy port dues at Bluefields.

This question was brought to his Lordship's notice, in the first instance, in a note dated the 13th September, 1892, addressed to Her Majesty's Minister in Central America by Señor Bravo, the Nicaraguan Minister for Foreign Affairs, in which he stated that inquiries had been made of his Government by that of the United States as to certain increased port charges levied on steamers of the Southern Pacific Company, running between New Orleans and Bluefields, by the Government of the Mosquito Reservation (Paper A).

Subsequently a despatch, dated the 8th February, 1893, from the United States' Secretary of State to the American Minister in London, on the same subject, was communicated by the latter to Her Majesty's Government, in which exception is taken to the right of Great Britain to intervene as the protector or advocate of the alleged rights of the Mosquito Indians, and it is asserted that impediments are thereby caused to the exercise by Nicaragua of responsible acts of sovereignty in that quarter (Paper C).

You will observe that in neither of these documents are any particulars furnished as to the nature of the dues levied at Bluefields which are complained of, and Her Majesty's Government are therefore unable to form an opinion whether they are legitimate as matters of internal taxation, or whether they are of a nature to interfere with the free navigation of the River Escondido, at the mouth of which Bluefields is situated.

Your attention is invited to the two Memoranda which are annexed, dealing with the question of the right of this country to intervene in disputes between Nicaragua and the Mosquito Indians (Papers B and D), and a further Memorandum in regard to the right of the Mosquito Indians to levy port dues at Bluefields (Paper E).

In the month of February 1889 a draft of a Convention was submitted to Her Majesty's Government by that of Nicaragua, which was intended to abrogate the Treaty of Managua (Paper G), concluded between Great Britain and Nicaragua on the 28th January, 1860, with the object of terminating the British Protectorate that had previously been extended over the Mosquito Indians, and of defining the relations of the Indians towards the Sovereign State of Nicaragua (Paper I).

The Nicaraguan Minister for Foreign Affairs, Señor Cardenas, was informed, in reply, that Her Majesty's Government were anxious to be relieved of further responsibility in regard to the affairs of the Mosquito Indians, and they suggested that Nicaragua should, in the first instance, depute a Commissioner to negotiate an arrangement with the Indians, such as was contemplated by Article IV of the Treaty of Managua, under which power was reserved to the Mosquito Indians to become incorporated with the Republic of Nicaragua, and to be governed by its laws instead of by their own customs and regulations (Paper J). This suggestion does not appear to have been acted on by Nicaragua.

In these circumstances, it is presumed that the position of Great Britain in relation to the Mosquito Indians on the one hand, and to the Nicaraguan Government on the other, remains, pending the conclusion of some definite arrangement between the British and Nicaraguan Governments respectively, precisely that which obtained at the commencement of the negotiations which have hitherto proved abortive.

A Report furnished by your predecessors to Lord Salisbury on the 5th March, 1889, as to the interpretation to be given to certain provisions of the Treaty of Managua, together with the papers on which it was founded, is annexed for convenience of reference (Papers L, M, N, and O).

L. O. R. 1889 (Conf. 5956), p. 72.

I am also to inclose a letter, dated the 23rd November, 1892, from the Chief of the Mosquito Reserve, which contains various complaints against the Nicaraguan Government.

These complaints—with one exception—appear to Lord Rosebery to relate to boundary questions, the only satisfactory way of dealing with which would seem to be by a Joint Delimitation Commission, and with which, therefore, his Lordship does not wish unnecessarily to trouble you at this juncture.

It will, however, be observed that there is one specific complaint to the effect that the Nicaraguan Commissioner prevents the Mosquito people from fishing and taking cocoa-nuts on the Pearl Cays without licences, and this appears to raise a simple question of legal right upon which his Lordship would be glad to have the advantage of your opinion and advice (Paper P).

With special reference to this latter point, a copy is also annexed of a Memorandum drawn up in this Department which enters into the question as to how far the Treaty of Managua affected the rights of the Mosquito Indians to the Corn Islands and other islands and cays off the Mosquito Coast, together with a map showing their positions (Papers Q and R).

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Rosebery with your opinion on the following questions :—

1. Whether under present circumstances any general exception can fairly be taken by the United States' Government to the right of Great Britain to intervene on behalf of the Mosquito Indians for the protection of their alleged rights, should these be infringed by the Government of Nicaragua.

2. Whether, assuming that the dues levied at Bluefields which have been made the subject of complaint are legitimate as matter of internal taxation, and are not of a nature to interfere with the free navigation of the River Escondido, they are in any way open to objection or unjustifiable.

3. Whether the Mosquito Indians are entitled to fish off, and to take cocoa-nuts from, the Pearl Cays, without having previously furnished themselves with licences from the Nicaraguan Government.

His Lordship will at the same time be glad to be favoured with any observations which you may have to offer with regard to the case generally, and more especially with reference to the terms of the reply to be returned to the representations of the United States' Government contained in Mr. Foster's despatch to Mr. Lincoln of the 8th February, 1893 (Paper C).

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands signified to us in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 24th April last, have the honour to

Report—

1. That, in our opinion, under present circumstances, there is no ground on which any general exception, founded either on Treaty or any received doctrine of international law, can fairly be taken by the United States' Government to the right of Great Britain to intervene on behalf of the Mosquito Indians for the protection of their alleged rights so far as they are founded on the Treaty of Managua, in case of infringement of those rights by the Government of Nicaragua.

In our opinion, the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty not only did not forbid, but, on the contrary, contemplated the possibility of the existence of a Protectorate in the district in question. Article I of that Treaty provides that neither Government will make use of any protection which either affords, or may afford, for the purposes therein mentioned—the purpose material for the present consideration—being "assuming or exercising dominion." Nothing has been done on the part of Her Majesty's Government which can fairly be said to contravene this provision.

We are, however, of opinion that the Treaty of Managua did put an absolute end to the British Protectorate of the Mosquito Indians, and that the only ground on which Her Majesty's Government can claim to interfere on behalf of the Mosquitos is that which has been put forward, viz., the right to require Nicaragua to fulfil its Treaty obligations with Great Britain.

If this were construed so as to involve a perpetual right of interference whenever a question arises between Nicaragua and the Mosquitos as to matters provided for by the Treaty, it would be difficult to distinguish the state of things after the Treaty from that Protectorate which was abandoned by the Treaty, and, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government undertook no such obligation towards the Mosquitos.

We think that there is great force in the arguments that the obligations of Nicaragua under the Treaty are in favour of the Mosquitos, and not of Great Britain, that the Mosquitos must be taken to have accepted the undertaking of the Nicaraguan Government, and to have surrendered their right to look to Her Majesty's Government for protection, and that Her Majesty's Government are not bound, and ought not, to claim a right to interfere on every occasion where the conduct of the Nicaraguan Government is called in question by the Mosquitos.

Although, as matter of law, any interference for the purpose of procuring an adherence to the terms of the Managua Treaty would not, in our opinion, give a just cause for complaint to the United States, we would point out that they might fairly enough say that Her Majesty's Government ought not to insist upon a Protectorate in substance without undertaking the obligations of a Protectorate, and that if they did say so it would be difficult for Her Majesty's Government to make a complete answer.

2. On the assumption that the dues levied at Bluefields, which have been made the subject of complaint, are legitimate as matter of internal taxation, and are not of a nature to interfere with the free navigation of the Escondido, we are of opinion that they are not in any way open to objection or unjustifiable.

We do not think that the contention of the United States that the rights of the Mosquitos under the Treaty of Managua are "tribal" only, as distinguished from "territorial," can, on the due construction of the Treaty, be maintained.

3. There is not before us sufficient information to enable us to give a precise answer to this question. We would observe, however, that, in our opinion, the subject-matter in no way falls within the provisions of the Treaty of Managua, and that Her Majesty's Government have no right to interfere with regard to it.

The foregoing answers sufficiently indicate the tenour of the reply which, we submit, should be made to Mr. Foster's despatch of the 8th February, 1893. Her Majesty's Government may properly intervene to secure the observance of the Treaty stipulations by Nicaragua, but they are not bound to do so, and the extent to which, as a matter of policy, such intervention ought to be resorted to, must be determined by Her Majesty's Government as the circumstances arise.

We may, however, point out, as additional reasons why Her Majesty's Government should be slow to interfere—

(a.) That it appears to be very doubtful whether the interference would enure for the benefit of the Mosquitos themselves as distinguished from those who carry on the Government in their name.

(b.) That, with reference to such questions as the reasonableness of port dues, or the establishment of a Post Office of Nicaragua within the Mosquito Reserve, the United States' Government, if any question arises, can only apply to the Government of Nicaragua, and that any claim of Her Majesty's Government to interfere might, and probably would, be looked upon with the greatest jealousy, and give rise to difficulties out of all proportion to the intrinsic importance of the subjects themselves.

Rights of United States over Pago Pago Harbour.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the rights claimed by the United States over the harbour of Pago Pago, in Samoa, under their Treaty with the Navigators' Islands of the 17th January, 1878.

That it would be seen that the United States' Government, while disclaiming any desire to exclusively occupy that harbour to the inconvenience of other than American shipping, maintained that the Treaty gave them an exclusive right to use the port and shores for the purposes of a naval and coaling station.

That in support of that contention they appealed not only to the terms of the Treaty in question, but to those of the Treaty between Germany and Samoa of the 24th January, 1879, which they read as "distinctly respecting the cession of Pago Pago Harbour for the use of the United States by conveying to Germany like exclusive rights in another harbour, that of Saluafata, in the Island of Upolu."

That the Treaty of the 28th August, 1879, between this country and Samoa, contained the following clause:—

"Article VIII. Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain may, if she think fit, establish on the shores of a Samoan harbour, to be hereafter designated by Her Majesty, a naval station and coaling depôt, but this Article shall not apply to the harbours of Apia or Saluafata, or to that part of the harbour of Pago Pago which may be hereafter selected by the Government of the United States of America as a station under the provisions of the Treaty concluded between the United States of America and the German Government on the 17th January, 1878."

That the United States' Government took exception to any claim that might be put forward by Her Majesty's Government, under that provision, to a part of the harbour of Pago Pago, and declared that any attempt to occupy any portion of that harbour as a coaling or naval station "could not fail to be regarded by them as an unfriendly act, because tending to impair their vested rights therein."

That we should observe, on the other hand, that the Lords of the Admiralty, to whom inquiries on some of the points at issue had been addressed, stated that, as a matter of fact, the depôt actually established by the United States' Government at Pago Pago consisted of a moderate-sized plot of ground with a heap of coal on it, and urged that, whether in time of peace or war, it would be prejudicial to British interests to forego the possibility of using that harbour in the future.

That, before making any reply to the representation of the United States in the matter, your Lordship would be glad if we would take the papers transmitted with Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter into our consideration, and favour you with our opinion as to whether the claim to an exclusive right over the harbour of Pago Pago, as put forward by the United States' Government, was a well-founded one.

That your Lordship would also be obliged by any observations of a more general nature with which we might, at the same time, be good enough to furnish you in connection with the matter.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That the rights of the United States must be determined by the terms of the Treaty of the 17th January, 1878, and the rights of Great Britain under the later Treaty of the 28th August, 1879, must be subject to those granted by the former.

The question, then, is, what rights were granted by the Treaty of the 17th January, 1878? To this we answer that, although no exclusive right in Pago Pago Harbour is, in express terms, given to the United States by that Treaty, the latter portion of Article II secures the United States against any exercise or authorization of jurisdiction within the port adverse to, or restrictive of, the rights granted therein to the United States.

If, therefore (and we gather from the papers that of this there is no doubt), the establishment by Great Britain in Pago Pago Harbour of a naval station and coaling depôt would be adverse to, or restrictive of, the Treaty rights of the United States, we are of opinion that Her Majesty's Government must be advised they are not entitled to insist on such establishment.

Enactment of "The Real Property Ordinance, 1891," by Chief Justice of Samoa. Imposition of registration fee.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 23rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the enactment by the Chief Justice of Samoa of "The Real Property Ordinance, 1891," and to the imposition under it of a fee for the registration of land titles, which formed the subject of our Report of the 3rd September last.

That we should perceive from the Chief Justice's letter of the 29th November last, to which Sir Thomas Sanderson was to call our special attention, that he demurred to the opinion that his action in the matter had been ultra vires, and alleged various considerations in support of his proceedings, as well as in defence of the fee which had been impugned, but which he affirmed to be of a reasonable character.

That negotiations were in progress under which it was probable that the present Chief Justice would vacate his post at an early date.

That your Lordship was nevertheless desirous, out of consideration for M. Cedercrantz, to be in a position to return such a reply to his communication as, from a legal point of view, would command our approval.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was according to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would inform your Lordship whether we saw anything in the arguments and considerations put forward by the Chief Justice which induced us to modify, in any way, our opinion of the 3rd September, 1892.

L. O. R., 1892 (Conf. 6347), p. 46.

That your Lordship would also be glad to receive any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to

Report—

1. That we have carefully considered the letter of the Chief Justice of Samoa of the 29th November, 1892. That letter contains matter worthy of notice by the Treaty Powers. It also shows that the Chief Justice has applied himself with great ability and industry, and in a position of much difficulty, to meet the emergencies with which he found himself confronted.

There is no doubt the difficulty of his position was caused mainly by the incomplete character of the Final Act of the 14th June, 1889. At the same time we cannot withdraw the expression of our opinion contained in the first clause of our Report of the 3rd September, 1892.

We think the Final Act did not confer upon the Chief Justice legislative authority. We think the Chief Justice is in error in thinking that "practice and procedure" include "substantive law;" and we think he is also in error in the view that Article III, section 8, only provides for legislation of a criminal kind. We think it ought to be construed as applying also to laws affecting property and civil rights.

2. As to the imposition of the registration fee fixed by the Ordinance of the Chief Justice, we regarded that as a subsidiary part of a scheme which we were, and are, of opinion is in many important provisions, and taken as a whole, ultra vires; and we would observe that the value of the reference by the Chief Justice to the fees charged in other places cannot be estimated without a knowledge of the Statutes giving authority in those cases. Our opinion had reference in this connection to the Final Act.

It may be that the provision which, we understand from his letter, has since been issued by the Chief Justice has a material bearing upon the question of the reasonableness of the fee in question.

3. We desire to remind your Lordship that in the third paragraph of our Report of the 3rd September, 1892, we took the liberty of suggesting that a direct communication should be made to the Chief Justice of the views of the Treaty Powers. We thought that this was due to the distinguished position he occupied, and that the zeal, ability, and industry he had shown entitled him to every consideration, a view in which we feel little doubt your Lordship will concur.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received June 17.)

[After reciting the following reference, the Law Officers report as on p. 56:—]

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, June 5, 1893.

Cancelling of Persian Lottery Loan Concession.

BY direction of the Earl of Rosebery, I have the honour to request your attention to a fresh question which has arisen with regard to the Concession granted by the Shah of Persia, dated the 20th July, 1889, conferring for a period of seventy-five years the exclusive privilege of conducting all operations in connection with lottery loans and other similar issues in Persia.

The Concession in question was on the 5th December cancelled by the Shah on the ground that he had signed it under a misapprehension, and that he found that its conditions were contrary to the religious law of Persia.*

Out of this act of the Shah there arose various claims against the Persian Government.

The Persian Government allege that they officially informed the Persian Minister in this country of the withdrawal of the Concession by a telegram, dated the 5th December, 1889. The fact of its being cancelled was notified in writing to Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran by the Persian Foreign Office on the 8th December, and Sir H. Wolff on the same day telegraphed the information to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.† On the 10th December, the official Notification of that date, of which the original is inclosed in Sir F. Lascelles' despatch No. 25 of the 8th February, 1892, was substituted for the one of the 8th December, which was thereupon cancelled.

On the 25th November, 1889, a telegram was received from Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran,‡ stating that he had just been informed by the Amin-es-Sultan (Grand Vizier) that Malcom Khan, the Persian Minister, who was interested in the Lottery Concession, had been recalled.

On the 3rd December Malcom Khan himself, in conversation with the Permanent Under-Secretary of State at the Foreign Office, formally announced his recall as definitive. His letters of recall were dated December 1889, but no particular day is mentioned in them, and he did not have audience of Her Majesty the Queen to deliver them till the 10th March, 1890.

The Concession was originally granted to the nominee of Malcom Khan, a certain Buzie de Caerdoel. This person, by agreement of the 3rd October, 1889, undertook to sell his rights to the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate (Limited), who, in order to pay part of the purchase-money, borrowed 20,000*l*. from the New Oriental Bank Corporation, on the collateral security of the Concession, and on the 12th October paid this 20,000*l*. to General Mikayl Khan (brother of Malcom Khan, and also a member of the Persian Legation), who, by assignment of M. Buzie de Caerdoel, dated the 12th October, had become the holder of the Concession.

On the 15th November the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate entered into a preliminary contract for the sale of the Concession to the Persian Investment Corporation, and on the 18th of the same month they further contracted with General Mikayl Khan for a reduction of the price to be paid to him on account of the Concession.

The contract of sale of the 15th November was, with some modifications, accepted by the Persian Investment Corporation, and under the terms of the contract of adoption, the Persian Investment Corporation paid certain sums, out of which General Mikayl Khan, as assignee of the original concessionnaire, received, on the 14th December, a cheque for 20,000*l*., which was handed to him by the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate, and paid into Malcom Khan's private account at the Western Branch of the Bank of England, such further payment having been made on the faith of a written assurance from Malcom Khan, dated the 20th November, 1889, and addressed to the Solicitors of the Persian Investment Corporation, who were also acting for the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate, that "la dite Concession, signée et ratifiée par le Schah, est parfaitement correcte et inattaquable."

‡ No. 164.

The British claimants who applied for the support of Her Majesty's Government in urging upon the Persian Government their demands for compensation on account of the withdrawal of the Concession were the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate, the New Oriental Bank Corporation, and the Persian Investment Corporation. The Marquis of Salisbury, after consultation with the Law Officers of the Crown,* informed the first two-named Companies that the matter was not one in which Her Majesty's Government could interfere diplomatically, and that the proper remedy appeared to lie in bringing an action against General Mikayl Khan for the recovery of the sums paid to him on account of the Concession, the Persian Minister having given an assurance that, in the event of such legal proceedings being instituted, the Shah would not claim diplomatic privilege on behalf either of Prince Malcom Khan or of his brother, General Mikayl Khan. A communication of a similar nature was made to the Persian Investment Corporation, excepting that, as they had already instituted proceedings against General Mikayl Khan, they were told that their proper remedy appeared to lie in prosecuting the action which they had begun.

The Law Officers had, in their Report of the 12th March, 1891, stated that the claims of the New Oriental Bank Corporation and the Persian Investment Corporation were against the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate, and in the absence of any reason for believing that the Syndicate would fail to repay the money which it borrowed or received on a consideration which had wholly failed, the Law Officers considered that Her Majesty's Government should decline to recognize or put forward any claim on behalf of the Bank Corporation or the Persian Investment Corporation, but they advised that Her Majesty's Government should press upon the Persian Government the payment to the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate of the 40,000*l*. which it was clear that they had paid to General Mikayl Khan, and the second half of which sum would not have been paid but for the assurance given by the Persian Minister on the 20th November, 1889, above mentioned.

This recommendation that a claim should be made on the Persian Government seems to have been founded on the assumption that legal proceedings would fail owing to the diplomatic status of Malcom Khan and his brother, Mikayl, but Lord Salisbury did not see his way in any case to using pressure on the Persian Government, and on a further reference to the Law Officers (25th March), stating that the Persian Minister in London had given an assurance that the Shah would not claim diplomatic privilege on behalf of his late Minister, Malcom Khan, or his brother, Mikayl Khan, the Law Officers concurred (12th May, 1891) in an intimation to the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate to the effect of that which was made to them on the 26th May, 1891.

The action which was brought by the liquidators of the Persian Investment Corporation against Malcom Khan to recover the sum of 20,000*l*. received by him came before Mr. Justice Chitty in November (see "Times'" Law Reports "Times," 24th and 25th November), and, having taken time to consider, he eventually gave his decision on the case on the 14th March. A copy of the Judgment is inclosed herein.

You will observe that Mr. Justice Chitty held that Malcom Khan was substantially the concessionnaire, that either on the 5th or 8th December, 1889, in the interval between the purchase by the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate and the sale by the Syndicate to the Persian Investment Corporation the Concession was revoked by the Shah, as he had power to do by the law of Persia; that though Malcom Khan was aware of the revocation, the Persian Investment Corporation were not so until the month of August in the following year; that the contract of sale by the concessionnaire to the Syndicate was a valid contract; and that the subsequent revocation of the Concession did not void that contract; further, that Malcom Khan obtained the sum of 20,000*l*. after he knew that the Concession had been revoked, but that, in law, the Syndicate did owe that money to the concessionnaire.

The Persian Investment Corporation having failed in their action, now appeal to Her Majesty's Government to use their influence with the Shah to compensate them for the loss they have sustained through the conduct of Malcom Khan. They rest their claim on the following facts, viz., that Malcom Khan was Persian Minister when he sold the Concession, that he was privy to the formation of the Persian Investment Corporation for the purpose of selling the Concession to such Company when formed, and that, having received a direct official communication from his Government notifying that the Concession was cancelled, he suppressed the fact in order to obtain payment for the Concession, and, moreover, repeatedly stated that the Concession was valid; that the Corporation relied on his statements owing to his official character; and, further, that Mikayl Khan, a Director of the Company, who, being himself a member of the Persian Legation, was doubtless aware of the revocation of the Concession, joined with his brother in suppressing the fact of the revocation, and made every effort to induce the Corporation to complete the purchase, and pay the balance of the purchase-money.

The Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate, on the plea that the result of the action brought by the Persian Investment Corporation against Malcom Khan shows that nothing can be obtained in that quarter, have likewise appealed to Her Majesty's Government not only to cause their claim to be submitted to the Persian Government, but to support it with an intimation that the case is one in which common justice calls for compensation.

The letters which Lord Rosebery has received from the two Companies are inclosed herein, as well as the Law Officers' Reports relating to the Concession of the 5th December, 1889; 28th October, 1890; 12th March, 12th May, 3rd July, 6th August, 1891; 4th January and 4th November, 1892.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and favour Lord Rosebery with your opinion as to whether, having regard to the previous correspondence, to the circumstances of the case generally, and more particularly to the result of the legal proceedings lately concluded, any case has been established on behalf of the applicants which calls for the intervention of Her Majesty's Government, and, if so, on what grounds a representation to the Persian Government might most advantageously be based.

On the other hand, should you be of opinion that no case calling for such intervention has been established, Lord Rosebery (who, having regard to the nature of the Concession, shares Lord Salisbury's reluctance to bring diplomatic pressure to bear upon the Persian Government in the matter) will be glad if you would be kind enough to indicate, for his guidance in framing the terms of his reply to the applicants, such considerations of law as can most appropriately be adduced to them in justification of the refusal to press their claims upon the Persian Government.

His Lordship will, at the same time, be glad to be favoured with any general observations upon the present position and aspect of the case which you may have to offer for his assistance.

I have, &c.
(Signed) P. CURRIE.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, signified to us in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 5th instant, have the honour to

Report—

That, having regard to all the circumstances, we are of opinion that no case has been established which calls for diplomatic intervention.

The grounds on which Her Majesty's Government should justify their refusal to intervene are, we submit—

1. That the action of Malcom Khan was not in his character of Persian Minister;
2. That his Government were not interested in the payment made to him;
3. And that that Government has done nothing to shield him or his brother from the legal consequences of their action.

It is to be noted that the revocation of the Concession was urged upon the Persian Government by the Minister at Tehran of Great Britain. This fact may or may not be known to the applicants, and it may not be desirable to refer to it.

What may be the effect on Persian credit in this country of the withdrawal of the Concession without compensation is a matter which concerns the Persian Government only.

Persian Lottery Concession: further appeal of Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 11th instant, stating that, after considering our Report of the 17th ultimo respecting the claims of the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate and the Persian Investment Corporation in the matter of the Persian Lottery Concession, your Lordship had caused them to be informed that you had decided that no case had been established calling for diplomatic intervention on the part of Her Majesty's Government. That the reasons given by your Lordship were, as we had advised, that the action of Malcom Khan was not in his character of Persian Minister, and that his Government were not interested in the payment made to him, and did nothing to shield him or his brother from the legal consequences of their action.

That the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate had addressed a letter to the Foreign Office stating their reasons for dissenting from your Lordship's decision, and that Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would inform your Lordship whether there was anything in the letter from the Syndicate which induced us to alter, and, if so, to what extent and in what respects, the opinion given in our Report of the 17th ultimo.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

That we have considered the letter of the Syndicate of the 3rd July, but we see no reason to alter the views expressed in our Report of the 17th June. At the same time we see no objection, should your Lordship see fit so to do, to the complaint of the Syndicate being forwarded to the Government of the Shah through the Foreign Office. But we must add that, in our opinion, the case is clearly not one in which any pressure upon the Government of the Shah by Her Majesty's Government should be exercised.

PORTUGAL.

No. 32.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received March 24.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, March 23, 1893.

Right of Portugal to cede customs dues in Delagoa Bay to South African Repub.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the extent of the rights over Delagoa Bay which Portugal had power to concede.

That on the 25th September, 1872, a Protocol was signed between the British and Portuguese Governments by which they agreed to refer to the Arbitration and Award of the President of the French Republic their respective claims to certain territories formerly belonging to the Kings of Tembe and Mapoota, on the Eastern Coast of Africa, including the Islands of Imyack and Elephant, and now known as the Province of Delagoa Bay.

That the Award of the President (Marshal MacMahon) was pronounced on the 24th July, 1875, when he declared the Portuguese claims to be duly proved and established.

But that before the Award was declared a proposal was made by the British to the Portuguese Government that a mutual agreement should be entered into, to the effect that, whichever way the Award of the Arbitrator might be given, as regarded the right of sovereignty over the territories in dispute, the Power in whose favour the Award was made should not entertain any proposal for the acquisition of the said territory by any other Power until the defeated claimant should have an opportunity of making to the successful claimant a reasonable offer for the acquisition of that territory, either by purchase or for some other consideration.

That the Portuguese Government readily agreed to that, and, in a note of the 17th June, 1875, it gave the fullest assurance as to its determination of "not ceding to any third Power the territory, the possession of which might be secured for it in virtue of the Arbitration of Marshal MacMahon."

That since that time the Portuguese Government had granted numerous Concessions to Companies and individuals of lands, minerals, and privileges and immunities for the construction of railways and canals in the Province of Delagoa Bay. That though the granting of those Concessions had undoubtedly diminished the value of the property of which, according to the terms of the above-mentioned Agreement, Great Britain had in certain eventualities, as regarded other Powers, the right of preemption, your Lordship was disposed to think that, so long as such Concessions did not alienate sovereign rights, they did not contravene the provisions of that Agreement.

But that your Lordship was doubtful whether the alienation of any sovereign right, such, for instance, as the right of taxation, without previous notice and opportunity of acquirement of such right having been given to Her Majesty's Government, would not of itself amount to a contravention of the substance of the Agreement, as well as of its spirit and intention.

That it was clear that the alienation of sovereign attributes of that description, though falling short of that actual cession of territory which was specifically mentioned in the Agreement might most seriously prejudice the value of the preferential reversionary interests in the territory which it was the undoubted object of that Agreement to preserve to Great Britain, and might, if carried to any considerable extent, render the right of pre-emption of such territory, if and when it arose, a comparatively worthless privilege.

That the question was of practical importance, as it was possible that negotiations might be commenced between the Governments of Portugal and the South African Republic for the concession to the latter of the right to levy customs dues in the Province of Delagoa Bay.

That the concession of that right to the Transvaal would be highly injurious to the interests of the Cape Colony; and that it might be advisable to warn Portugal, if the right of objection existed, that Her Majesty's Government would consider it a contravention of the Agreement.

That Sir Philip Currie was, therefore, to request that we would take the matter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our view upon it at an early date.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

That the Agreement between the Powers is contained in the letters of the 14th and 17th June, 1875, and its effect is, that the Power successful in the Arbitration shall not entertain any proposal for the acquisition of the territory in question by any other Power until the unsuccessful Power has had the opportunity of making a reasonable offer for its acquisition.

The Portuguese Government, on its part, undertook to observe in the matter "a perfect loyalty to the British Government."

We are of opinion that, while it cannot be said that a concession to the South African Republic of the right to levy customs dues in the territory is a cession of the territory, it is clearly the concession of a sovereign right in relation to the territory, and goes to lessen the value of the territory. We think, therefore, that it is against the spirit of the Agreement, and may properly be made the subject of remonstrance. It is obvious that, in this way, the sovereign rights might be parted with one by one until the sovereignty of the territory ceased to be of any real value.

Seal Fishery (North Pacific) O. in C. and Admiralty instructions.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 29th June stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relating to the prohibition of sealing in certain zones in the North Pacific Ocean, as agreed upon between the British and Russian Governments.

That the correspondence laid before Parliament contained the terms of the Agreement with Russia, and that Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request our opinion whether the draft Order in Council which it was proposed to issue under the Act was such as might properly be submitted to Her Majesty in Council, and whether we concurred in the draft Admiralty instructions thereunder.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the matter into our consideration and have the honour to

Report—

That in our opinion the draft Order in Council, which we have initialled, may properly be submitted for the approval of Her Majesty in Council.

We concur in the draft Admiralty instructions initialled by us.

DRAFT ORDER IN COUNCIL.

WHEREAS by "The Seal Fishery (North Pacific) Act, 1893," it is enacted that Her Majesty the Queen may by Order in Council prohibit during the period specified by the Order the catching of seals by British ships in such parts of the seas to which that Act applies as are specified by the Order; and that for carrying into effect an arrangement with any foreign State an Order in Council may provide that such officers of that State as are specified in the Order may exercise the like powers under the Act as may be exercised by a commissioned officer on full pay in the naval service of Her Majesty in relation to a British ship and the equipment and crew and certificate thereof; and that any such Order may contain any limitations, conditions, qualifications, and exceptions which appear to Her Majesty in Council expedient for carrying into effect the object of the said Act:

And whereas the said Act applies to the seas within that part of the Pacific Ocean known as Behring's Sea, and within such other parts of the North Pacific Ocean as are north of the forty-second parallel of north latitude:

And whereas an arrangement has been made between Her Majesty the Queen and His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia, whereby British ships engaged in hunting seals within such parts of the said seas as are hereinafter specified may be seized by Russian cruizers:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, in virtue of the powers vested in her by the said recited Act, and of all other powers enabling her in that behalf, is hereby pleased, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. From and after the day of July, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-three, until the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-four, the catching of seals by British ships is hereby prohibited within such parts of the seas to which the recited Act applies as are comprised within the following zones, that is to say (i) a zone of 10 marine miles on all the Russian coasts of Behring Sea and the North Pacific Ocean, and (ii) a zone of 30 marine miles round the Komandorsky Islands and Tulénew (Robben Islands).

2. The powers which under the recited Act may be exercised by any commissioned officer on full pay in the naval service of Her Majesty may be exercised by the captain or other officer in command of any war vessel of His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia in relation to a British ship, and the equipment and crew and certificate thereof.

DRAFT ADMIRALTY INSTRUCTIONS.

IN accordance with an arrangement concluded between Great Britain and Russia on the 30th May, 1893, and in conformity with the powers vested in Her Majesty's Government by "The Seal Fishery (North Pacific) Act, 1893," and the Order in Council, dated (copies of which are attached), the following Regulations have been made:—

1. British cruizers are to co-operate with vessels of the Russian Imperial Navy or Government in preventing persons belonging to British ships from killing or hunting seals during the period and within the zones specified in the said Order in Council.

2. British ships likely to be affected should be warned that they will be liable to capture if found killing or hunting seals within those zones.

3. If any person belonging to a British ship kills, takes, hunts, or attempts to kill or take, any seal during the said period or within the said zones, or if any British ship, or the equipment or crew thereof, is or are used or employed in such killing, taking, hunting or attempt, a British or a Russian cruizer may stop and examine the ship.

4. Where the Commander of a British cruizer stops and examines a ship, he should draw up and sign a statement in writing of the circumstances under which and the grounds on which he stopped and examined the ship. If evidence contained in the statement be taken on oath in the presence of the person charged in the evidence, and the person so charged has an opportunity of cross-examining the person giving the evidence, and of making his reply to the evidence, the commander should certify that the evidence was so taken, and that there was such opportunity of cross-examining and of making a reply.

5. If the Commander of a British cruizer decides to seize the ship, he is to take her for adjudication to one of the specified ports, that is to say, either Yokohama or Shanghae, or a British colonial port at which there is a competent Court. In ordinary cases, the most convenient port will be Yokohama.

6. Instead of seizing the ship, the Commander of the British cruizer may, if he thinks fit, either retain the certificate and give a provisional certificate in lieu thereof, or return the certificate with an indorsement of the grounds on which it was seized, and in either case may direct the ship by an addition to the provisional certificate, or to the indorsement, to proceed forthwith to one of the specified ports to be named in the certificate or indorsement. Forms of provisional certificate and of indorsement are sent herewith.

7. Where the Commander of a British cruizer seizes or indorses a ship's certificate, he should on the first opportunity send the certificate or copy of the indorsement, and also the above-mentioned statement and the witnesses, to the specified port, addressing the documents to the proper officer there. The proper officer will be the British Consul if the specified port is Yokohama or Shanghae, and the Collector of Customs if it is a colonial port.

8. The Commander of a Russian cruizer authorized by the Order in Council to stop and examine a British ship will be instructed at the first opportunity (where feasible) to hand over the ship and documents, or the documents, as the case may be, to a British cruizer or other British authority.

9. Where the Commander of a British cruizer receives such ship and documents, or such documents from a Russian cruizer, he is to proceed in like manner as if he had himself stopped and examined the ship.

10. Where the Commander of a British ship either seizes a ship or deals with her certificate as above directed, or receives a British ship from a Russian cruizer, all the equipment for sealing is to be removed from the ship, and taken or sent to the proper officer at the port to which the ship is taken or sent for adjudication.

11. In any case, the Commander of a British cruizer is to record the name of every ship in respect of which he performs any act hereinbefore directed or authorized, and of her master, and he is at the first opportunity to inform the Commander-in-chief of the action taken by him.

12. In the event of a British Agent visiting the Komandorsky Islands and Robben Island to confer with the authorities there, and to inquire into the working of the arrangement, British cruizers are to co-operate with the said Agent, and to give him any assistance in their power.

13. It is to be understood that these Regulations do not apply to those parts of the zones which consist of Russian territorial waters, and that within those waters the Government of Russia will alone exercise jurisdiction.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received November 3.)

[After reciting the following reference, the Law Officers report as on p. 64:—]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, September 16, 1893.

Gentlemen,

Seizure of Brit. sealers by Russians in Behring Sea.

WITH reference to your letter of the 23rd November last relative to the seizure by Russian Government vessels in Behring Sea of certain British sealing-vessels, I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Rosebery, further correspondence on this subject noted in the accompanying list.

The first paper, marked (A), is a despatch from Sir R. Morier, Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh, inclosing a copy of the note which, in accordance with your advice, his Excellency addressed to the Russian Government on this subject on the 29th November last.

The Russian reply to this note (inclosure in Paper B) is accompanied by two Reports of the Special Commission appointed by the Emperor of Russia to examine the question. The first of these Reports has reference to the complaints made by the crews of some of the sealers of ill-treatment while on their way to Petropaulovski and during their detention at that place. The Report states that these complaints are not justified by the facts, and that if the aggrieved parties are not satisfied they can, in the ordinary course of law, seek redress either from the superior naval authorities or through the competent Tribunals.

The second Report contains a detailed examination of the circumstances under which the vessels and their boats were seized, and examines the legality of the captures. In regard to this latter question, the Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs observes:—

"In considering the legality of the captures effected by the Commanders of the Russian cruisers, and by the District Governor of the Commander Islands, the Commission was guided by a principle the justice and equity of which cannot be disputed. It recognized as lawful seizures all vessels whose boats were seen or captured in our territorial waters. It cannot, indeed, be denied that the boats constitute, juridically, an appendage of the schooner to which they belong; consequently, their seizure in territorial waters renders the capture of the vessels, of which they in some respects form part, perfectly legal. If it were otherwise, a schooner could with impunity pursue seals on the coasts by sending her boats there, and thus infringe the inviolability of territorial waters, although herself remaining outside the said waters."

Applying this principle to the case of the six captured schooners, the Commission, whose view is adopted by the Russian Government, consider that the seizure of four of them, the "Marie," "Rosie Olsen," "Carmolite," and "Vancouver Belle," must be recognized as legal, inasmuch as the evidence that their respective canoes captured seals, either actually in the rookeries or within the 3-mile limit, was conclusive. On the other hand, though they maintain that the circumstantial evidence was equally conclusive against the "Willie McGowan" and "Ariel," yet, as the canoes of these vessels had not been actually seen within the territorial waters, the Russian Government state that they are ready to entertain the question of indemnifying their owners and crews.

Sir R. Morier's despatch was referred to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, and it will be seen from his Lordship's reply, which is herewith inclosed (Paper C), that he entertains serious doubts whether the procedure of the Russian Government, or the conclusions they have arrived at with regard to these seizures, are in accordance with established rules of international law.

Lord Ripon further observes that there is much uncertainty as to the facts connected with the seizure of these schooners, and points out that the evidence upon which the Russian Commissioners rely, and which in every case they take as conclusive, is simply the ex parte and apparently unsworn statements of the captors of the vessels, whose own conduct is being investigated; that that evidence has not been furnished to Her Majesty's Government, and was given in the absence of all persons in any way connected with the vessel seized, and apparently without any cross-examination whatever, but with the full knowledge of the evidence of Her Majesty's Government, so that it is not testimony to which primâ facie much weight can be attached. To bear out this view, his Lordship incloses copy of a Memorandum (Inclosure 2 in Paper C) which has been prepared in the Colonial Office on the Report of the Commission, and from which it will be seen that not only does the account given of the various seizures differ wholly from that contained in the affidavits submitted by Her Majesty's Government, but that it is inconsistent with itself and with the earlier official accounts given by the Russian Government. A further Memorandum on the position of the vessels when seized is inclosed in a later letter from the Colonial Office (Paper F).

Under these circumstances, Lord Ripon was of opinion that the claims for compensation should be again pressed upon the Russian Government, but suggested that, before this was done, the papers should be referred to the Canadian Minister of Marine and Fisheries for an expression of his views as to the course to be followed.

Mr. Tupper, in his reply to this reference (Paper D), observes that the Report of the Russian Commission upon the seizure of these vessels certainly reveals strong contradiction between the affidavits the British subjects forwarded to Her Majesty's Government and the statement of facts supplied to and accepted by the Commission, and that there are many circumstances detailed in that document which render the account given by it untrustworthy and unsatisfactory.

The facts in dispute could not, however, in his opinion, be settled by an appeal, either to the affidavits on one side or to the ex parte evidence on the other.

He therefore suggests that the Russian Government should be requested:—

1. To supply the Protocols containing the circumstance of the seizure of the "Olsen," "Marie," "Carmolite," "Vancouver Belle," and of the boats of the "W. P. Sayward."

2. To give permission to inspect and take copies of the logs and charts of the foregoing vessels.

3. To furnish Reports on the courses of the "Zabiaka," "Vitiaz," and "Kotik," together with copies of the evidence given by the Commanders of those vessels before the Commission.

He thinks that, so soon as this information has been obtained, a proposition should be made to the Russian Government for the constitution of a Joint Commission to take evidence, both in Canada and Russia, touching the facts in dispute, so that in the event of the Governments not being able to agree after consideration of the evidence so taken, the evidence might be referred to arbitration, and the various points in difference so settled.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Rosebery with your opinion—

1. As to the correctness of the principles of international law on which the Russian Government based their assertion that the seizure of four of these vessels was legal;

2. Whether there are sufficient primâ facie grounds for continuing to press on the Russian Government the claims for compensation for these four vessels; and

3. Whether as a first step, and with a view to subsequent examination by a Joint Commission, the documents enumerated by Mr. C. Tupper should be obtained from the Russian Government.

Lord Rosebery would also be glad to receive any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

Your former Report on this subject and the papers which were originally submitted to you are inclosed for convenience of reference.

I am, &c.

We have taken the papers transmitted to us with Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 16th September last into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That the facts as represented by the Russian Government on the one side and by the Canadian sealers on the other are contradictory in some material points, as appears from the criticism of the facts made by Mr. Anderson in his Memorandum of the 30th June, 1893, and we agree with his conclusion that the Russian Government should at once be asked for the Protocols containing the circumstances of the seizure of the "Rosie Olsen," "Marie," "Carmolite," and "Vancouver Belle," and for an inspection of the logs and charts of these vessels upon which the cases against them are built up, and for the reports on the courses of the "Zabiaka," "Vitiaz," and "Kotik." As to the Canadian Government, they ought also to be asked for further information, and particularly as to the boats of the "Rosie Olsen" and "Marie."

We suggest that Mr. Anderson be asked to prepare in relation to each seizure, and in the form of a schedule with three columns, a concise statement of the facts as represented (first column) by the Russian Government, (second column) by the Canadian sealers, and a third column for further observations.

There appear to be three main questions of principle involved, namely:—

(1) In what cases may a vessel which has committed an offence within territorial waters be captured outside such waters;

(2) May the boats of a vessel be regarded as forming part of the vessel; and

(3) Is a seizure in non-territorial waters made on suspicion of an offence within such waters justifiable if the subsequent search affords evidence of the offence having been committed.

With reference to the first question, we think such an offending vessel can only be arrested if there has been a hot and continuous pursuit from the time of the offence to the time of the arrest, and that the pursuit cannot properly be described as hot and continuous unless it has been carried on, so that (apart from any evidence found upon arrest) there can be no reasonable doubt that the vessel arrested was the one that committed the offence.

It appears at least doubtful whether the Russian Government clearly recognize this principle.

With respect to the second question, we think, for the purposes of the present case, the boats of a vessel which commit an offence render the vessel herself liable to seizure for such offence whenever it appears that the boats were acting with the consent, express or implied, of the master of the vessel, and provided that the pursuit of such vessel be hot and continuous.

It does not seem to us that the Russian Government substantially take a different view, but M. Chichkine's reference to this principle is perhaps rather loose.

With reference to the third question, we think Her Majesty's Government cannot be advised to admit the principle that vessels may be searched on suspicion, and that seizures may be justified by the result of the search.

No doubt by Convention such rights of search are in special cases allowed, as, for instance, in the Conventions relating to the Slave Trade, and the results of such search may justify the seizure, but this principle cannot, apart from Convention, be admitted.

If, however, the Government of Her Majesty is satisfied that the offending vessel had committed offences against a friendly Power, it would be a matter of policy for the Government to determine how far it ought to throw its shield to protect offenders. This is a principle of policy which largely affects, for example, international dealing in relation to the Hovering Acts.

We think that in the further communications to the Russian Government the points we have referred to should be taken.

The practical result is that until fuller information is had the claims in respect of none of the seizures should at present be abandoned.

When further information is obtained it will probably be necessary to discriminate between the cases, but as the evidence at present stands the seizures of the "Carmolite" and the "Vancouver Belle" were not, in our opinion, justifiable.

When the desired fuller information is obtained, it must then be determined whether a Commission of Inquiry should be demanded, and, if so, in relation to what cases.

French Blockade of coast of Siam. Course H.M.'s Govt. should pursue.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 28th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to request our opinion on the course proper to be followed in regard to the blockade of the coast of Siam by the French naval forces, which had just been proclaimed.

That the circumstances were as follows:—

That the ultimatum presented by the French Government to that of Siam on the 20th instant stated that, in the event of its terms not being accepted within forty-eight hours, the French Minister would leave, and the coast of Siam would forthwith be blockaded.

That the answer of the Siamese Government not being deemed satisfactory, the French Minister announced his intention of leaving on the 26th instant.

That late on the evening of the 24th instant the French Minister at this Court made a verbal notification to your Lordship of the intention of the French Government to institute a blockade of the Siamese coast.

That, in reply to inquiries made by Her Majesty's Embassy at Paris as to the intended extent and conditions of the blockade, the answer was given, as recorded in the inclosed despatch from Lord Dufferin, that the earliest information would be conveyed to Her Majesty's Government as soon as those points were settled.

That in the course of the 27th instant a telegram was received from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris stating that the blockade would be put into force on the 31st July. That the authority for such statement was not given, but that it was conceived that the intimation was received from the French Government. That on that subject further explanations had been requested.

That late yesterday evening telegrams, of which copies were annexed, were received from Her Majesty's Minister at Bangkok and from the Senior Naval Officer at Singapore, the first reporting that a blockade had been notified by the French Naval Commander, beginning at 5 P.M. on the 26th instant; the second stating that an effective blockade had been declared from 5 P.M. of the 28th instant.

That in both telegrams it was added that the blockade comprised the Siamese coast between Chulai and Lemprabang (? Lem Krabang), and that three days were allowed for neutral vessels to leave the coast.

That the telegram which appeared in the "Times" of the 28th instant stated that the blockade was proclaimed as beginning from 5 o'clock on the 26th instant.

That it was presumed from the several announcements above referred to that the blockade was a regular blockade jure gentium, that, as such, it implied a state of war between France and Siam, and could only be accepted by Her Majesty's Government on those conditions.

That it was further believed that the authoritative document for the institution of such a blockade was, according to international practice, the proclamation of the Commander of the blockading force.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether Her Majesty's Government could properly, under the circumstances, recognize the blockade as effective, and, if so, from what date, and what notification should be made for the information of British subjects.

We have considered the matter, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

1. That if under a so-called pacific blockade it is proposed by France to treat neutral vessels as liable to capture and condemnation, Her Majesty's Government are justified in intimating to the Government of France that they regard such blockade formally notified as constituting a state of belligerency.

We therefore think the proposed telegram to Lord Dufferin, as settled in conference with the Attorney-General, and initialled by us, is one proper to be communicated to the French Government. It will be well to refer Lord Dufferin to the correspondence in 1884-85 re Formosa, and we have done so in the draft herewith.

2. The question of the effectiveness of the blockade, which is one of fact, does not at present arise.

3. If the French Government persist in asserting the right to treat neutral vessels as liable to capture and condemnation, notification of the blockade, and that it must be respected by British nationals, should be made by the Representatives of Her Majesty's Government in Siam, and, if necessary, Lord Dufferin should ask for an extension of time to allow British vessels loading in the blockaded area to clear.

4. The blockade operates from the date fixed by the notification; but it is usual—and neutrals have a right to expect—that a reasonable time shall be afforded after notification in order to clear, and in like manner vessels bonâ fide proceeding without notice to the blockaded port ought to be exempt from seizure.

GOVERNOR of Singapore telegraphs that French Consul announces to him expected arrival of French cruizer "Papin." Governor asks for instructions in view of announcement of blockade.

If under so-called pacific blockade it is proposed to treat neutral vessels as liable to capture and condemnation, we cannot fail to consider such blockade with formal notification as constituting a state of belligerency.

In such circumstances it would seem that our duty as neutrals would impose upon us the necessity of placing the customary restrictions on the hospitality to be afforded to French vessels of war visiting British ports, especially those in proximity to the blockaded coast.

French blockade of Siam. Validity of Pacific blockades against neutrals.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 12th September last, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 28th July, 1893, relative to the blockade of the Siamese coast which the French Government had decided on instituting, but which was subsequently abandoned on the acceptance by Siam of the French ultimatum, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us copies of further correspondence on the subject, ending with a note from the French Minister for Foreign Affairs to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris (see Lord Dufferin's despatch No. 342 of the 4th August), in which his Excellency explained and defended the course taken by the French Government, and cited various instances of alleged pacific blockades as supporting the doctrine that such blockades were valid as against neutrals.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to inclose a Memorandum on those precedents, drawn up by the Librarian of the Foreign Office, together with several previous Memoranda by the same gentleman on the subject, and a copy of a Blue Book containing the correspondence between Earl Granville and M. Waddington in 1885 on the subject of the French blockade of Formosa.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was further to inclose a draft of a despatch which your Lordship proposed to address to the Marquis of Dufferin criticizing the precedents quoted by M. Develle, setting forth the views of Her Majesty's Government on the question of pacific blockades, adducing the opinions of various writers in support of that view, and pointing out more especially the objections that would have attached to the blockade of the Siamese coast which had been contemplated by the French Government.

That the question was somewhat complicated by the course taken jointly by the French and English Governments in regard to the blockade of La Plata in 1846, respecting which Sir Thomas Sanderson was to refer us to Mr. W. E. Hall's "Treatise on International Law" (p. 371, 5th edition), and to Calvo's "Droit International" (vol. iii, p. 555, § 1859).

That the decisions of the French Courts had been in accordance with the views of their Executive (see Fauchille, "Du Blocus Maritime," p. 43; Calvo, "Droit International," 4th edition, 1888, vol. iii, p. 538, § 1840).

That the statement made in Bluntschli's "Droit International Codifié" (p. 297, § 507), that on the 1st March, 1848, the French Conseil d'État had pronounced against the confiscation of neutral vessels in time of peace, appeared to be erroneous. That the decision given by the Conseil d'État was dated the 25th March, 1848, and was to be found in Pistoye and Duverdy's "Traité des Prises," vol. i, p. 390. That it related to the case of the vessel "Comte-de-Thomar," and that it was to the effect that, as the vessel was not liable to confiscation for breach of blockade, no sufficient notice having been given, the contraband of war on board of her was not liable to seizure, since war had not been declared.

That it was doubtful, therefore, whether the assertion in Earl Granville's note to M. Waddington of the 11th November, 1884, that the contention of the French Government was opposed to the decisions of its Tribunals, was accurate; and that it seemed necessary to base the arguments against the admissibility of a pacific blockade directed against neutral commerce mainly on general considerations, and on the opinions of text writers.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the draft to Lord Dufferin and the collection of quotations from various authorities, which formed an inclosure to it, were correct in point of law, and formed a proper and sufficient reply to M. Develle's note; and whether they could with advantage be modified or supplemented in any, and if so, in what, particulars.

That your Lordship would also be glad to be favoured with any general observations which might occur to us in regard to the question.

We were also honoured with Sir Thomas Sanderson's note of the 21st September inclosing a further despatch from Captain Jones (No. 33 of the 15th August, 1893).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to

Report—

That we have carefully considered the various papers and the authorities referred to in Paper 1, together with the proposed draft despatch to the Marquis of Dufferin. On p. 2 of the latter we suggest the alterations which there appear in red ink.*

The substitution of the general words "interfere with" for the words "capture and condemn" seems to us desirable because the British position is that British ships cannot in any way be affected by a so-called pacific blockade, and there are other methods (for example, provisional and temporary detention) by which the ships and commerce of third nations might be injured.

The substitution further of "may properly be regarded" for "can only be recognized" also seems to us desirable, as cases may arise in which the third nation may not find it desirable to insist on the existence of a state of belligerency. With these alterations we think the proposed draft despatch is correct in law, and is a proper and sufficient reply to the note of M. Develle.

As to the collection of authorities, we suggest (if it is thought proper to send them) that the citation from Pistoye et Duverdy and from Perels may with advantage be omitted; but we suggest for your Lordship's consideration whether they should be sent at all. In our opinion it is better they should not.

We have, &c.

*Draft of Despatch from the Earl of Rosebery to the Marquis of Dufferin.

(No. .)

My Lord,

Foreign Office, , 1893.

HER Majesty's Government have had under their careful consideration the note from M. Develle, inclosed in your Excellency's despatch No. 342 of the 4th ultimo, with regard to the blockade of the Siamese coast which the French Government had intended to enforce in order to obtain compliance with their demands on Siam.

Your Excellency was informed by the French Government that this blockade would commence on the 31st July. M. Develle states that the notification by the French Admiral that the blockade had begun on the 26th of that month could only be the result of a misapprehension of the orders sent by the Ministry of Marine. I presume that the same observation applies to the subsequent notification issued by the Admiral that the blockade commenced from the 29th; and that any interference with neutral shipping that may have taken place previous to the 31st instant was unauthorized.

M. Develle then goes on to reply to the observation made by your Excellency that the establishment of such a blockade without any declaration of war raises an important question of international law. His Excellency states that although in view of the immediate raising of the blockade the question has no longer any practical interest, yet that such a measure constitutes a method of coercion to which a State has the right to have recourse, without rupture of peace, in order to recall another Power to the observance of its international duties, and he proceeds to cite various instances which, in his opinion, support that doctrine.

The views of Her Majesty's Government on this subject were stated in the correspondence which took place between Earl Granville and M. Waddington in 1884 respecting the French blockade of the Island of Formosa, and they have undergone no modification. Her Majesty's Government do not ~~of course~~ deny the right of a State to resort to a blockade as a means of coercion while refraining from other hostile measures. This is a measure of reprisal. But they maintain that if the blockading Power claims ~~to capture and condemn~~ to interfere with the ships of third nations ~~for breach of such a blockade,~~ the measure ~~can only be recognized~~ may properly be regarded by such third nations as an act of belligerency implying the existence of a state of war.

On examination of the several instances referred to by M. Develle, it will be found that they do not in reality make against this view, but, on the contrary, tend to support it.

The measure to which England, France, and Russia had recourse against Turkey in 1827 was not a blockade, nor was any Proclamation of blockade issued. Instructions were sent to the Admirals of the three Powers to place their squadron in such positions as would intercept all ships having on board troops, arms, ammunition, &c., for the use of the Turkish forces employed against the Greeks. But the Admirals were specially directed to abstain from causing any interruption to the regular commerce of neutrals with any of the ports of Turkey or of Greece, though occupied by the Turks.

Neither, as far as Her Majesty's Government are aware, was any formal blockade of the Tagus notified or instituted by France in 1831. Certain demands of reparation made by France on Portugal having been refused, a French squadron was sent to the Tagus with a more formal renewal of the demands; the answer being still unsatisfactory, the French squadron resorted to reprisals by the detention of all Portuguese merchant-vessels entering the Tagus, and by seizing two Portuguese ships of war encountered at sea. These vessels were subsequently released, and neutral commerce was not interfered with.

1893

The blockades of the coast of New Granada by England in 1836, of the ports of Mexico by France in 1838, and of Buenos Ayres in 1838, 1840, 1845, and 1848, were undoubtedly blockades without a formal declaration of war. This fact, however, does not in any way prove that those blockades could properly and legally have been enforced against the vessels of other Powers otherwise than as belligerent measures, placing such Powers in the position of neutrals. And it must be borne in mind that a formal declaration of war is by no means necessary to constitute a state of belligerency, which is a question of fact, and must be decided on the evidence of facts. For example, the British blockade of Dahomey in 1876 was instituted after nearly four months' notice had been given, in order to interfere as little as possible with neutral commerce. But it appears to have been a regular belligerent blockade.

That the opinion of a majority of the best writers on international law, including several eminent French authorities, is adverse to the view maintained by the French Government will be shown by the series of quotations which forms an inclosure to this despatch.

As regards the recent practice of Great Britain and other Powers in this matter, I may instance the course taken in 1850 by the British Government to enforce the demands made by it on Greece.

A blockade of the Greek ports was instituted, applying only to Greek vessels, which were prohibited from leaving Greek ports. Many Greek vessels were seized, but the prohibition did not extend to vessels of other Powers.

Similarly, in 1886 certain Greek ports were blockaded by the naval forces of Great Britain, Austria, Germany, and Italy, but only against the ingress and egress of Greek vessels. Moreover, special instructions were sent to the Naval Commanders that even vessels under the Greek flag were not to be detained if any part of the cargo should belong to a subject or citizen of a foreign Power other than Greece or one of the blockading Powers, and should have been shipped before notification of the blockade or under a charter signed before that notification.

These two cases afford instances of what Her Majesty's Government consider to be really "pacific blockades," being in the nature of reprisals directed solely against the commerce and shipping of the offending Power.

But it is scarcely necessary to point out how absolutely the blockade which was contemplated by the French Government, but has happily been unnecessary, would have differed from such a measure.

The Returns of the shipping which entered and cleared from the port of Bangkok in 1892 show a total tonnage of 420,890 tons, of which Siamese shipping counted for only 1,968 tons, or less than one-half per cent., while the British shipping amounted to no less that 356,909 tons, or about 87 per cent. of the whole. The value of the imports and exports carried in British vessels formed respectively 93 and 85 per cent. of the total traffic of the port.

The blockade, therefore, while adopted as a measure for the coercion of Siam, would, in the first instance, have principally affected British commerce.

It is noteworthy that Bangkok and the valley of the Menam are in no way dependent on foreign trade for their supply of food or actual necessaries of life. The staple of the imports consists in cotton goods, hardware, and oil, while there is a yearly export of rice to the value of nearly 1,000,000*l.*, a large portion of which goes to supply the British Colonies of Hong Kong and the Straits Settlements. The sudden interruption of all this trade would no doubt have produced considerable financial disturbance, and it would naturally and necessarily have caused much irritation and resentment in this country and in the Colonies affected by it. But the blockade might have been persisted in for a long time without reducing the Siamese to any such condition of distress as would necessitate the acceptance of conditions to which they were determinedly opposed.

Her Majesty's Government know of no similar instance of a measure instituted under the name of a pacific blockade, but depending for its whole effect on the injury caused to the trade of a third and neutral country. It would have been impossible for them to have recognized it as valid against British shipping except as a belligerent measure implying a state of war, or to have allowed the hospitality of neighbouring British ports to be extended to French vessels of war while it lasted, except in cases of urgency and distress. Any other course would have been tantamount to allowing these ports to be used as a base for hostile operations, directed mainly against British commerce, for the purpose of exercising compulsion on a friendly State. In the interests of the friendly relations between the two countries, which both Governments have at heart, it appears to them to be most fortunate that circumstances allowed of the blockade being abandoned almost at the moment that it was instituted.

Your Excellency will read this despatch to M. Develle, and hand him a copy of it.

I am, &c.

Pistoye et Duverdy: " Traité des Prises Maritimes," vol. I, p. 377.

Or, pour nous, qui considérons la réalité des choses, qui ne reconnaissons les blocus que lorsqu'ils sont réels et effectifs, la guerre existe lorsqu'un blocus réel et effectif est établi contre une nation. En effet, l'établissement d'un blocus, étant l'emploi de la force par une Puissance contre une autre Puissance, est un acte d'hostilité qui constitue un état de guerre, l'une contre l'autre, la nation bloquante et la nation bloquée. Il arrive souvent qu'une Puissance de premier ordre, lorsqu'elle a à demander une satisfaction d'une Puissance secondaire, se borne à bloquer ses ports sans lui déclarer positivement la guerre. On n'a pas déclaré la guerre, mais on la fait réellement; seulement, comme on est le plus fort on n'emploie pas tous les moyens d'attaque dont on pourrait disposer; on ne fait la guerre que dans la mesure de ses convenances.

Testa: " Droit Public International," pp. 228, 229.

. . . . Nous voulons parler des blocus pacifiques établis sans déclaration de guerre préalable et tandis que les relations de paix continuent ostensiblement.

En 1827 l'Angleterre, la France, et la Russie bloquaient les côtes de la Grèce et déterminaient la bataille de Navarin sans déclaration de guerre.

Plus tard, en 1838, les forces navales Françaises et Anglaises établissaient un blocus pacifique qui se prolongea pendant plus de dix années consécutives devant les ports de la République Argentine en se déclarant toujours en paix avec cet État. La même année la France agissait de même à l'égard des ports du Mexique.

Ce genre de blocus, établi à titre de représailles ou dans le but d'obtenir l'acquiescement à des exigences formulées, ne peut être regardé comme légal; il renferme une anomalie, il constitue un véritable acte de guerre incompatible avec l'état de paix. Il est un véritable attentat contre l'indépendance des nations. . . . . Il n'y a donc qu'une seule espèce de blocus. . . . .

Hautefeuille: " Droits et Devoirs des Nations Neutres," vol. II, pp. 276, 277.

Si, considéré sous cet aspect, le blocus ne peut exister sans la guerre, il le peut encore moins si on l'envisage sous le point de vue des droits et devoirs des peuples pacifiques. La navigation et le commerce sont absolument libres pour tous les peuples du monde. Tous ont le droit de faire, en temps de paix, tel trafic qui leur convient avec tous les peuples de l'univers; la seule condition est d'obtenir le consentement de celui avec lequel l'échange doit avoir lieu. Une tierce nation ne peut jamais, sans se rendre coupable d'un grave attentat, mettre obstacle au commerce de deux peuples. Dans le système de blocus pacifique, le bloquant est en paix avec le bloqué et avec le navigateur qui se présente pour entrer dans le port; ce dernier veut faire le commerce, le second y consent; comment le troisième peut-il s'y opposer? De quel droit peut-il imposer sa volonté aux deux autres? Son devoir impérieux est de respecter d'une manière absolue l'indépendance de tous les peuples avec lesquels il est en paix; il n'a pas, il ne peut avoir le droit de dicter des lois aux étrangers qui ne sont pas soumis à sa juridiction. D'un autre côté, le droit des deux autres est d'agir avec une pleine indépendance, sans s'inquiéter des volontés du troisième.

Cette opposition au commerce que deux nations libres veulent faire entre elles est donc une violation des devoirs de celui qui l'élève, une violation des droits de celles contre lesquelles elle est élevée. Cette conclusion est incontestable; elle dérive de tous les principes du droit international, soit primitif, soit secondaire.

Et ce que je viens de dire est vrai d'une simple opposition, d'un obstacle mis à la liberté commerciale des peuples, en temps de paix; il sera bien plus vrai encore, lorsque, comme en matière de blocus, il s'agit d'une opposition avec sanction pénale, avec saisie, arrestation et condamnation comme bonne prise, des navires qui traversent pacifiquement le territoire maritime d'un peuple avec lequel leur Souverain est en paix, et qui consent à les recevoir. En temps de paix il ne peut y avoir lieu à saisie, à arrestation, à condamnation de navires étrangers, si ce n'est pour fait de contrebande commerciale.

Negrin: " Tratado Elemental de Derecho Internacional," Cap. XII, p. 209.

. . . . Los bloqueos llamados pacificos son absolutamente inadmisibles. En efecto, en tésis general, el comercio y la navegacion son libres. Esta libertad absoluta en tiempo de paz no puede ser coartada sino al surgir la guerra, cuyo nuevo estado divide á las naciones en neutrales y beligerantes, concediendo á unas y otras ciertos derechos y deberes correlativos: á las Potencias en guerra el derecho de bloqueo, á las naciones neutras el deber de respetarlo. Se no lo hacen, se convierten en enemigas, y pueden ser tratadas como tales; pero es indispensable para esto que exista préviamente la causa que les impose la obligacion, en una palabra, la guerra solemnemente declarada y notificada por la via diplomática.

F. de Martens: " Traité de Droit International," vol. III, p. 165.

Les navires ne doivent être en aucun cas séquestrés, ni encore moins confisqués, pour avoir violé un blocus établi en temps de paix. Seuls les navires de l'Etat bloqué sont susceptibles d'être capturés. . . . .

Le blocus pacifique n'est admissible qu'autant que ses effets n'atteignent que les navires de l'État bloqué.

Geffcken: " Le Blocus Pacifique" (" Revue de Droit International," vol. 19, 1887, pp. 378, 380).

Maintenant, le blocus pacifique, peut-il être considéré comme un acte de représailles? . . . . D'abord il semble évident que fermer un port d'un État à tout commerce est un acte hostile d'une tout autre portée que de mettre un embargo sur quelques bâtiments ou un séquestre sur des terres ou des capitaux. . . . .

L'état de guerre ne donne pas seulement des droits, mais impose aussi des devoirs et des responsabilités. Le droit des gens accorde certains droits aux belligérants, auxquels les neutres doivent se soumettre. . . . . Mais pour se prévaloir de ces avantages il faut accepter les devoirs, les charges, la responsabilité qu'entraîne l'état de guerre; on ne peut pas séparer l'un de l'autre, et exercer les droits sans accepter les charges. . . . .

Si l'on a des raisons de ne pas déclarer la guerre à un État dont on se croit lésé, il n'y a pas de neutres, et si on veut simplement user de représailles on n'a aucun droit d'imposer à des États tiers une loi que le belligérant seul a le droit d'appliquer. La distinction que l'on a établie et généralement observée, qu'avec le blocus pacifique on ne saisit pas les bâtiments étrangers, mais qu'on les empêche seulement d'entrer ou de sortir, n'y fait rien; le seul acte d'interdiction est un préjudice pour leur commerce auquel ils ne sont nullement tenus de se soumettre.

Calvo: "Le Droit International, &c.," vol. III, pp. 554, 555, 557.

Tout d'abord, le blocus pacifique nous semble un acte incontestablement agressif, hostile, et portant gravement atteinte aux droits imprescriptibles de tout État indépendant; en un mot, un acte de guerre. . . . .

Au reste, conformément à la pratique de 1886, le blocus ne s'exercerait que sur les navires de la nation bloquée, pleine liberté étant laissée aux navires des neutres. Une autre pratique qu'a établi ce même blocus et que nous admettons comme règle, c'est que les navires de la nation bloquée ne sont plus confisqués ou saisis, mais simplement détenus jusqu'à la solution du conflit.

Bluntschli: "Le Droit International Codifié," § 507, p. 296.

Les États neutres ne reconnaissent pas la validité des prises, lorsque le blocus maritime n'est pas en même temps blocus de guerre; ils ont dans ce cas le droit d'exiger pour les navires neutres la libre entrée et la libre sortie.

1. Le blocus maritime qui n'est pas en même temps blocus de guerre apporterait, si on lui accordait une portée universelle, de nombreuses entraves au commerce des neutres avec la côte bloquée. Les États neutres ont donc pleinement le droit d'exiger que ces blocus pacifiques aient une portée aussi restreinte que possible. Les blocus sont un moyen coercitif employé contre l'État qui s'est rendu coupable d'un acte injuste; mais on n'a pas le droit d'user de contrainte envers les neutres. Les principes plus sévères admis en droit international envers les neutres, sur les blocus et les prises maritimes, ne se justifient qu'en temps de guerre; en temps de paix ils ne sauraient être admis Les villes Hanséatiques réclamèrent en 1838 contre le blocus du Mexique par les Français, et le 1er Mars, 1848, le Conseil d'État Français se prononça contre la confiscation des navires neutres en temps de paix.

Fiore: "Trattado di Diritto Internazionale," II, 499.

Laonde le conseguenze del blocco pacifico dovrebbero essere limitate tra i due Stati in conflitto e non dovrebbero riflettere gli Stati neutrali, i quali potranno godere tutti i diritti che si esercitano durante la pace senza alcuna limitazione.

W. E. Hall: "A Treatise on International Law," 3rd Edition, pp. 370-272.

Between blockades so different in their incidents there is little in common. With regard to those under which vessels of third Powers are condemned, or even sequestrated, the question arises whether a State in time of peace can endeavour to obtain redress from a second State for actual or supposed injuries by means which inflict loss and inconvenience upon other countries. In England, at any rate, it was soon thought not. In 1846 Lord Palmerston said, in writing to Lord Normanby, the Ambassador at Paris, with reference to the blockade of La Plata:—

"The real truth is, though we had better keep the fact to ourselves, that the French and English blockade of the Plata has been from first to last illegal. Peel and Aberdeen have always declared that we have not been at war with Rosas: but blockade is a belligerent right, and, unless you are at war with a State, you have no right to prevent ships of other States from communicating with the ports of that State; nay, you cannot prevent your own merchant-ships from doing so. I think it important, therefore, in order to legalize retrospectively the operations of the blockade, to close the matter by a formal Convention of Peace with the two Powers and Rosas."

To this language there is nothing to add, except an expression of surprise that the subject could ever have presented itself to any mind in a different light. No State can expect another to submit to annoyance, still less to loss, for its mere convenience.

It is only under the supreme necessities of war, when the gain or loss of belligerent States is wholly out of proportion to the loss inflicted upon neutral individuals, that other States can be reasonably asked to forego their right of intercourse with the enemy. If a country itself professes that its quarrel is not serious or dangerous enough to make recourse to hostilities necessary, its needs cannot be so urgent as to justify a demand for privileges conceded only upon the ground of necessity and danger.

The practice, however, assumes a very different aspect when it is so conducted as to be harmless to the interests of third Powers. It is a means of constraint much milder than actual war, and, therefore, if sufficient for its purpose, it is preferable in itself. It is true that its very mildness may tempt strong Powers to employ it against weak countries on occasions when, if debarred from its use, they would not resort to hostilities; but it is not to be forgotten that weak countries sometimes presume upon their weakness, and that the possibility of taking measures against them less severe than war may be as much to their advantage as to that of the injured Power.

Westlake. ("Revue de Droit International," &c., 1875, p. 611.)

Point de belligérants, point de neutres, et puisqu'il n'y a que les neutres que les blocus touchent il n'y a personne qui ait à respecter un blocus pacifique. On peut même ajouter que, sans guerre, il n'y saurait y avoir de conseil des prises. J'irais donc jusqu'à dire que, si un vaisseau appartenant même à un national de l'État contre lequel le blocus est dirigé était adjugé aux captures par un conseil des prises de l'État bloquant, les Tribunaux d'un État tiers ne devraient pas reconnaître ce procédé comme ayant opéré un transfert régulier de propriété.

Fauchille: "Du Blocus Maritime," 1882, p. 52.

Ce que nous venons de dire des navires de la nation bloquée est vrai à plus forte raison pour les bâtiments des autres Puissances. Pendant la paix, la navigation et le commerce sont absolument libres pour tous les peuples du monde, et une nation souveraine peut communiquer avec une autre sans avoir à demander aucune autorisation à une tierce nation; les nations sont indépendantes. Cette liberté n'est restreinte que quand une guerre éclate; alors, les devoirs spéciaux naissent à l'égard des États non engagés dans les hostilités: le caractère de neutre leur impose certaines obligations spéciales. Ces États ne doivent pas prendre part à la guerre, et dès lors ils doivent cesser toutes relations avec les ports bloqués. A l'égard des nations neutres le blocus a en effet son fondement dans les devoirs de la neutralité. C'est assez dire que, suivant nous, le blocus pacifique ne peut pas obliger les peuples, que d'ordinaire on appelle neutres: la neutralité suppose essentiellement l'état de guerre.

Comment du reste parler de confisquer ou de séquestrer en temps de paix des navires étrangers arrêtés en pleine mer ou sur un territoire étranger? Pour légitimer une séquestration ou une confiscation ne faut-il pas une décision d'un tribunal des prises? or, sans guerre il ne saurait y avoir de conseils de prises.

Wharton: "Digest of the International Law of the United States," 1886, vol. 3, p. 408.

After quoting instances of pacific blockades, he says:—

"Yet, notwithstanding these precedents, the weight of authority is that while as a war measure a blockade, when effectual, will be internationally respected, this will not be the case with a blockade instituted as part of a system of pacific pressure."

Perels: "Rapport sur le Droit de Blocus en Temps de Paix" (Annuaire de l'Institut de Droit International, 9e Année, 1887-88, p. 285).

Il nous reste à examiner et à fixer les limites des droits de la Puissance bloquante envers les navires appartenant à des nations tierces, qui ne respectent pas cette mesure. Il va sans dire que la résistance violente justifie l'emploi de la force pour vaincre la résistance. Mais la question la plus sérieuse est celle-ci: Les navires qui simplement entreprennent de rompre le blocus par la force, soit pour entrer, soit pour sortir, peuvent-ils être non seulement arrêtés et repoussés, mais même mis sous séquestre ou confisqués? Selon nous, une telle saisie et confiscation de navires des sujets d'États tiers serait illicite. Car si nous réclamons pour chaque État la faculté d'exécuter une mesure de coercition légitime envers un État adversaire, indépendamment de préjudices quelconques portés aux intérêts privés de sujets d'autres États, les limites juridiques d'une telle action sont, d'autre part, prescrites par son but même. La confiscation ou la séquestration de navires dans de telles conditions dépasserait le but; mais dans certaines circonstances, une détention provisoire peut être regardée comme licite.

Déclaration votée par l'Institut concernant le Blocus en dehors de l'état de Guerre.

L'établissement d'un blocus en dehors de l'état de guerre ne doit être considéré comme permis par le droit des gens que sous les conditions suivantes:—

1. Les navires de pavillon étranger peuvent entrer librement malgré le blocus;
2. Le blocus pacifique doit être déclaré et notifié officiellement, et maintenu par une force suffisante;
3. Les navires de la Puissance bloquée qui ne respectent pas un pareil blocus peuvent être séquestrés. Le blocus ayant cessé, ils doivent être restitués avec leurs cargaisons à leurs propriétaires, mais sans dédommagement à aucun titre. ("Annuaire de l'Institut de Droit International, Neuvième Année," 1887-88, pp. 300-301.)

Among the twenty-seven members of the Institute present at the adoption of the above Declaration were the following: Von Bar, Brusen, Von Bulmerincq, Lehr, De Martens, Von Neumann Rivière, and Lyon Caen.

My Lord,

French blockade of Siam. H. M. S. "Linnet," at Bangkok. Rights of neutral ships of war in blockaded ports.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 13th September, stating, with reference to his previous letter of the 12th September relative to the blockade of the coast of Siam which the French Government had at one time intended to establish, that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us copies of correspondence which passed at the time relative to the question whether Her Majesty's ship "Linnet" should remain at Bangkok during the blockade for the protection of the lives and property of British and other foreign subjects. That Sir Thomas Sanderson was also to forward a letter from the Admiralty, inclosing a Report from the Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Pallas" as to the terms in which the blockade was notified by the French Admiral.

That it would be observed that the notification stated distinctly that the times of departure specified applied to vessels of war, as well as to merchant-vessels.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was further to inclose a letter from the Admiralty, forwarding a Memorandum as to the right of the vessels of war of a neutral Power to visit a blockaded port, and a copy of a letter which had been addressed to the Admiralty in reply, forwarding a further Memorandum which had been drawn up in the Foreign Office on the same subject, and that Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the conclusions which were stated at the end of this latter Memorandum were correct, and with any additional observations which we might have to offer on the question, more especially as regards any distinction that might properly be drawn between the right of the blockading Powers to insist on the departure of neutral vessels of war from blockaded ports, and the right to prevent the entry of such vessels through the blockading lines.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That we think Mr. Oakes' summary does not put the right of the belligerent high enough. We think that vessels of war come within the same rules as vessels of commerce, with this difference, that, as regards the former, they have, by comity or courtesy, been excepted from the strict operation of blockade; but we see no reason to doubt that the belligerent right exists to include ships of war, except possibly in the case suggested by Lord Stowell of communication with the Minister of the neutral Power, where no other means of communication exist.

It is obvious that cases must be frequent (and that of Bangkok probably is one of them) where the presence of, and communication from, a ship of war of a neutral, but still friendly, Power might have the effect of delaying that submission of the blockaded Power which it was the object of the blockade to accomplish.

My Lord,

Jurisdiction over foreign merchant-vessels in Brit. waters (Hong Kong).

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands (relative to a question of jurisdiction over a foreign merchant-ship in British waters) signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 18th March last, stating:

That a Spanish subject named Fernel had absconded from the Spanish Colony of Manila, having been accused of the embezzlement there of 12,000 dollars. That on the request of the Spanish Consul at Hong Kong, a provisional warrant had been issued for Fernel's arrest in the event of his arriving at Hong Kong, with the view to his extradition.

Arrest of Fernel, a Spanish subject fugitive from justice.

That Fernel had arrived in the harbour of Hong Kong on board a Spanish vessel, the "Don Juan," and that whilst the British police were searching that vessel, an officer and boat's crew from the Spanish man-of-war "Reina Christina," which happened to be in port, had boarded the "Don Juan," seized the man Fernel, and had him taken on board the Spanish man-of-war, refusing to give him up to the police.

That the Governor of Hong Kong had requested that the man should be handed over to the territorial authorities, and that this request appeared to have been eventually complied with, after some correspondence between the Governor and the Spanish Consul, who maintained that the "Don Juan" retained, in regard to this circumstance, immunity from the jurisdiction of such territorial authorities.

That Fernel was subsequently brought before the Magistrate at Hong Kong upon extradition process in the ordinary manner, and after having been committed to gaol for the statutory period of fifteen days, which must elapse before a surrender by way of extradition, he had doubtless since been handed over to the Spanish Government, although that fact was not actually stated in the correspondence.

That this particular incident had thus been closed satisfactorily, but that the Governor of Hong Kong had suggested that the matter should be represented diplomatically to the Spanish Government with the view to the prevention of similar incidents in the future.

That no case involving considerations of an exactly analogous nature had, so far as was known to the Foreign Office or to the Admiralty, to whom special reference had been made, yet arisen.

T. W. Hoit's case vide L.O.R., 1891 (Conf. 6207), pp. 113 and 121.

That in 1891, however, a case, certain aspects of which it might be useful to consider in connection with the present inquiry, had arisen. That on that occasion the United States' Government had claimed the extradition of T. W. Hoit, a fugitive from the justice of the United States, who was on board of a German mail-steamer within British territorial waters off Southampton, and our attention was called to the reports given upon this case by our predecessors and dated the 26th June and the 7th November, 1891, respectively, from the latter of which it appeared that Sir R. Webster had differed in opinion upon the subject from Sir Edward Clarke, who had considered that an extradition warrant could only be executed upon a foreign vessel in British waters when such vessel belonged to the Power claiming extradition, and the fugitive was either a British subject or a subject of such Power.

That it appeared to your Lordship that all questions regarding the apprehension of persons in British territorial waters must primarily be governed purely by considerations of English municipal law, and that in such case the question whether a particular person was or was not wrongfully arrested was a question which would have to be decided (either on habeas corpus or otherwise) by a British Court administering English or British colonial law, according to the circumstances of the particular case.

That it would therefore seem first necessary to determine what was the municipal law upon the point.

But that, assuming that the municipal law would entirely negative the right of any foreign authority to execute arrests in British waters, even upon the persons of their own nationals on board of merchant-vessels of their own nationality, it was still advisable from the point of view of diplomatic controversy to consider how far international law and practice might afford arguments in support of any such usage.

That on this point Sir Thomas Sanderson was to refer us to a passage in Mr. Hall's "International Law" which appeared concisely to summarize the extent and character of modern doctrine on this question, and which would be found in the third (1890) edition of that learned author's work at p. 198 et seq.

That Mr. Hall, after pointing out that French practice, and also to a certain extent French municipal law, recognized the immunity of merchant-vessels lying in the ports of a foreign State from the local jurisdiction more absolutely and widely than does the law and practice probably of any other State, added that outside France little disposition had been shown to put forward as representing actual law the views which there obtain, and further stated that it was unquestionable that these views "are at present destitute of international authority since they are not supported by the long continuance and generality of usage, which in the absence of consent are needed to give legal value to a practice derogating from so fundamental a principle as is that of sovereignty."

That it appeared to your Lordship, as then advised, that the release of Fernel by the Spanish authorities, in consequence of the representations of the Governor of Hong Kong, sufficiently justified the assumption that any claim to arrest him as of right while on a Spanish merchant-vessel in British territorial waters might, if it were ever intended seriously to be raised, now be regarded as abandoned and withdrawn by the Spanish Government, and that under those circumstances any formal representation of the case to that Government might be unnecessary if not impolitic.

That your Lordship would, however, before making any further communication to the Colonial Office, be glad to be informed—

(1.) Whether we concurred in this view, or whether we considered it necessary or desirable that any, and if so, what, representation should be addressed to the Spanish Government in connection with the arrest, release, and subsequent extradition of Fernel under the circumstances to which our attention had been called.

(2.) Whether, in our opinion, the action of the Governor of Hong Kong in the matter might be approved.

(3.) Whether we agreed generally with the views indicated in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter as to the bearing of municipal and international law respectively upon the main question under discussion, or, if not, in what respects, and to what extent we differed from them.

(4.) Whether we adopted in its integrity the opinion given with respect to the case of T. W. Hoit by the late Attorney-General on the 7th November, 1891, or whether we only concurred in that opinion subject to the limitation added by the late Solicitor-General, which would confine its application to cases in which it was sought to execute an extradition warrant "upon a foreign vessel in British waters, when such vessel belongs to the Power claiming extradition and the fugitive is either a British subject, or a subject of such Power."

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to add that your Lordship would be glad at the same time to be favoured with such other observations upon the subject generally as we might think it desirable to offer.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the matter into consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

1. That we concur in the view that under the circumstances no formal representation to the Spanish Government is necessary.
2. That in our opinion the action of the Governor at Hong Kong may be approved.
3. That we agree generally with the views indicated in Sir Thomas H. Sanderson's letter of the 18th March, 1893.
4. That we adopt in its integrity the opinion given with respect to the case of T. W. Hoit by the late Attorney-General on the 7th November, 1891.

Whatever conclusions may ultimately be arrived at as to the concession to foreign Governments of jurisdiction over their own nationals in private ships of their own nationality lying in British ports, we do not think that any rule or principle of international law requires Her Majesty's Government to permit the exercise of such jurisdiction by force within British waters.

My Lord,

Mr. D. N. Brims' claim on Spanish Government in re construction of dry dock at Bilbao.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for our consideration, the papers noted in the accompanying list respecting a claim advanced against the Spanish Government by Mr. D. N. Brims, contractor, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, in connection with a dry dock which he constructed at Bilbao under contract with the firm of Messrs. Martinez, Rivas, and Palmer.

That on the conversion of the above firm into a Limited Company, which occurred about January 1891, Mr. Brims declined to recognize the change, and maintained his position as a contractor with Messrs. Martinez, Rivas, and Palmer.

That during the year 1891, Mr. Brims found himself compelled to accept in payment bills at short date of the Limited Company; but that he gave the receipt as from Messrs. Martinez, Rivas, and Palmer. That some of those bills, however, which fell due in June and July 1892, were dishonoured, as well as a bill due in April of that year, which Mr. Brims had allowed to be renewed.

That the Limited Company having fallen into financial difficulties, the works were closed in April 1892, and the Spanish Government took possession of them.

That Mr. Brims thereupon applied to Messrs. Martinez, Rivas, and Palmer for instructions, but that they declined to give him any.

That he then took legal advice in England as to what he should do, and that, in conformity with that advice, he decided to finish the construction of the dry dock.

That the Spanish Government raised no difficulties to his pursuing that course, and that the work was accordingly finished by the month of June 1892. That as soon as it was completed, the Spanish Government took forcible possession of it, and, in fact, made use of it at once for one of their war vessels.

That Mr. Brims thereupon protested formally against the action of the Spanish Government, and received in reply a letter from General Cervera (the officer placed in charge of the dockyard), pointing out that the dry dock formed part of the premises of the dockyard, that the whole dockyard was hypothecated to the Spanish Government, and that, therefore, Mr. Brims' claim to hold the dry dock until his bills for the construction of the same had been met was one which could not be recognized.

That a Royal Order had, however, been signed, by which the Spanish Government authorized the payment to Mr. Brims of the amount due to him for the work he carried out since the date on which the Spanish Government took possession of the dockyard, but requiring first that Mr. Brims should produce a certificate signed by the proper authorities that the work had been well executed.

That as Mr. Brims had been unable yet to obtain that necessary certificate, the Spanish Government had, perhaps not altogether unreasonably under the circumstances, objected to pay him the amount he claimed in respect of his work, viz., 3,906*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.*

That that portion of the claim having thus apparently been admitted in principle by the Spanish Government, it was only upon the second portion of it that any question of law arose, i.e., whether Mr. Brims had a valid claim against the Spanish Government on account of the work done by him for the firm of Messrs. Martinez, Rivas, and Palmer and their successors, the Limited Company, previous to the seizure of the dry dock.

That it appeared from the opinion of the Legal Adviser to Her Majesty's Embassy at Madrid (which would be found in the inclosure accompanying Sir H. D. Wolff's despatch No. 69), that, according to Spanish law, Mr. Brims has only a claim, with the other creditors, on the assets of the bankrupt Limited Company, whenever those assets have been realized by the liquidators.

That your Lordship was inclined to think that the rights of Mr. Brims in that regard were determinable by the municipal law of Spain rather than upon considerations of international law, and that you were disposed to accept the opinion of the Legal Adviser to Her Majesty's Embassy upon that point.

That a draft of a letter which it was proposed to address to Mr. Brims had accordingly been prepared, but that, before dispatching it, your Lordship desired to submit it to us for our concurrence, or for such additions or modifications as we might think desirable in the circumstances.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was, therefore, to request that we would take the inclosed draft, together with the other papers, into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion upon the terms of the draft in question, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordships commands, have the honour to

Report—

That Mr. Brims' claim must depend entirely upon the contract entered into with him, the terms of which are not before us, but, in our opinion, the municipal law of Spain must govern his rights, if any, as against the dry dock, and we see no ground on which an appeal can be made to international law.

With reference to the money expended since possession was taken by the Spanish Government, the contract ought to provide for the giving of the necessary certificate.

We observe that Mr. Brims has obtained certificates from an engineer, and if this engineer is the person who, according to the contract, ought to sign certificates, the fact should be brought before the Spanish Government.

As to the money expended by Mr. Brims before the intervention of the Spanish Government, it is, we think, clear that nothing in Mr. Brims' statement leads to the conclusion that the Spanish Government are legally or morally responsible. If such responsibility exists, it must be on some ground not mentioned by Mr. Brims.

We see no reason to question the accuracy of the answers of the Legal Adviser to Her Majesty's Embassy at Madrid to the questions put to him, but we are by no means satisfied that the Embassy was in possession of all material facts, and we think, therefore, that it will be better to abstain from any expression of opinion as to the position of the Limited Company towards the Government. We have, therefore, modified the proposed letter to Mr. Brims, and, as altered, we approve of it.

We have, &c.

Draft of Letter to Mr. D. N. Brims.

Sir, Foreign Office, April , 1893.

AS you have already been informed, the Earl of Rosebery referred to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Madrid your letter of the 25th January last, together with the papers which accompanied your subsequent letters of the 18th and 23rd February, and I am directed by his Lordship to inform you that a Report has now been received from Sir H. D. Wolff upon the subject of your claims against the Spanish Government.

These claims may conveniently be divided into two parts: the first for payment of the sum of 3,906*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.* in respect of the work carried out by you on the dry dock since the date on which the Spanish Government took possession of the dockyard; and the second for the work done by you for the firm of Messrs. Martinez, Rivas, and Palmer, and their successors, the Limited Company, previous to that seizure.

It is gathered that the first head of claim is, in principle, fully recognized by the Spanish Government, as a Royal Order appears to have been passed, authorizing the payment to you of the amount in question on your producing a proper certificate ~~duly signed by the proper authorities that the work was well executed.~~

As the only impediment to a satisfactory settlement of this portion of your claim seems to be the delay in the production of the necessary certificate, Sir H. D. Wolff has been instructed to speak to the Spanish Minister of Marine on the matter, and to endeavour to ascertain from his Excellency, whether it would not be possible to find some solution agreeable to the Spanish Government which would overcome this technical difficulty.

It would be important if you could show that Mr. Thompson, the engineer who appears to have signed a certificate for the amount claimed, was the proper person to sign such certificate under your contract.

With regard to the second head, Her Majesty's Government are advised that, according to Spanish Law, ~~parties to whom the Limited Company owed money for work done for them, or for other reasons, cannot sue the foreclosing mortgagees~~ (i.e., ~~the Spanish Government~~) ~~for such sums, and hold them responsible for payment of the same, but that they become merely creditors of a bankrupt Society, with no claim beyond that to a "pro ratâ" division of the assets of the same. But no individual creditor can seize on any particular portion of the assets of the said bankrupt Society as a guarantee for the payment of his claim in full, to the prejudice of the interests of the other creditors.~~

~~Assuming, therefore, that the foreclosing mortgagees~~ (i.e., ~~the Spanish Government~~) ~~exceeded their rights in seizing the dockyard, the only persons who can bring an action for damages against them would appear to be the Liquidators of the said Society, who, when all the assets are realized, will consider the claim of each creditor with a view to the payment to him of his proper share.~~ there is nothing in the facts which you have brought to the notice of Her Majesty's Government to entitle you to any claim against the Spanish Government, or to any charge upon the dry dock taken possession of by them under their mortgage.

As to obligation of Consul at Malaga to disclose confidential communications with Mr. A. Scott to Spanish Tribunals.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 20th ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us papers relating to an inquiry made by Her Majesty's Consul at Malaga as to his obligation to disclose to a local Judge certain confidential communications which have passed between himself and a British subject named Mr. Adam Scott in connection with a case which is now before the Spanish Tribunals.

That so far as could be gathered from the archives of the Foreign Office, there was no precedent precisely in point with regard to the question, which appeared to be one for decision according to the general principles of the doctrine of privilege.

That it was clear that no privilege or immunity such as was enjoyed by a Diplomatic Representative attached to the Consul himself in his official capacity; but that your Lordship was disposed to think that immunity from disclosure could properly be claimed for communications of the character in question, on the ground that they were privileged communications made to the Consul by one of his nationals, who was seeking his advice in a confidential capacity, and that, in order to prevent delay, your Lordship had so instructed Her Majesty's Consul by telegraph.

But that as the question was an important one, your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion whether the above view of the case should be maintained, and as to what formal instructions, if any, should be issued to Mr. Consul Finn for his guidance in the matter.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted to us, and with any general observations which we might have to offer.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and in obedience to your Lordship's commands have the honour to

Report—

That the question arising on this reference is one of importance and novelty. A material part of the duty imposed upon Consuls is to advise their nationals with reference to litigation which may arise in the country where the Consul exercises his functions.

1893

This is known to the Government of that country, and they give the Consul his exequatur for the purpose of enabling him to perform that among other duties.

It is a principle of international law that Consuls should not be interfered with in such a way as to disable them from performing their duties. We are of opinion (though the question does not appear anywhere to have been raised), that to compel a Consul to disclose communications made to him confidentially for the purpose of obtaining his advice would be such an interference as to disable him from advising with safety, and that in the event of the Spanish Courts proceeding to compel such a disclosure Her Majesty's Government would have good ground for making a representation to the Spanish Government with a view to obtain protection for our Consuls in Spain in this respect.

The question of the privilege of the client is a totally different one. In England it is confined to the case of a professional legal adviser, but that is a question of municipal and not of international law, and the law of Spain must decide whether the client has a right to claim as his privilege that the Consul shall not make a disclosure of confidential communications made to him.

To avoid misconception we ought to say that it would only be the actual communications (whether oral or in writing), disclosure of which ought to be restricted.

Documents deposited with the Consul would not, simply by the fact of being deposited with him, be saved from production.

We are of opinion that the Consul should decline to make a disclosure of confidential communications, and if the Spanish Court is disposed to make an order for disclosure Her Majesty's Government may fairly represent to the Spanish Government that such disclosure ought not to be insisted upon upon the grounds which we have indicated, and which, we need hardly say, equally apply to Spanish Consuls.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received January 19.)

Royal Courts of Justice, January 17, 1893.

My Lord,

Brit. s.s. "Euxine" prevented from trading with Bartin by Turkish authorities. Claim of owners for compensation.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Edward Grey's letter of the 5th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the case of the British steamer "Euxine."

That the facts of the case would be found briefly stated in the Report of the 5th August last from our predecessors in office. That it would be perceived that the cardinal point upon which the ultimate decision in the case must rest was, whether Bartin was a sea-port or an inland port.

That there did not appear to be any well ascertained principles of law, nor were there, so far as was known, judicial decisions or dicta governing the question of what was a sea-port, and what was an inland port; nor had any fresh fact or evidence on that point, beyond that contained in Messrs. Robinson and Wilkin's letter of the 30th November, been discovered since the date of the above-mentioned Report from our predecessors, with regard to the geographical position of Bartin, which would assist in arriving at an absolutely definite conclusion as to whether that port, in particular, must be classed as a sea-port or as an inland port.

That it had, however, been represented to your Lordship, on behalf of the owners of the "Euxine," that to whatever extent the Ottoman authorities might have been justified in strict law and on purely technical grounds in preventing the "Euxine" from running to Bartin, yet that the case was one, not only of considerable practical hardship to the owners, but one in which they were, from an ethical standpoint, at any rate, entitled to considerable sympathy.

That it seemed clear that their vessel was specially designed and built for the purpose of running to Bartin, and that she had for some time been permitted to do so; and that, moreover, she was undoubtedly stopped from so running in order to prevent her from competing with a line of steamers under the Ottoman flag.

That in those circumstances your Lordship had, notwithstanding the opinion already expressed by our predecessors, thought yourself justified in re-submitting the case, and that Sir Edward Grey was, therefore, to request us to take the papers into our consideration, and to be good enough to inform your Lordship whether we concurred in the opinion expressed by the late Law Officers in their Report of the 5th August last; or whether, on the other hand, we considered that there was sufficient evidence to justify Her Majesty's Government in holding that Bartin was a sea-port frequented, or capable of being frequented, by the sea-going vessels of other nations; or whether, failing that, any other grounds (and if so, what) existed upon which Her Majesty's Government could put forward a claim for compensation on behalf of the owners of the "Euxine."

L. O. R. 1892 (Conf. 6347), p. 70.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That in our opinion there are reasonable grounds on which Her Majesty's Government may put forward a claim for compensation on behalf of the owners of the "Euxine."

The evidence shows that Bartin is not a place whose traffic is confined to inland navigation, but that it is frequented by sea-going vessels which are, at any rate, engaged in the coasting trade.

It would seem that the Turkish Government does not question the right of British vessels to engage in the coasting trade, and, in our opinion, it was in the coasting trade, and not in the navigation of inland waters, that the "Euxine" was engaged.

It may be difficult to establish a claim for compensation on the ground that the "Euxine" was specially fitted for the trade to Bartin, and, having regard to the fact that the claim against the Turkish Government has been delayed for diplomatic reasons, we do not think that loss of profit during the time which has elapsed since the vessel was prohibited from trading can be claimed, but the case is one which, in our opinion, entitles Her Majesty's Government to demand substantial compensation.

We desire to point out that, if the Turkish Government can exclude British ships as suggested, such exclusion touches, in an important way, the Treaty rights of this country, and the case is no longer one merely affecting the claim of an individual trader to compensation.

Surrender of six Armenians on British s.s. "Izgar" in Turkish waters.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 24th ultimo relating to the surrender to the Turkish police of six Armenians by the captain of the British steam-ship "Izgar" whilst in Turkish waters by order of the British Vice-Consul at the Dardanelles, and stating—

That the action of the Vice-Consul had been condemned by Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, but was supported by the late Law Officers of the Crown:

That the opinion of the late Law Officers had been privately communicated to the Ambassador, who had given in a Memorandum his reasons for adhering to the view which he had originally taken of the Vice-Consul's proceedings:

L. O. R. 1892 (Confidential No. 6347), p. 69.

That the questions raised were of considerable importance from a political as well as from a legal point of view, and that your Lordship therefore desired us to take the papers into our consideration, and to inform you whether we concurred with the Report of our predecessors, dated the 27th July, 1892, upon the subject, or, if not, in what respect we differed from the views therein expressed:

That your Lordship would, at the same time, be glad to be favoured with any observations which we might have to offer upon the case generally, and also more particularly upon the Memorandum inclosed in Sir Clare Ford's letter to Sir Philip Currie of the 13th February last, indicating how far, if at all, we considered the statements of law contained therein might be open to criticism or exception.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That we agree with the Report of our predecessors, dated the 29th July, 1892.

With reference to the Memorandum inclosed in Sir Clare Ford's letter of the 13th February, 1893, we are unable to concur in the statement that British merchant-ships in Turkish ports or private residences enjoy, as matter of law, extra-territoriality.

Under the Capitulations, it may be that a usage or practice has grown up of requiring the intervention of the British Consular officer to any exercise of jurisdiction on the part of Turkish officials with reference to British ships, or private residences of British subjects, and, assuming that to be so, it may be undesirable on political grounds that any departure from the usage should be acquiesced in.

In like manner, from a political point of view there may be considerable force in the suggestion that every case of importance involving questions of principle or Treaty rights should be referred to the Ambassador, but we think that these considerations do not affect the legal position, and must be dealt with as matters of policy and not of law.

We wish to add that before surrender it ought to be made reasonably clear (1) that the charge is for an offence according to Turkish law, and (2) that the arrest is authorized by proper authority.

Surrender Turkish subjects on board Brit. merchant-vessels in Turkish waters to local authorities.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 22nd April last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople,* forwarding a note verbale in the form of a Circular which he had received from the Porte in regard to a complaint made by the Governor-General of Aleppo against the masters of vessels at Alexandretta who refuse to surrender to the local authorities indigent natives of the Lebanon who have embarked on board their vessels with the intention of emigrating to America, and against certain agents at the same port who are reluctant to assist the authorities in searching the vessels in question.

That the Turkish Government requested Her Majesty's Embassy to give strict orders to the British Consular Agent at Alexandretta and to the masters of British ships to give all necessary facilities, and to render all the assistance in their power to the local authorities when called upon to do so.

That Sir Clare Ford reported the substance of communications which had passed between his Excellency and some of his foreign colleagues on the subject, and requested to be furnished with instructions as to the manner in which the question should be treated.

That your Lordship would be glad if we would take Sir C. Ford's despatch and its inclosures into consideration, in connection with the papers which were transmitted to us on the 24th March last in regard to the somewhat analogous case of the "Izgar," and favour you with such observations as we might desire to offer thereon.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, no claim to extra-territoriality in respect of British merchant-ships lying in foreign ports or waters can, as a matter of principle, be asserted; but that, by virtue of the Capitulations with Turkey and the practice which has obtained thereunder, the master of a British ship in Turkish waters, when required to surrender a Turkish subject or other person subject to Turkish law, is entitled to have it made reasonably clear that an offence against Turkish law has been committed, or is by proper authority charged against the person sought to be taken from the ship; and that, in the case of a British subject or person entitled to British protection, the assent of the British Consulate has been given, and, in the case of any foreigner whose State is represented by a Consular officer, due notice has been given to such Consular officer.

We do not think that masters of ships or agents should be instructed to give active assistance to Turkish authorities unless in cases where the above conditions are complied with.

Extradition of C. E. Miller, United States citizen, from Straits Settlements for embezzlement in Japan.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 7th January, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter and inclosures from the Colonial Office respecting an application made to the Governor of the Straits Settlements by the Acting United States' Consul at Singapore for the extradition of one C. E. Miller, a citizen of the United States, who, being accused of embezzlement in Japan, had escaped from the extra-territorial jurisdiction possessed by the United States' Consul in that country, and had taken refuge in the Straits Settlements.

That the extradition of Miller was refused in consequence of an informality in the warrant issued at Hiogo, and that the fugitive had been set at liberty; but that the Governor of the Straits Settlements had inquired whether the United States' Government had, under any circumstances, the right to claim from that Colony the extradition to the United States' authorities in Japan of a fugitive American citizen accused of an extradition offence within the meaning of the "Ashburton" Treaty of the 9th August, 1842, between Her Majesty and the United States of America, and the Extradition Convention supplementary to Article X of that Treaty, which was signed at Washington on the 12th July, 1889.

That before, however, furnishing him with instructions in the matter, the Secretary of State for the Colonies had asked whether there was any record in the Foreign Office of a previous case where extradition was demanded from any part of Her Majesty's dominions in respect of a crime committed in Japan, or in some other country in which the demanding Power possessed extra-territorial jurisdiction.

That no record of a similar case could be traced in the archives of the Foreign Office; and that since a question of principle of considerable importance was involved, Sir Thomas Sanderson was to submit to us the following observations, and to ask us to be good enough to favour your Lordship with our opinion upon the matter.

That Article X of the Treaty with the United States of the 9th August, 1842 (the Article relating to extradition), and the Act of Parliament giving effect to it, both referred to crimes committed "within the jurisdiction of the United States;" and that a similar expression was used in the other Extradition Treaties concluded prior to 1870 between this country and foreign States. That it was not specifically stated whether that term included extra-territorial jurisdiction; but that the inference would appear to be that it did not, since section 3 of the Act of Parliament (6 and 7 Vict., cap. 76) empowered a Secretary of State to deliver up an accused person to such person or persons as should be authorized to receive him, in order to convey him to the territories of the United States to be tried, &c.

That the Act of Parliament (6 and 7 Vict., cap. 75) for carrying out the Treaty with France of the 13th February, 1843 (now expired), also spoke of the conveyance of the accused person to the dominions of the King of the French.

That the Treaty with the United States of the 9th August, 1842, was still in force; but that both Acts of Parliament to which reference had been made were repealed by "The Extradition Act, 1870" (33 and 34 Vict., cap. 52).

That "The Extradition Act, 1870," did not contain the words "territories" or "dominions" in that connection. That the preamble alluded to crimes committed within the jurisdiction of foreign States, and that it was stated in section 11 of the Act that it should be lawful for any person to whom a warrant was directed, &c., "to receive, hold in custody, and convey within the jurisdiction of such foreign State the criminal mentioned in the warrant." That section 25, however, of the Act ran as follows:—"For the purposes of this Act every Colony, Dependency, and constituent part of a foreign State, and every vessel of that State, shall (except where expressly mentioned as distinct in this Act) be deemed to be within the jurisdiction of, and to be part of such foreign State." That if, therefore, the words contained in the above section were held to be an exhaustive definition of the term "jurisdiction," extra-territorial jurisdiction would seem to be excluded from the operation of the Act.

That most of the Extradition Treaties concluded by this country subsequent to the passing of "The Extradition Act, 1870," were worded so as to confine their operation to the cases of crimes committed within the "territories" of one of the contracting Parties. That of such were the Treaties with Germany, Belgium, Italy, Denmark, Sweden, Austria-Hungary, Brazil, France, Switzerland, Spain, &c. That an exception to that rule, however, was to be found in the Treaty with the Netherlands of the 19th June, 1874, which was worded so as to include crimes committed "within the jurisdiction of the requiring party" by persons who "shall be found within the territories of the other party." That that might possibly have been due to a printer's error in reprinting revises of the draft Treaty. That there was nothing in the archives of the Foreign Office to explain it.

That a question arose in 1873 as to whether the Extradition Treaties concluded by this country would apply in the case of a person who, having committed a crime in a foreign country, should seek refuge within the extra-territorial jurisdiction of Great Britain. That the point was submitted to the Law Officers, who reported, on the 6th June, 1873, against the surrender of such a person by the Judge of a British Consular Court, one of the reasons given for their opinion being that the Extradition Act applied to Her Majesty's dominions and possessions only. That the point was the converse of that which had now arisen. L. O. R. 1873 (Conf. 4259). p. 166 A.

That the Report of the 6th June, 1873, was sent to the Home Office in connection with certain proposed amendments of the Extradition Act, which were then under consideration, and that the Secretary of State replied that it was not considered desirable to extend the Bill for amending the Extradition Act so as to place the extra-territorial jurisdiction possessed by Her Majesty in Turkey in the same position with respect to the surrender of fugitive criminals as if such jurisdiction were co-equal in extent and character with that possessed in this regard by Her Majesty in a British Colony or possession.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to add that no application had ever been made by Her Majesty's Government to that of the United States for the extradition from the United States' territory of a British subject who had, in some country where Her Majesty possessed extra-territorial jurisdiction, committed an offence which would have been, if done within the British dominions, an extradition offence.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers inclosed with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion upon the point more particularly submitted, and also, at the same time, with any general observations which we might have to offer in connection with the papers.

Having taken the matter into our consideration, we have the honour to

Report—

That in our opinion the Extradition Treaties and "The Extradition Act of 1870" are intended to insure mutual assistance to the Contracting Parties to each Treaty for the purpose of enabling them to enforce, in the cases provided for, the criminal law of their own country, and do not extend to cases where the Powers have obtained jurisdiction in the dominions of another Sovereign. We are of opinion, therefore, that such a case as that of Miller—where the United States' Representative called upon the British Colonial authorities to surrender a fugitive criminal to be dealt with under the 1893

United States' extra-territorial jurisdiction in Japan—is not provided for by the Treaty of 1842 or the Act of 1870.

Seizure of "Henrietta" in Behring Sea by U. S. cruizer.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was, by direction of your Lordship, to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list and relating to the seizure of the British schooner "Henrietta" by the United States' cruizer "Yorktown" in Behring Sea on the 4th September, 1892.

That the facts relating to this seizure were fully set out in the instruction which it was proposed to address to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington on this subject.

That the two sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States which the "Henrietta" was said to have violated would be found set out in full in Mr. Calderon Carlisle's Report, inclosed in Sir Julian Pauncefote's despatch No. 57 of the 15th ultimo.

That a copy of the modus vivendi, 1891 and 1892, was also inclosed.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the terms of the proposed draft to Sir Julian Pauncefote, instructing him to protest against the proceedings of the United States' authorities with regard to the "Henrietta," were right and proper under the circumstances, or whether they might, from a legal point of view, be advantageously modified or altered, and, if so, to what extent, and in what manner.

That your Lordship would be glad at the same time to receive any observations upon the case generally and upon its bearing on the somewhat analogous case of the "Coquitlan" which we might have to offer.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to

Report—

That we think the terms of the proposed despatch to Sir Julian Pauncefote are, in the circumstances of this case, right and proper.

Draft of Despatch to Sir J. Pauncefote.

(No. .)

Foreign Office, March , 1893.

Sir,

I HAVE received your despatch No. 57 of the 15th ultimo, reporting representations which you had addressed to the United States' Government respecting the seizure of the British schooner "Henrietta" by the United States' cruizer "Yorktown" in Behring Sea.

I have also received your subsequent telegram No. 26 of the 22nd ultimo, announcing that, in reply to your representations, the United States' Government had stated that they would deliver the "Henrietta" to the proper British authority for trial under the modus vivendi of 1892, without prejudice of the rights of the United States as regards the violation of their Revenue Laws.

Your action in this matter is entirely approved by Her Majesty's Government.

The facts relating to the seizure of the "Henrietta" appear to be as follows:—

She was seized by the United States' cruizer "Yorktown" in Behring Sea on the 4th day of September, 1892, in latitude 54° north, longitude 170° 35′ west, 60 miles more or less from land. She is alleged to have had on board at the time of seizure 420 fur-seal skins taken in Behring Sea. She appears to have been removed to Ounalaska, where charges were made against her for alleged breaches of the Revenue Laws of the United States, as laid down in Sections 2867 and 2868 of their Revised Statutes.

The schooner was thereupon delivered to Captain Hooper, of the United States' revenue-cutter "Corwin," with instructions to take her to Sitka, and deliver her to the authorities of the United States' District Court for trial upon the above-mentioned charges, and, in case of failure to condemn her upon them, she was to be handed over to the British authorities at Victoria for the violation of the provisions of the modus vivendi of 1892.

After having been detained in custody at Sitka for a period of no less than six months while awaiting her trial, which never took place, upon the charge of violating the Revenue Laws, she is now, in consequence of your representations to the United States' Government, about to be handed over to the proper British authority for trial under the modus vivendi, upon the conditions mentioned in the second paragraph of this despatch.

With reference to the seizure of the "Henrietta," I have to draw your attention to Article III of the modus vivendi, which provides that:—

"Every vessel or person offending against this prohibition in the said waters of Behring Sea outside of the ordinary territorial limits of the United States may be seized and detained by the naval or other duly commissioned officers of either of the High Contracting Parties, but they shall be handed over as soon as practicable to the authorities of the nation to which they respectively belong, who alone shall have jurisdiction to try the offence and impose the penalties for the same. The witnesses and proof necessary to establish the offence shall be sent with them."

It is clear, therefore, if the "Henrietta" was seized for a violation of the modus vivendi, she should have been turned over as soon as practicable to British authority, which alone had jurisdiction to try this offence and impose the penalties for the same.

Instead of this, however, she was forcibly detained at Sitka under process of an American Court of Law for a period of six months, and is only now about to be released in consequence of the representations of Her Majesty's Government, and under conditions and reservations to the justice or propriety of which they are entirely unable to assent.

Turning now from this alleged infraction of the International Agreement to the supposed breach of municipal law with which the "Henrietta" has been charged, it appears that the material portion of the two Sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States which she is said to have violated runs as follows:—

"Section 2867. If after the arrival of any vessel laden with merchandize and bound to the United States within the limits of any collection district, or within 4 leagues of the coast, any part of the cargo of such vessel shall be unladen, for any purpose whatever, before such vessel has come to the proper place for the discharge of her cargo, or some part thereof, and has been there duly authorized by the proper officer of Customs to unlade the same, the master of such vessel and the mate, or other person next in command, shall respectively be liable to a penalty of 1,000 dollars for each such offence, and the merchandize so unladen shall be forfeited, except in the case of some unavoidable accident, necessity, or distress of weather."

* * * * * * *

The remainder of Section 2867, and the whole of Section 2868, appear to have no application to the particular circumstances attendant upon the seizure of the "Henrietta."

Upon this branch of the case it seems clear to Her Majesty's Government that the forcible arrest of that vessel 60 miles from land in Behring Sea for violation of municipal law was not only contrary to the law of nations, but also cannot be supported on the mere terms of the Statute itself. The Section of the Revised Statutes above quoted asserts a jurisdiction of the United States 4 leagues from the shore, but only as to vessels bound to the United States. It nowhere appears that the "Henrietta" was ever bound to the United States, and she was, moreover, seized outside the jurisdiction even as defined by the Statute.

The proceedings, therefore, against this vessel before the Sitka Court appear to be based on the assertion of an absolute right on the part of the United States which is not only inadmisible under the existing law of nations, but which cannot be justified by the terms of the municipal law under which they purport to have been taken.

Her Majesty's Government are, under these circumstances, constrained to the conclusion that the United States' District Court at Sitka was wholly devoid of jurisdiction in the matter.

As both the original seizure of the "Henrietta" and her detention for so long a period after seizure appear to Her Majesty's Government to afford subjects of just complaint, I have to request you to address a note to the United States' Government, pointing out:—

1. That the seizure was unwarranted except under the modus vivendi, and was only permitted under that instrument on the condition (which was not fulfilled in this case) that British vessels seized should at the earliest opportunity be delivered to British authority, to which authority alone has been reserved the right to try the offence, and impose the penalty.

2. That the seizure 60 miles from land was contrary to the law of nations, even if the laws of the United States had been violated; and was also contrary to the municipal law itself, inasmuch as the terms of that law, although in asserting a jurisdiction extending to a distance even of 4 leagues from the shore, they go beyond what the law of nations warrants, yet do not cover such a jutisdiction as is sought to be established, and has been actually and wrongfully exercised, at a distance of 60 miles from the shore.

3. That the detention of the vessel from the 4th September last to a recent date was unlawful—

(a.) Because by International Agreement the United States' Government cannot hold, but must deliver over, as soon as practicable, to British authorities, a British vessel seized for violation of the modus vivendi.

(b.) Because the seizure of a foreign vessel for alleged violation of the United States' municipal law, if made, as was here the case, at a place beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, can confer no jurisdiction on its Courts.

(c.) Because Sections 2867 and 2868 of the Revised Statutes of the United States assert a jurisdiction which, having regard to the settled principles of the law of nations, the United States cannot claim as against foreign vessels, and which therefore can, quâ foreign vessels, confer no jurisdiction on the Courts of the United States.

Her Majesty's Government observe from your despatch No. 57 of the 15th ultimo that the Secretary of State admits the delivery of the "Henrietta" to the authorities of the United States' District Court at Sitka for trial upon the charge of violating the Revenue Laws, and the alternative instruction, in case of failure to condemn, to hand her over to the British authorities for violation of the modus vivendi.

This extraordinary course seems also to call for diplomatic protest as again involving the pretension which, as already stated, Her Majesty's Government must altogether decline to admit on the part of the United States, to seize, 60 miles from land, a British vessel on a charge of violating their Revenue Laws.

Her Majesty's Government feel that it is the more incumbent upon them to urge this protest, inasmuch as it appears that the United States' Government, while handing over the "Henrietta" to be dealt with by the Canadian authorities under the modus vivendi, have in no way admitted that the attempt to justify her seizure on the ground that she had committed a breach of the municipal law of the United States must altogether fail, but have, on the contrary, explicitly reserved to themselves all their rights in respect of the alleged violation of the United States' Revenue Laws on her part.

I am to add that the terms of this despatch have been submitted to, and have received the general approval of, the Law Officers of the Crown.

As, however, certain portions of the note which you are instructed to address to the United States' Government deal with considerations of United States' municipal law, and involve the construction of American Statutes, it will be desirable that you should, before actually presenting it, also consult Mr. Calderon Carlisle, the legal adviser to Her Majesty's Legation, as to whether its terms are in any way open to exception.

Should they obtain the general concurrence of Mr. Calderon Carlisle, you are authorized at once to present a note couched in the terms indicated.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received March 21.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, March 18, 1893.

Seizure of "Coquitlan" for alleged breach of U.S. Revenue Laws.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the further papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the seizure of the British steam-ship "Coquitlan," at Port Etches, for an alleged breach of the United States' Revenue Laws.

That it would be seen from Sir Julian Pauncefote's despatches Nos. 20 and 24 of the 16th and 20th January last that the United States' Secretary of State declined to abandon the prosecution of the "Coquitlan," and to release that vessel, on the ground that the seizure was made in waters over which the laws of the United States for the protection of the revenues extended.

That those despatches were, in due course, referred to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and that Lord Ripon, in his reply, observed that, whether the seizure was made within the territorial waters of the United States or not, the alleged offence was undoubtedly committed outside the 3-mile limit. That his Lordship pointed out that in a note to Lord Ashburton of the 1st August, 1842, Mr. Webster, then United States' Secretary of State, laid it down in unqualified terms that "a vessel on the high seas beyond the distance of a marine league from the shore is regarded as part of the territory of the nation to which she belongs, and subjected exclusively to the jurisdiction of that nation;" and that the same doctrine was declared in Mr. Seward's despatch to Mr. Tassard of the 10th August, 1863 (see Wharton's "Digest," vol i, p. 103).

That, again, Mr. Fish, in his despatch to Sir E. Thornton of the 22nd January, 1875, admitted that the Revenue Laws referred to by Mr. Foster were practically obsolete, and were not enforced against foreign vessels.

That Lord Ripon went on to suggest, for your Lordship's consideration, that the attention of the United States' Government should be called to the papers cited above, and that they should be informed that Her Majesty's Government could not admit that the United States' Laws referred to applied to British vessels beyond those ordinary limits to the territorial waters of a State which were recognized by the law of nations, and that they could not therefore admit any right on the part of the United States' Courts to assume and exercise jurisdiction over the "Coquitlan" in the present case, and must hold the United States' Government responsible for any loss or damage sustained by the owners of that vessel owing to the proceedings of the United States' authorities.

L. O. R. 1892 (Conf. 6347, pp. 84 and 92).

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to call our attention to our two previous Reports upon the case of the 9th September and 18th December last, and to the action taken by Her Majesty's Government in accordance with them, and that he was to add that your Lordship was disposed to agree with Lord Ripon that a further remonstrance in the terms of his Lordship's letter should be addressed to the United States' Government, but that before taking any action in the matter your Lordship desired to be favoured with our opinion as to whether the proposed terms of that remonstrance were right and proper in the circumstances, or whether, on the other hand, they might, from a legal point of view, be altered or modified with advantage, and, if so, in what manner, and to what extent.

Case of "Henrietta."

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to add that it appeared to your Lordship that the action of the United States' Government in the case of the "Henrietta," which was also referred to us on the 15th instant, had a material bearing on the present case, and that, although for purposes of diplomatic representation, it would be better to keep the correspondence between the two Governments separate and distinct with regard to each case, it might be convenient for us to have both sets of papers under our consideration at the same time, inasmuch as the questions of law raised in both cases were, to a great extent, analogous.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted in his letter, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That we think that a remonstrance on the lines of Lord Ripon's letter of the 4th March, 1893, may properly be addressed to the United States' Government.

It cannot be admitted that the Revenue Laws of the United States give any right to adjudicate upon a foreign ship in respect of an act committed outside the ordinary 3-mile limit. The position cannot be put higher than this: that where outside the 3-mile limit a British vessel has been seized which was engaged in an attempt to break the Revenue Laws of another country, this Government will not complain of such seizure. This is the principle upon which, in the interests of comity of nations, the Hovering Acts have been dealt with.

In the present case, there seems to be no ground for the suggestion that the "Coquitlan" was engaged in any such attempt.

URUGUAY.

No. 47.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received March 23.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, March 20, 1893.

Mr. J. Littlejohn's claim on Uruguayan Government.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 13th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to a claim against the Uruguayan Government presented by Mr. John Jones, acting in the capacity of executor of the will of the late Mr. Robert Littlejohn, a British subject.

That the despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Monte Video, dated the 1st September, 1892, stated that for a long time past he (Mr. Satow) had been endeavouring to obtain from the Uruguayan Government a definite recognition of the claim, but that his efforts had hitherto resulted in nothing more than a vague admission by the Uruguayan Minister for Foreign Affairs, that, in his individual opinion, the Government ought to pay the amount claimed, for which judgment had been obtained against it in the Uruguayan Courts.

That Mr. Satow inclosed translations of extracts from the legal proceedings which had been taken from first to last in the case, as well as the Petitions presented to the Uruguayan Assembly, setting forth the main facts and arguments relied on by both sides, together with an unofficial Memorandum on the case which he delivered to the Minister for Foreign Affairs on the 4th August, 1891.

That the undisputed facts of the case appeared to be as follows:—

That Mr. Robert Littlejohn, a British subject, had, in 1879, obtained judgment against an American citizen, Mr. Nussel R. Pealer, for the sum of 12,234 dol. 40 c. That the defendant, however, failed to comply with the Decree, and that the next step, consequently, was to get a general order of attachment against all property possessed by him, or which might afterwards come into his possession. That Mr. Pealer had a claim for compensation outstanding against the Uruguayan Government arising, out of the forfeiture of a railway Concession, against which Mr. Littlejohn in 1885 obtained an order of attachment, notice being duly given to the proper Government Departments.

That to that order the Executive Power replied that it had no property or funds of Mr. Pealer's in its possession which could be attached; but that the Judge in whose Court the original Decree had been sued out repeated the order, and no further objection was raised on the part of the Executive.

That in January 1889 Mr. Littlejohn discovered that Mr. Pealer's claim had at last been settled by the Uruguayan Government handing to him certificates for a certain amount of amortizable debt, and that the Minister of Finance, when called upon by the Court to state the facts, admitted that that was true, but denied that the Government was in any way responsible to Mr. Littlejohn. That Mr. Pealer's own personality, it was alleged, had disappeared and become merged in that of his Government from the moment that the United States, acting through their Minister in Monte Video, had taken the matter in hand; in other words, that nothing had been paid to Mr. Pealer, and that the settlement made with the United States' Minister was not the discharge of a debt, but "a sacrifice to international interests and conveniences."

That Mr. Littlejohn thereupon applied to the Judge of the Court for a Decree against the Uruguayan Government for the amount of his liquidated claim against Mr. Pealer, with interest to date and costs.

That the Attorney-General of the Exchequer ("Fiscal de Hacienda") was heard in defence, and alleged that no administrative act was in existence by which the Uruguayan Government had acknowledged itself to be indebted to Mr. Pealer, nor was there any Judgment of a Court to that effect, Mr. Pealer never having brought any action for damages against the Government. That, in consequence of the representations initiated by the Legation of the United States, the personality of Mr. Pealer had completely disappeared, being replaced by that of the United States, to which payment was made, not in the character of a creditor of the Uruguayan Government, but with the view of maintaining the good relations existing between the two nations.

That the final Judgment, which was delivered on the 8th April, 1890, after reciting the facts and the plea of the Counsel for the Government, decided that the Executive Power was not justified in disregarding the order of attachment, in virtue of which it ought to have retained the sum Mr. Pealer was to receive, which would have sufficed to satisfy and cover the execution decreed in the judicial proceedings. That the Minister of the United States must be regarded as having acted as Mr. Pealer's agent or attorney, and that whatever might have been the motives of the Government for settling the claim, they were bound to retain and place at the disposal of the Court the amount attached; and it concluded by ordering the Government to pay into Court within ten days the liquidated amount for which Mr. Littlejohn had obtained execution against the State.

That the Uruguayan Government, Mr. Satow reported, did not appeal, but was deaf to all applications for payment.

That the plaintiff's attorney, on the 6th May, 1890, addressed to the Judge a protest against the neglect to comply with the order of a Court, which protest was sent to the Minister of Justice.

That about the same time the plaintiff's attorney presented a Petition to the Uruguayan Assembly, asking that the Executive Power might be called on to pay the amount of the Judgment.

That on the 3rd June the President of the Republic and the Minister of Justice signed an Administrative Decree denying the obligation of the Executive Power to pay, on the grounds already set forth by the Attorney-General of the Exchequer, which Decree they ordered to be transmitted to the Court.

That Mr. Littlejohn's attorney at once made a further application, and obtained a reiteration of the previous Decree against the Government, to which the Minister of Justice replied that the Uruguayan Government could not withdraw from what was established in its Resolution, dated the 3rd June, on the grounds stated in the same.

That in order to deprive the Uruguayan Government of all pretence for afterwards alleging that he ought to have exhausted all possible means of obtaining redress before invoking the influence of his own Government, Mr. Littlejohn again addressed the General Assembly, inclosing a copy of the Administrative Decree of the President and his Minister of Finance, repudiating the Judgment of the Court referred to above.

That, from the observations on the case made in the concluding paragraphs of Mr. Satow's despatch, it would be seen that that last step was also unattended by any practical result.

That a translation of a document showing the liquidated amount of the claim up to the 4th June last was inclosed for reference.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether Mr. Littlejohn's claim was one which could, with propriety, be formally represented to the Government of Uruguay, and, if so, upon what special grounds it could, in our opinion, be most advantageously pressed.

That your Lordship would also be glad to be favoured with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That there is no doubt considerable difficulty in this case arising from the facts (1) that Pealer appears to have had no liquidated or ascertained claim against the Government of Uruguay, and (2) that the settlement of that claim appears to have taken place with the United States as a matter of diplomatic arrangement which, as a general rule, would preclude the interference of the Government of the national making the claim.

Nevertheless, we think the claim of Littlejohn's executor can with propriety be formally represented to the Government of Uruguay, in order to obtain from them an official and formal answer of the grounds on which they refuse to give effect to the repeated orders of their own Court.

The grounds on which, in our opinion, such claim may be pressed are (1) that by Order of the Uruguay Court (as we understand the facts) the claim of Mr. Pealer against the Government was (by process analogous to our garnishee proceedings) attached in favour of Mr. Littlejohn; (2) that after such attachment the Government disregarded it, and settled the claim of Mr. Pealer by arrangement with a person who was a Representative of the United States; and, lastly (3), that by the Judgment of the 8th April, 1890, after argument by the Attorney-General of the Exchequer, the Court decided that the Government was bound to pay Mr. Littlejohn's claim.

After the answer of the Uruguayan Government it will be necessary to consider carefully the position before further action is taken by Her Majesty's Government.

VENEZUELA

No. 48.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received July 22.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, July 22, 1893.

Claim of Mr. C. Philip for seizure of cart and mules for use of Govt. troops against insurgents. Responsibility of Venezuelan Govt. for acts of its predecessors.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. Villiers Lister's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us papers relating to the claim of Mr. Christian Philip, a British subject, against the existing Government of Venezuela for compensation in respect of a cart and eight mules taken from him by force in April and May 1892 for the use of the Government troops by Generals Luengo and Aneseto Cotua, who were in command of divisions of the forces of Venezuela under the Government of De Palam.

That the Government, having been worsted by the Revolutionary troops, another Administration was formed at Carácas under the Presidency of General Crespo, and that it was against General Crespo's Government that the present claim was advanced by Mr. Philip.

That the circumstances under which Mr. Philip's mules and cart were seized were explained in the document marked (A),* and that your Lordship was disposed to think that the claim was primâ facie a good one on the merits, and that as it was understood that the value of a good cart mule in the district where the seizure took place might be estimated at from 30*l.* to 40*l.*, and that the cost of a cart was about 50*l.*, it did not appear that the damages, which were laid at 400*l.*, and included the cost and expenses incurred by Mr. Philip in endeavouring to obtain the restitution of his property, were in any degree excessive.

But that in the present case a further question arose which it was necessary to consider in regard to the responsibility of the existing Government of Venezuela for the acts of their predecessors.

That, as bearing on this point, Sir T. Villiers Lister was to call our attention to the view taken by Lord John Russell as to the non-settlement of claims of British bondholders and others by the Mexican Government some thirty years ago.

That in writing to Sir C. Wyke on the 30th March, 1861, with reference to the non-repayment of the loss sustained by the bondholders of a large sum of money belonging to them, which had been deposited for security in the house of Her Majesty's Legation at Mexico, his Lordship had said:—

"Her Majesty's Government will not admit as an excuse for hesitation in this respect the plea that the robbery was committed by the late Government, for, as regards this, as indeed all other claims, Her Majesty's Government cannot admit that the party who committed the wrong is alone responsible for wrongs done to British subjects by any party or persons at any time administering the powers of Government."

That, during the sitting of the Commission appointed under the Claims Convention with Venezuela of the 21st September, 1868, numerous claims were brought forward by British subjects on account of losses sustained by them for cattle, horses, and mules, seized by the Government troops, and sums were awarded by the Commissioners and Umpires, although it was not clear from the record whether the Government holding office at the time when the awards were given was the same as that which was in office when the seizures were made.

That on the 6th day of March, 1854, the Venezuelan Government had issued a Decree declaring the Republic exempt from the obligation to make good to foreigners the damages and losses which their property might suffer in consequence of political commotions, but that the Law Officers of the Crown had expressed an opinion on the 25th February, 1861, that such obligation, if it existed, was based on international law, which it was not competent to any State to abrogate by its own legislation.

That, again, when a question arose respecting the compensation to British subjects for losses or destruction of property during the civil war in North America, the then Law Officers of the Crown had stated, on the 21st October, 1861, as follows:—

"With regard to losses or destruction of property caused to British subjects exclusively by the officers or troops, or by those acting by the authority or on behalf of the Government under whose authority such British subjects are living at the time, we can only say that, as a general principle, such Government is responsible for them; and that the fact of their having been committed during the existence of a civil war, although it may sometimes palliate or extenuate the conduct of those concerned, will not exonerate the Government from its general responsibility."

That cases might also be cited in which diplomatic relations had been suspended between Her Majesty's Government and a foreign Government, and only renewed on condition that all pecuniary claims based on the acts of the Federal Government should be recognized.

That one of the most recent of such cases was that of the Provisional Agreement between Her Majesty's Government and that of Mexico of the 6th August, 1884.

That besides the case of Mr. Philip others had been furnished by the Acting British Consul at Carácas, in which British subjects had suffered injury in their persons and property during the recent revolution by the acts of the de facto Government as well as by those of the Revolutionary party, who have now succeeded in displacing the former.

That it might be that upon further examination some of these cases would be found not to possess merits sufficient to entitle them to presentation by Her Majesty's Government to that of the Venezuelan Republic; but that it was assumed that any general principles as to the responsibility of the present Government of Venezuela for the acts of the accredited Agents of previous Governments of that State, which might be adopted and urged in the case of Mr. Philip's claim, would be also of application with reference to such of any of those other claims as might appear primâ facie to be deserving of representation on their merits.

That Sir T. Villiers Lister was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to—

1. Whether Her Majesty's Government were justified in holding the present Government of Venezuela responsible, under the circumstances, for the acts of the previous Government of that Republic.

2. Whether, assuming that our answer to the preceding question should be in the affirmative, Her Majesty's Government might properly urge upon the Venezuelan Government a claim on Mr. Philip's behalf for the full amount of 400*l.* mentioned by him, or for any, and, if so, what less sum.

That Sir T. Villiers Lister was to add that your Lordship would be glad to receive any further observations which we might have to offer upon the case generally.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion—

1. Her Majesty's Government are justified in holding the present Government of Venezuela responsible, under the circumstances, for the acts of the previous Government of the Republic.

2. That Her Majesty's Government may properly urge upon the Venezuelan Government a claim on Mr. Philip's behalf for the full sum of 400*l.*

My Lord,

Effect of adhesion of Zanzibar to Free Zone system on import duties of British East Africa Co. L. O. R. 1892 (Conf. 6347), p. 106.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the position of the Imperial British East Africa Company in respect of import duties in view of the Sultan's declaration of adhesion to the "Free Zone system" of the Act of Berlin.

That the Company had now replied to the communication from the Foreign Office of the 8th December, 1892, in the terms of which our concurrence was intimated in our Report of the 2nd December last. That it would be seen that besides traversing the arguments and conclusions therein set forth, the Company further contended that the Brussels Act was never intended to create new powers of levying duties in substitution for existing rights to do so (but that the powers conferred by the Declaration were solely intended to provide new resources to meet the obligations imposed by the Brussels Act); that the Sultan's mainland possessions conceded to the Company were not within the Free Zone system, inasmuch as the Company had never acquiesced in the arrangement by which it was held that they were so placed, and that the draft Ordinance upon which Her Majesty's Government relied as evidence of their concurrence applied only to those frontiers of the territories under the Company's administration which were outside the Sultan's dominions.

That they, therefore, desired to reopen the whole issue on that point.

That your Lordship saw no reason to alter the views which had been already expressed to the Company with our concurrence.

That you were not disposed to admit the correctness of the limited scope which it was now sought to give to the draft Ordinance; and that you considered that the new contention, that the Sultan's acceptance of the invitation of the Powers was incomplete without the acquiescence of the Company, was untenable.

That a draft of the reply which your Lordship proposed to address to the Company in that sense was inclosed, and that Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take it together with the other papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether its terms suitably met the circumstances of the case, or, if not, in what respects they could be advantageously modified or altered. That Sir Philip Currie was to add that your Lordship would be glad, at the same time, to be favoured with any general observations which we might have to offer on the questions involved.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the draft despatch initialled by us is in accordance with the Reports which we have already given in this matter; and that the terms of the draft are in all respects suitable to meet the circumstances of the case.

Draft of Letter to Imperial British East Africa Company.

Foreign Office, February , 1893.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Earl of Rosebery to inform you, in reply to your letter of the 16th December last, that my letters of the 1st November and the 8th December, to which you take exception, were written after consultation, in each case, with the Law Officers of the Crown, and that, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, they correctly define the position of the Company in regard to the Sultan's declaration of adhesion to the Free Zone system of the Act of Berlin.

The question of the previous knowledge of that declaration by the Company was discussed only in reference to the suggestion that a claim for compensation might be founded upon the allegation of ignorance. Her Majesty's Government do not find in your recent letter any reason for changing their opinion that the Directors were aware of the Sultan's intention. They do not admit the correctness of the limited scope which it is now proposed to give to the draft Ordinance; and they adhere to the view that the subsequent correspondence is conclusive on the point.

While conveying to you this intimation, I am to state that the fresh contention advanced in your letter of the 16th instant, that the Sultan's acceptance of the invitation of the Powers is incomplete without the acquiescence of the Company, is absolutely untenable. His Highness, in delegating to the Company the administration of a portion of his dominions, retained his sovereignty. In the exercise of his sovereign powers he adhered to the Berlin Act, and subsequently completed his acceptance of its provisions by placing his dominions within the Free Zone. The Company, which has no voice in his Council, is bound, to the same extent as officers administering other portions of his dominions, to accept the Ruler's action, and to administer in accordance with it.

Should it decline to do so, it would be questionable whether its Concession would not thereby be invalidated.

It would be advisable, therefore, for the Directors to reconsider the intimation given in the final paragraph of your letter, if it is correctly interpreted as meaning that they intend to treat the Zanzibar coast under their administration as not included in the Free Zone.

I am, &c.

Seizure by H. M. S. "Philomel" of dhow flying Zanzibar flag. Is it a "foreign flag"?

My Lord,

WE were honoured by your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 22nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin,* relative to a question recently raised before the International Slave Trade Bureau in Zanzibar in connection with the seizure by Her Majesty's ship "Philomel" of a dhow flying Zanzibar colours as to the interpretation of the term "foreign flag" in Article XLVII of the Brussels Act.

That the Article provided that "the Commander of a man-of-war who may have detained a vessel under a 'foreign flag' shall in all cases make a report to his own Government, and state the grounds upon which he acted."

That the question arose whether, in view of the Protectorate declared by Her Majesty over Zanzibar, the Zanzibar flag was, as far as the cruizers of the Protecting Power were concerned, to be considered a "foreign flag" within the meaning of the Act.

That Zanzibar was a British Protectorate, and that the fact had been duly notified to the Powers parties to the Act of Berlin.

That the Sultan's relations with foreign Powers were conducted through the channel of Her Majesty's Government, and that His Highness was represented in the International Bureau by the British Agent and Consul-General.

That, as a matter of practical convenience, it was desirable to hold that the national flag of a British Protectorate was not, quâ the cruizer of Great Britain, a "foreign flag" within the meaning of the Brussels Act; and that your Lordship as then advised was disposed to think that such a contention might in the present case be fairly maintained.

That, before transmitting the necessary instructions on that point to Her Majesty's Acting Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar, your Lordship was desirous of being favoured with our opinion thereon, and that Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our view upon the particular question submitted in his letter, and also with any general observations which we might have to offer upon the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to

Report—

That we are of opinion that the Zanzibar flag is not a foreign flag within the meaning of the Brussels Act. The provisions with reference to foreign flags contained in the Act are, in our opinion, inserted for the protection of the rights of nationals flying the flags of their respective Governments, and with the view of affording opportunities for diplomatic intervention when thought expedient, and do not apply to the case of Zanzibar, where the British Protectorate is established.

We have, &c.

Trade-marks (Zanzibar) O. in C.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 15th instant, respecting an Order in Council which it was proposed to issue relative to trade-marks, &c., at Zanzibar, and stating—

That Sir Gerald Portal had suggested on the 10th September last that "The Zanzibar Order in Council, 1884," should be amended by the addition of provisions respecting patents, designs, trade-marks, merchandize-marks, and copyright, and that your Lordship had concurred in Sir Gerald Portal's suggestion; and that Mr. Albert Gray had been instructed to prepare an Order in Council accordingly.

That on the 24th October, 1892, Mr. Gray had submitted a draft Order in Council. That the draft Order was sent to Zanzibar for the opinion of Her Majesty's Representative, and that Mr. Rodd's observations were contained in his despatch No. 1, Treaty, of the 21st January, 1893. That this despatch was referred to Mr. Gray, who had made certain amendments in the draft Order in accordance with the suggestions contained in Mr. Rodd's despatch, and had at the same time prepared an explanatory Memorandum on the subject.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request us to inform your Lordship whether in our opinion the draft Order in Council, as amended by Mr. Gray, might be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval, and that we would at the same time favour your Lordship with any general observations which we might wish to offer in the matter.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordships commands, have the honour to

Report—

That we are of opinion that the draft Order in Council, as amended by Mr. Gray, and initialled by us, may be laid before the Queen in Council in its present shape for Her Majesty's approval.

We have considered and concur in the observations made in the explanatory Memorandum also initialled by us.

We have, &c.

Draft Order in Council respecting Trade-Marks, &c.

WHEREAS by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, Her Majesty the Queen has jurisdiction within the dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise in Her Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of Her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. Any act which if done in British India would be an offence against the law for the time being in force in British India relating to trade-marks, merchandize-marks, copyright, designs, or inventions, shall, if done in Zanzibar by a person subject to the Orders in Council relating to Zanzibar, be an offence, whether such act is done in relation to any property or right of a British subject, or of a foreigner, or native, or otherwise; and any person guilty of such offence shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two months, or with a fine which may extend to 1,000 rupees, or with both.

2. Any Act of the Governor-General of India in Council, or of the Governor of Bombay in Council, amending or substituted for any of the Acts of those Legislatures respectively which are made applicable to Zanzibar by or under the provisions of Article 8 of "The Zanzibar Order in Council, 1884," or shall hereafter be made so applicable, shall apply to Zanzibar without any order of the Secretary of State in that behalf, subject, however, to the provisions made in that Article for facilitating the application of enactments.

3. ~~2.~~ This Order shall be read and construed as part of "The Zanzibar Order in Council, 1884;" and the commencement of this Order, and applies to Zanzibar by virtue of this Order, shall not take effect until the expiration of one month after such Act has been exhibited in like manner.

~~3.~~ ~~This Order~~ may be cited as "The Zanzibar (Trade-marks, &c.) Order in Council, 1893."

(b.) The Consul-General shall cause a copy of this Order and of every such Act to be exhibited, and for the said period kept exhibited, in the public office of the Consulate accordingly.

Memorandum on Draft Order in Council.

1. The draft proposes to give the same jurisdiction in respect of these matters as has been given to other Consular Courts under the Orders cited by Sir G. Portal. It does not, however, provide for that which he describes at the outset of his despatch as being desirable—a system of registration of trade-marks at Zanzibar. The Orders to which he refers merely render punishable offences against the Imperial Acts and Orders in Council named or described, and I am not aware of any case in which provision has been made for registration of trade-marks in a Consulate.

2. The Zanzibar Order differs from other jurisdictional Orders in this respect, that the foundation of its law and procedure is that of India, the law of England being applied only where that of India is deficient or inapplicable (Article 8). Besides the specified Indian Acts, others may be applied by order of the Secretary of State. The intention apparently was that the law of India for the time being was to apply.

As respects merchandize-marks, the Indian Legislature has passed an Act (No. IV of 1889, amended by No. IX of 1891), in which the English Act of 1887 is adapted to Indian law and practice, and which is in some respects more stringent than the original. It, moreover, repeals the trade-mark sections of Chapter XVIII of the Penal Code, and substitutes other provisions. If the English Act of 1887 is now applied to Zanzibar, there may be some uncertainty in particular cases, whether the Indian law or the English applies.

I may add that under the English Act protection is given only to registered trade-marks, whereas under that of India registration is not a condition precedent; indeed, so far as I am aware, there is no registration of trade-marks in India. If, therefore, the Indian Act were to be applied to Zanzibar, the want of a registry to which Sir G. Portal refers would be little if at all felt.

The extension to Zanzibar of the Indian law on copyright, patents, &c., requires an Order in Council, because some of it is Imperial Statute Law extending to India, and the application of Imperial Acts by order of the Secretary of State is not authorized by Article 8 of the Order.

A new Order being required, I am inclined to think, on further consideration, that it will be best to include trade- and merchandize-marks, although the Indian law on this head might be applied by the Secretary of State. The wording of Article 8 is inconvenient, preventing (except in the case of bankruptcy law) the automatic operation of subsequent legislation. If the existing Indian Merchandize Marks Acts are applied by the Secretary of State, further applications would be necessary on each occasion of those Acts being amended. It is further advisable to deal with all these cognate subjects in one enactment.

Mr. A. Wilson, the Legal Adviser to the India Office, who was kind enough to attend a conference at the Foreign Office on the subject of this Order, is of opinion that the Indian law will give ample protection, whether the rights infringed have been acquired in India or in the United Kingdom.

This opportunity may, I would suggest, be taken to inquire whether the authorities at Zanzibar have experienced any inconvenience arising from the restrictions of Article 8 of the Order of 1884, and whether the application to Zanzibar of any Indian Acts passed after the commencement of the Order is desirable, with special reference to any Acts amending those specified in the Article.

(Signed) A. GRAY.

December 12, 1892.

The Agent-General and Mr. Cracknall having concurred in the suggestions made in the last paragraph of the above Memorandum, I have now, as instructed, added an Article providing that Indian Acts, amending or substituted for those already or hereafter applied, shall also apply to Zanzibar without any special order of the Secretary of State, subject, however, to the power of modification conferred by the Order of 1884.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received May 1.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, April 29, 1893.

Establishment of a Bank at Zanzibar.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers, noted in the margin,* relative to the establishment of a Bank at Zanzibar.

Agreement between Sultan and British East Africa Company of March 5, 1891.

That it would be seen from Sir C. Euan-Smith's despatch No. 75 of the 5th March, 1891, that the late Sultan of Zanzibar concluded an Agreement with the Imperial British East Africa Company on that day, by which the latter were authorized to establish a Bank at Zanzibar.

That by the terms of the Agreement, the Bank was to receive all the lawful support and assistance in the Sultan's power, and was to be viewed as the State Bank of the Zanzibar Sultanate.

That the Bank was granted the exclusive privilege and monopoly, for a term of fifty years from the date of the Agreement, of the right of issuing bank-notes of all denominations in Zanzibar and Pemba, and that the Agreement ran that "no other person or Corporation has been or will be granted this privilege."

That in consideration of that Concession, and of the further additional Concession in section 4, which, however, had not yet come into operation, the Imperial British East Africa Company undertook to pay the Sultan a sum up to and not exceeding 1,000*l.* per annum, to be taken from the net profits of the Zanzibar or Pemba branches of the Bank, and that they, or their nominees, were given the option of commuting the payment of the said 1,000*l.* at any time for the payment of 10,000*l.* down.

That in his communications, which were inclosed for our consideration, Mr. Rodd, Her Majesty's Acting Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar, urged that such Agreement should be rescinded in the interests of the Government of Zanzibar.

That he argued (a), that the Company did not now wish to establish the Bank themselves, and that they had no right to dispose of it to third parties; and (b), that unless they did so establish it they should be called upon to withdraw from the Agreement, as forfeited by disuse.

That with regard to (a), your Lordship considered that there was force in Mr. Rodd's argument, that the Concessions were granted to the Company in view of the special position in which they stood at the time of the Sultan's Government, and that they should therefore be looked upon as personal and inalienable.

That the point, however, was one of great doubt, and that the difficulty appeared to be rather increased by the use of the word "nominees" in section 6 of the Agreement, which provides that the "Imperial British East Africa Company or their nominees shall have the option of commuting the payment" of the annual sum payable in consideration of the Concessions.

That it was possible that the Company might base on those words a claim to the right to alienate the Concessions to third parties, nominated by themselves, and that your Lordship was uncertain how far they would be legally justified in doing so.

That as to the second point (b), it appeared to your Lordship, that as there was no clause in the Agreement specifying any time within which the Bank should be established, and that as no notice had been given to the Company that they were unduly delaying the exercise of the privileges granted them, they could not be called upon to relinquish the Concession on the ground of non user.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion: (1) as to whether the Concession for the establishment of a Bank could be alienated by the Company; and (2) as to whether it had been forfeited by disuse, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

(1.) That in our opinion the Concession of the 5th March, 1891, did not contemplate the carrying on of a Bank by the Imperial British East Africa Company, but the establishment of a Banking Company or Corporation by which the privileges granted by the Concession are to be enjoyed.

Sections 1, 2, and 3 plainly show this, and, although section 4 is not quite so clear in its terms, we are of opinion that the word "nominees" in that section also refers to the Bank to which—by the same section—the Contract there referred to is to be transferred. The mention of "shareholders of the Bank" in section 5, and of "nominees" in section 6, point to the same conclusion.

* Mr. Rodd, No. 85; Mr. Rodd to Sir P. Anderson, March 4, 1893; Sir C. Euan-Smith, No. 75, March 5, 1891.

1893

We are, therefore, of opinion that, according to the terms of the Concession, the Company have the right to bring into existence as their "nominees" any Banking Company or Corporation, on such reasonable terms (not inconsistent with the Concession) as they may be able to make, and that properly speaking no question of alienation of the Concession arises.

We are of opinion, however, that from the nature of the case the Zanzibar Government has a right to require that the terms upon which the permission to establish the Bank is exercised are, in all respects, reasonable, and that in particular, having regard to section 5, no payment to the Company in respect of any profit reserved to themselves can be made to take precedence directly or indirectly, or to interfere in any way with the sum not exceeding 1,000*l.* a-year, stipulated for by that section. The result will be that any profit reserved to the Company must be taken subject to the 1,000*l.* a-year, and must then be of such moderate amount only as will not interfere with the commercial prospects of the Bank.

(2.) We are of opinion that no ground for forfeiture has arisen from the delay down to the present time, but that the Zanzibar Government have a right to require the Bank to be established on terms reasonably satisfactory, and within a reasonable time.

Notice to this effect should at once be given to the Company, and it should, at the same time, be pointed out, that unless the notice is complied with the Concession will be withdrawn, as, in our opinion, it may be in that event.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received May 9.)

Royal Courts of Justice, May 8, 1893.

My Lord,

Powers of judicial officers of Brit. East Africa Co.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin,* relative to a question raised by Her Majesty's Acting Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar, in regard to the powers of the judicial officers of the Imperial British East Africa Company, and set forth in Mr. Rodd's despatch No. 49.

That an application having been made to Mr. Cracknall, Her Majesty's Consul and Judicial Assistant at Zanzibar (who was also authorized to pay quarterly visits in his judicial capacity to the mainland territories of the Sultan under the administration of the Imperial British East Africa Company), to try a case in which a Zanzibar subject was to be indicted for causing the death of another Zanzibar subject, the question had arisen whether any jurisdiction vested in the officers of the Company to try cases in which Zanzibar subjects alone were concerned, in the parts of the territories above referred to, which did not come within the category of "aboriginal tracts."

That the question thus raised turned upon the construction to be placed upon Article II of the Sultan's Concession to the Company of 1888, from which their powers of jurisdiction were derived.

That the latter part of that Article prescribed that "The Judges shall be appointed by the Company or their representatives, and the Sultan shall confirm all such appointments, but all 'Kathis' shall be nominated by His Highness.

"That in aboriginal tracts the law shall be administered by the Company or their officials."

That in view of the seeming antithesis between those two clauses, your Lordship was disposed to think that a Zanzibari who committed a crime against another Zanzibari, was in such parts of the Company's territories as were not "aboriginal tracts," justiciable by the Sultan's "Kathis" alone, and not by the Company's judicial officers.

That Sir Philip Currie was, however, to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the question thus raised, as well as with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

---

* Mr. Rodd's No. 49 and Article 2 of Imperial British East Africa Company's Concession.

We were also honoured with copies of Sir John Kirk's letters* of the 15th February and 21st April last respecting the powers and duties of the "Kathis."

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That having regard to Sir John Kirk's statements (contained in his letters of the 15th February and 21st April, 1893) as to the position of the "Kathis" at the time of the Concessions to the Company, we are of opinion that not only in aboriginal tracts (where probably there are no "Kathis"), but also in the districts where "Kathis" are appointed, native Zanzibaris and all others committing crimes are justiciable in the Courts of the Company's judicial officers.

The "Kathis" appointed by the Sultan will have such jurisdiction as they were allowed to exercise before the Concessions, and no other.

My Lord,

Search of French dhows in Zanzibar waters.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the claim of Great Britain to the right of searching vessels under the French flag in the territorial waters of Zanzibar.

That the general question of the position of Powers exercising Protectorates in Africa was dealt with by our predecessors in their Reports of the 17th and 30th April, 1891, and 30th June, 1892, and that the point now at issue was gone into carefully in the draft to M. Waddington of the 13th June, 1891. That the contention now put forward by the French Government would be seen from the papers marked (M) and (O), and that the instructions which had been given to Her Majesty's naval officers would be found at p. v of Preface, and pp. 2 and 3 and 243 to 254 of the Volume of Slave Trade Instructions, drawn up by the Commission which sat in 1892 under the presidency of the late Sir Charles Butt.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the terms of the proposed draft to the Marquis of Dufferin were right and proper, and, if not, in what way they should be amended, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the terms of the proposed draft† to the Marquis of Dufferin, as initialled by us, are right and proper.

My Lord,

Consols in name of Sultan of Zanzibar.

WITH reference to our opinion of the 19th September last,* to your Lordship's Memorandum, and to Mr. Davidson's note on the subject of the 200,000*l*. Consols standing in the name of the late Sultan of Zanzibar, we have the honour to

Report—

That we have further considered the matter, and, failing the indemnity we previously suggested, we think the following plan may be followed:—

We do not gather that the late Sultan left any will, in which case legal representation to him can only be effected by letters of administration. For this purpose affidavits should be obtained, properly authenticated, establishing the fact that the present Sultan is the heir, and of the next of kin of the late Sultan, and negativing the existence of any will.

The Sultan should further, by formal power of attorney, duly authenticated, appoint some person of, say, official position in this country to apply for letters of administration. We understand that the suggested objection to this course is its publicity. As to this, the Attorney-General has fully inquired from a Registrar of the Probate Division, who informed him that no publicity whatever will be given to the proceedings up to the point of the grant of the letters. After the grant is completed it is recorded in the Official Register, and then only can those who claim to inspect the Register become aware of the fact of the grant. It seems to us that at this stage no mischief can arise from publicity; we therefore suggest that the above course be followed.

REPORTS BY THE LAW OFFICERS OF THE CROWN, &c.: 1894.

AFRICA.

No. 1.

[Colonial Office.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquess of Ripon.

Royal Courts of Justice, April 18, 1894.

My Lord,

Extradition between British South Africa Company's territory and adjacent States.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bramston's letter of the 7th February last, stating that he was directed to thank us for our Report of the 21st November, 1893, on the subject of the wish of the British South Africa Company that extradition arrangements with the Orange Free State, the South African Republic, and the adjacent Portuguese possessions might be made with respect to the territory within the Company's field of operations.

That that territory was under the protection of Her Majesty, though not part of Her Majesty's dominions, and was within the zone defined by the VIIIth Article of the General Act of the Brussels Conference, dated the 2nd July, 1890.

That your Lordship trusted you were right in considering the effect of our Report to be as follows, viz.:—

That the right of extradition was the prerogative of the Sovereign of the country, that was to say, of Lobengula, and that Her Majesty, in taking under her protection Lobengula and his country, did not thereby acquire the right of extradition in respect of foreigners; that it was not open to Her Majesty to assume that right by Order in Council under "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or to confer it upon the High Commissioner; nor, without an assumption of territorial sovereignty, to give facilities to foreign police for the arrest of foreigners within the Protectorate; but that Her Majesty, who possessed certain jurisdiction within the Protectorate, might with the consent of a third Power lawfully extradite the subjects of that Power without reference to Lobengula.

That your Lordship regretted to be obliged to trouble us again on the subject, but that there were two questions which did not appear to have been sufficiently brought out in the reference on which our Report was asked, namely:—

Whether Lobengula had not, in fact, already conceded to Her Majesty, or by sufferance recognized the acquisition by Her Majesty of the right of extraditing foreigners, and whether the Powers who were Signatories of the General Acts of the Berlin and Brussels Conferences had not consented to the exercise of that right by Her Majesty.

That in connection with that point Mr. Bramston was specially to invite our attention to the Report of our predecessors in office, dated 17th April, 1891, and to the Memorandum which was thereto annexed.

That the case of Cyprus appeared to be analogous in its circumstances to the present case, and that Mr. Bramston was briefly to recall them.

That on the 4th June, 1878, Turkey by Convention assigned to Great Britain the Island of Cyprus "to be occupied and administered by England."

1894

That an Annex to that Convention, but not relating to the present question, was signed on the 1st July, 1878.

That by a further Convention, dated the 14th August, 1878, it was declared that the Sultan had transferred to Her Majesty for the term of the occupation full powers for making laws and Conventions for the government of the island in Her Majesty's name. That Her Majesty's authority in the island was recognized by foreign Powers.

That a subsequent Convention was made on the 22nd February, 1879, but that it did not bear on the present question.

That in exercise of the powers thus conferred, Her Majesty, under the advice of the Law Officers, made an Order in Council, dated the 15th July, 1881, regulating extradition in Cyprus. That a copy of that Order and of two Reports of the Law Officers, dated the 3rd and 20th May, 1881, were inclosed for reference. That it was suggested that the deduction to be drawn from those transactions was that the prerogative right of extradition was assignable by its possessor.

That the Charter to the British South Africa Company was dated the 29th October, 1889, and that an Order in Council delegating to the High Commissioner all powers and jurisdiction which Her Majesty at any time before or after the date of the Order had, or might have, within the limits of the Order (comprising, inter alia, the Company's field of operations), was, as we were aware, passed on the 9th May, 1891, and that, under that Order, Courts have been established and jurisdiction exercised without question by Lobengula.

That shortly after the making of that Order in Council, it was considered necessary for the peace of the country to prevent two persons, named Renny Tailyour and Hassförther (the latter a German subject), from returning to Buluwayo, Lobengula's chief place.

That Renny Tailyour was arrested at Tati, a place then nominally within Lobengula's territory, and within the limits of the Order; that Hassförther evaded arrest by escaping into the Transvaal; that Lobengula was much incensed at the occurrence, and that on the 18th August, 1891, the High Commissioner sent the following telegram to be delivered to Lobengula:—

"My Friend,

"I understand that you have spoken harsh words to Mr. Moffat, the Queen's Representative, and that you have charged him with being the cause of the arrest of Mr. Renny Tailyour and M. Hassförther. I send this message to inform you that they have been arrested by my orders, because I have reason to know that they desire to make mischief between you and the Great Queen. This I cannot permit. I believe that you desire to live in friendship with the Great Queen and with her people. I am responsible for the good behaviour of all white people within your territory, and to punish the evil-doers. I trust, therefore, that you will take back Mr. Moffat into your confidence. He will convey to me truly any message you may desire to send to me with respect to Mr. Renny Tailyour and M. Hassförther, or any other white men whom you may desire to visit you, and it will be my desire to meet your wishes if to do so will not endanger the peace of the country, or be injurious to your interests."

That the message was not delivered immediately, but that on the 31st August the High Commissioner telegraphed to Mr. Moffat at Buluwayo:—

"You must exercise your discretion as to delivering my message to Lobengula, but viewing the question in all its bearings from here, I am of opinion it should be delivered, so that Lobengula should realize that I exercise authority over all white men in the country."

That, in reply, Mr. Moffat telegraphed:—

"Buluwayo, September 11.—I read the Chief your message of the 31st (should have been the 18th) ultimo. He was quite willing to admit your right to deal with Europeans even up here."

That, although there had been differences with Lobengula on other matters, which had unfortunately ended in hostilities, there had been no dispute of any kind as to the exercise of jurisdiction over white men.

That it was important that the British authorities should have the power of extradition over foreigners within the territory in question, and thus prevent the territory from becoming an asylum for criminals from the foreign countries adjacent; and that if we should be of opinion that, under the circumstances detailed above, Her Majesty had not acquired that power from Lobengula either by grant or sufferance, care would be taken to secure it in the future settlement of the country, which must soon be made in consequence of the recent hostilities.

That your Lordship apprehended that if the power of extradition had been acquired from Lobengula, it should only be exercised over foreigners with the assent, express or implied, of their respective Sovereigns, and that, on that point, Mr. Wingfield was to invite our attention to Articles I to V of the General Acts of the Brussels Conference, with a view to considering whether the assent of the Signatories of that Act had not been already given.

That Mr. Wingfield was to ask us to be good enough to favour your Lordship with our opinion:—

1. Whether Her Majesty had acquired from Lobengula, by grant or sufferance, the power of extradition in proper cases, in respect of foreigners accused of committing crimes in foreign countries?

2. Whether such power, if acquired, could properly be exercised without the assent, express or implied, of the respective Sovereigns of such foreigners?

3. If not, whether such assent had been sufficiently given by the General Acts of the Berlin and Brussels Conferences so far as relates to the subjects of the Powers who were Signatories of those Acts?

4. Whether it was competent to the High Commissioner, by virtue of his Commission, to enter into extradition arrangements with the South African Republic, Orange Free State, and the authorities of the Portuguese possessions in South Africa?

5. Whether, if such arrangements were made, legislative sanction could be provided by proclamation of the High Commissioner under the Order in Council of the 9th May, 1891, or, if not, whether an Order in Council under "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," would suffice as in the case of Cyprus?

Mr. Wingfield also inclosed, as having a bearing on the exercise of jurisdiction over foreigners in an European Protectorate, the papers mentioned in the accompanying list relating to the case of a British subject, a native of Mauritius, charged with having committed murder in the territory of the Sultan of Johanna (which was under the protection of France), who had been removed to the French Colony of Réunion, and brought to trial there, in which the "Cour de Cassation" at Paris had upheld the jurisdiction of the Réunion Court, and the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs had informed Her Majesty's Consul at Réunion that Her Majesty's Government saw no objection to the exercise of criminal jurisdiction in the case by the Court of Réunion.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

1. That the answer to the first question depends entirely upon matters of fact, but the evidence before us does not in our opinion show that Her Majesty acquired from Lobengula such powers of extradition of foreigners as would form the basis of an effective system of extradition, or dispense with the necessity of securing sufficient powers on the resettlement of the country. The correspondence referred to is, for instance, limited to white people or Europeans, and does not directly refer to the coloured subjects of foreign States, who, nevertheless, would have to be dealt with in any effective scheme.

2. That as a matter of strict law, we see no reason why powers of extradition lawfully granted by the territorial Sovereign should not be exercised without the assent, express or implied, of the respective Sovereigns of foreigners to whom the powers are applied, but we do not differ from our predecessors, who have advised that any jurisdiction over foreigners in a protected State should, as matter of prudence, in general only be exercised with such consent. In the case of Cyprus, no such consent seems to have been given, but the devolution of powers from the Sultan was unusually comprehensive.

3. That such assent has been given partially only by the General Acts of the Berlin and Brussels Conferences, so far as relates to the subjects of Powers who were Signatories. The provisions of Article V of the Act of the Brussels Conference point directly to extradition, but are not sufficiently comprehensive to afford a basis for an effective system, being mainly confined to cases connected with the suppression of the Slave Trade, the immediate subject of the clauses.

4. That it is competent to the High Commissioner, by virtue of his commission, to enter into extradition arrangements with the South African Republic, Orange Free State, and the authorities of the Portuguese possessions in South Africa.

5. If such arrangements are made, legislative sanction can be provided by Proclamation. The Order in Council of the 9th May, 1891, has, it seems to us, already committed to the High Commissioner the exercise on behalf of Her Majesty of all her jurisdiction, including that under "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890." The powers of the High Commissioner are to be exercised in conformity with instructions through a Secretary of State, and any acts of his are subject to disallowance, so that no difficulty is likely to arise from any excessive or undue exercise of the powers.

We have, &c.

No. 2.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Kimberley.—(Received May 23.)

My Lord,

Royal Courts of Justice, May 21, 1894.

Death sentence passed on A. J. Coker by Supreme Court of Niger Territories.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir H. Percy Anderson's letter of the 15th March last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to a sentence of death passed upon A. J. Coker, a native of Sierra Leone, by the Supreme Court of the Niger Territories, sitting at Asaba, on the 5th December, 1893.

That, in considering the case, it was necessary to observe that the territories of the Royal Niger Company had never been constituted a "local jurisdiction" under "The Africa Order in Council, 1889," although power was reserved for that purpose by Article 7 of the Order.

That justice was, at present, administered within them by delegation from the native Chiefs to the Company, and in accordance with the provisions of the Company's Charter.

That Article 9 of that Charter gave the Secretary of State power to exercise control over the proceedings of the Company in various matters, which included the administration of justice.

That in order to regularize their position, and establish an Administration in harmony with European ideas, the Company had issued a series of Regulations which had been communicated to the Secretary State.

That Regulation No. X of 1886 laid down that no sentence of death on a foreigner should be carried out until confirmation thereof had been received from the Company.

That there was, however, no provision for appeal to the Secretary of State beyond the general stipulation in Article 9 already referred to.

That in the present instance, therefore, there was no reason why the case should ever have been brought to the notice of the Secretary of State by the Niger Company. But that the prisoner appealed to him, and that his appeal was forwarded by the Company.

That it therefore became necessary for your Lordship to inquire into the matter; and that you had applied to the Company for the Report of the Supreme Court's proceedings. That it appeared therefrom that the prisoner was charged on two counts. That the first count was that he murdered the deceased, one Brass, a native of the Niger Company's Territories, in the employ of the Company, by administering a certain poison known as "sasswood;" that the second count was that he aided and abetted others to commit the said murder.

That the details of the case would be found in the copy of the proceedings of the Court, and in the Report of the Judges who tried the case.

That the Governor and Council of the Niger Company, having taken the case into their consideration, approved the finding of the Court, but in view of the remarks with which the Judgment was accompanied, commuted the death sentence to one of penal servitude for life.

That it appeared to your Lordship that the case was one of an unprecedented nature, and of a character which might not improperly excite considerable discussion and criticism if brought before Parliament; and that as the circumstances had been brought to the notice of the Secretary of State by the Petition of the British subject affected, a certain degree of responsibility might not unfairly be held to attach to Her Majesty's Government in regard to the matter.
